Though the interview was given primarily to justify the raise in prices at the Alhambra theatre and was a neat bit of press work on Mr. Saxe's part, nevertheless he meant everything that he said, as he had made the same statement some time previously in a private conversation.

"I am more firmly convinced than ever that the motion picture industry is still in its infancy and its possibilities are just beginning to be realized," said Mr. Saxe. "I am convinced that the photoplay of the near future will be the picture for which the public will pay a dollar without the slightest question.

"Motion picture patrons have been quick to appreciate the better class of pictures which have been shown from time to time at the popular-priced houses and are not willing to accept anything that falls below these standards.

"They demand to see the biggest stars of both the motion picture world and the 'legitimate' stage on the screen. They want big productions lavishly staged and they demand that every detail shall be accurate. The day has gone by when the stage director wrote his own scenario, and when a melodrama of the West filled with cowboys, Indians and bucking broncos satisfied the public's demand for realism."

On the heels of Mr. Saxe's prediction of the dollar photoplay outside of New York City came the announcement from the school board that the first of photoplays shows at the social centers would be presented that evening and that the admission price would be four cents. These municipal motion pictures are shown under the direction of the social center division of the public schools and are presented in the school houses. They are very well attended, practically the whole neighborhood turning out for the show, the one cent admission fee proving very attractive.

The local school board is going into the motion picture field very extensively, kids having been asked for three Simplex projectors and complete outfits for use in the schools. The school authorities are meeting with no opposition from the local exhibitors; in fact, the exhibitor rather welcomes this step on the part of the school directors.

Inquiry among the exchange men and exhibitors failed to reveal any antagonism to the one cent pictures. Manager Harry Graham of the Butterfly theatre, voiced the prevailing sentiment when he said of the new educational movement:

"I don't believe that the school board will find any of the exhibitors opposed to the penny films in the schools. As far as being opposed to the theatres, I really believe that they help business, as the schools reach many people who never attend the theatres at present, and they are simply turning out a new crop of film fans. It's certain that no patron will ever be contented with the shows they are putting on, as most of the subjects are old and principally educational and scenic.

"Said one of the local exchange men regarding the penny pictures on the schools of Milwaukee:

"Exhibitors need never fear competition from this source as long as the film exchanges control the supply of film. We will always protect our exhibitors and you may rest assured that no real competition will arise from the schools."

"Motion Picture News,"

Gentlemen—I have received your sample copies of "Motion Picture News" for which I thank you. I don't see how I got along without it in the past, as I find it one of the best trade journals for the exhibitor.

I am enclosing herewith a check for $2 to cover a year's subscription in advance.

Yours very truly,
E. C. BOSTICK,
Manager, Bostick Amusement Co.

CRIMMINS IN STRONG KINETOPHOTE RELEASE

Another actor has about deserted the stage for the film drama in the person of William Crimmins, who is featured as "The Vulture" in the Kinetophone's coming release "The Coming Power." a political story filled with the thrills of a strenuous campaign. "The Coming Power" is Mr. Crimmins' second venture into the feature field in a principal role. Previously he did the heavy comedy lead in "Maria Roma."

On the stage Mr. Crimmins has had a brilliant career. He has been a Belasco player and has played many parts in support of Amelia Bingham, Percy Haswell, George Fawcett, James K. Hackett and others. He was with Edna Goodrich in "Evangelie," and prior to that played with George Belan. Later he had parts in "We Are Seven" and "At Bay."

"LORD FAUNTLEROY" TAKES PLACE OF "MR. PIPP"

"Little Lord Fauntleroy" has been decided upon as the Alco release of November 16. "The Education of Mr. Pipp" which was announced for that date has been postponed until further notice.

DETOUR EXCHANGE MEN AS THEATRE OWNERS

George Weeks, manager of the Detroit Universal Film Company, has purchased the Royal Oak Theatre at Royal Oak, Mich., and will make a number of changes that will tend to improve the appearance of that playhouse.

Mr. Weeks now controls the Kercheval Theatre, the Plaza at 2601 Jefferson avenue, the Forest Theatre on Woodward avenue, and the Royal Oak, giving him a total of four in Detroit and vicinity. From time to time he plans to increase the number and hopes before long to have a chain of at least a dozen theatres.

The Royal Oak is under the management of Charles Hayat, the Plaza under the management of John P. Church; the Kercheval, Grant Deats and the Forest, Rex Minkley. The Royal Oak seats 400; the Kercheval, 400; the Plaza, 800, and the Forest 700 people.

Charles Wesch, treasurer of the Detroit Universal Film Company, is building a theatre on Hamilton Boulevard, Detroit, to be known as the Virginia Park. It is practically completed and the contractors have promised to have it all finished and ready to open by November 25. According to Mr. Wesch, it will be "one of the prettiest playhouses in the city."

LEWIS WILL MANAGE NEW YORK K. C. EXCHANGE

Charles Lewis, who virtually has grown up in the film business, has been engaged to manage the New York exchange of the K. C. Booking Company, Incorporated. Mr. Lewis is well known in local film circles through his association with the Universal and with the Jungle Film Company, which exploited the Paul Rainey pictures.

The K. C. Booking Company, Incorporated, has taken over the bookings of "Borns Again," in which Beulah Panyot has been featured. This film will now be handled through the K. C. offices, its branches and affiliated exchanges throughout the country.

The picture will take the place of "The Little Jewess," a Kinotroph production, in the November releases. "The Little Jewess" will be set forward to the December list of Kinotroph releases. Theatres which have booked it for November will have the picture on dates in the following month.

Schmidt Entertains Exchange Men at Palo Alto

Monday, October 26, twenty-one, San Francisco film exchange men journeyed to Palo Alto, where they were the guests of H. C. Schmidt, and attended the opening of his new theatre, The Marquee, a $20,000 house with a seating capacity of approximately 500.

The opening bill was "Vendetta," a Kleine production, shown for three nights at a general admission price of twenty-five cents. This was followed by "The Spoilers" for four nights at thirty-five and fifty cents.

Following the opening performances at the new theatre, a banquet was held by Mr. Schmidt to his guests, the exchange men, and a number of local people.

DAVIE WILL HANDLE ALCO FOR MICHIGAN

Charles M. Davie has tendered his resignation as general manager of the Wolverine Feature Film Company, Campus building, Detroit, and about the middle of this month will open an office in the same building as Michigan agent for the Alco feature films. He will have entire Michigan rights to all Alco productions.

Mr. Davie will continue as a member of the Wolverine company, and will aid in its management as much as he can.

"I believe the Alco is just as good as any feature concern doing business to-day, and inside of three months I hope to be booking in the neighborhood of from 50 to 75 theatres," he said. Mr. Davie has secured a franchise for five years covering Michigan. Among the first theatres to contract for Alco service was the New Empire on Woodward avenue, which will use a new feature every Monday.

DEMAND FOR FEATURES RISING SAYS EMMICK

According to E. H. Emmick, manager of the Alco and Golden Gate exchanges, Los Angeles, there is a greater demand for multiple reel features at the present time than ever before. The two exchanges are swamped with inquiries, and every day there are many exhibitors who personally call to make selections.

"This is the fourth year I have been in the film renting business in Los Angeles and the demand has gradually grown greater each year until now it is all we can take care of even with a force twice as large as we had at this time last year," Mr. Emmick said.

ROSENBERG LEAVES GOLDEN GATE

Mike Rosenberg, who has been manager of the All-Star Attractions department of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, in Los Angeles, for the past six months, left the latter part of this week for Minneapolis, having purchased States rights for "The Spoilers" for Minnesao, North and South Dakota and Montana.

The Golden Gate Film Exchanges have secured the rights for all future showing of "Cabitula" in the west coast states-California, Washington and Oregon. The picture was shown for the fourth week at the Trinity Auditorium, Los Angeles, to excellent business.

ALCO OPENS EXCHANGE IN KANSAS CITY

The Alco Film Service of Missouri, 317 Floyd Building, Kansas City, Missouri, under the management of William Sievers, is the eighteenth in the growing list of Alco exchanges. As with all the other exchanges, the Alco Film Service of Missouri have constantly available big features which Alco is putting out.

The Radium Gold Fibre Screen, the product of the Atsco branch of the releasing corporation, and all projection and theatre supplies will be available to the exhibitors of the territory served by this newest exchange.

CASINO AND DULUTH EXCHANGES CLASH IN COURT

Because of legal complications between the Zenith Feature Film Company, of Duluth, Minn., and the Casino Feature Film Company, of Detroit, a packed house at the Grand Theatre, Menominee, Mich., was disappointed on October 29, when the "Paid in Full" films were replayed under instructions from the Detroit company. The Casino Company claimed that the Duluth concern had no right to book the film in Michigan as they had the State rights.

ACME HEAD RETURNS TO DETROIT

Bosworth Stars a Talented Couple
Phillips Smalley and His Wife Bring Rare Qualifications to Their Work in the Productions of the Company

THE Smalleys, who recently associated themselves with Bosworth, Inc., have been turning out some remarkable films. One of these, "The Traitors," has been pronounced by many authorities to be the most talented single reel that has ever been filmed, and it bears the distinction of having been the only one-reel film that has ever been featured in electric signs at the Strand Theatre, New York.

Rarely, if ever, has it been given to one couple to combine the unusual talents and remarkable qualifications represented in Mr. and Mrs. Phillips Smalley (Lois Weber, author and director of the "Hypocrites"), who are now associated with Bosworth, Inc., as authors, artists and directors.

Mr. Smalley is the son of George W. Smalley, the noted war correspondent of the "New York Tribune," under Horace Greeley, who was later sent to London to represent the "Tribe." Phoebe Garnet, a great-grand-niece of Lafayette, adopted by Wendell Phillips, met her future husband, who during the period prior to the Civil War was body-guard-in-chief to the great abolitionist.

At the close of the war, Phillips Smalley, with his mother and father, went to Europe, and was later, with his father, locked up in the siege of Paris. Phillips Smalley, on returning to England, was sent to Balliol College, Oxford; while his mother established a salon that for notables of the past generation stands almost without a peer. This salon, now a matter of history, had for constant habitués such notables as Gladstone, Disraeli, Salisbury, Rosebery, Huxley, Tyndall, Browning, Whistler, Alma Tadema, Watts, du Maurier, Swinburne, Oscar Wilde, Sir Henry Irving, Ellen Terry, the Bancrofts, Beerbohm Tree, Mrs. Woods, and the whole interesting family of Robertson, known for their talent and culture.

Sir Henry Irving's dressing-room at the Lyceum Theatre was Mr. Smalley's "second home." For a period of at least 20 years he did not miss a single "first night" at the Lyceum. The scenery for Sir Henry's production "Coriolanus," designed by Tadema, was architecturally laid out by Mr. Smalley during the time that he was a student in water color under Tadema himself. As an artistic incident of Mr. Smalley's career he posed for George du Maurier, the artist and novelist, during a period covering fifteen years.

Mr. Smalley was an intimate friend of the present King when he was Prince George, and the two, together with Prince Herbert Bismarck, had many larks together as youths. His leanings from his earliest days were toward the stage, and he shared this with Lois Weber—herself a product of America—born and reared first in Pittsburgh. Miss Weber was a concert pianist at sixteen; joined the Church Army Workers in an earnest effort to help the poor of Pittsburgh. Then, possessed of a voice of more than usual brilliancy, she exchanged book and organ for orchestra and opera score.

It was while playing the leading role in "Why Girls Leave Home" that Miss Weber became engaged to the manager of the company, Phillips Smalley. She and Mr. Smalley have been congenial co-workers during the nine years of their married life; their present work with Bosworth, Inc., giving free scope to their remarkable versatility and ability, gives rise to the conviction that "The Smalleys" will in the near future turn out even more wonderful productions than the "Hypocrites," and similar releases, unapproachable as that production seems at the present time to be in all respects.

WAR CHARITY PERFORMANCES IN NEW YORK THEATRES

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York, comprising almost every motion picture theatre in the city, in conjunction with the War Children's Christmas Fund, of which Mrs. John Hays Hammond is national chairman, and Mary Garret Hay is secretary, will give special performances in the various theatres of New York to assist in the collection of gifts for the war-stricken children of Europe.

NEW FIRM LAUNCHES REPORT SERVICE

THE much talked-of company of Morrison and Poppe, whose operations have been kept secret for the past month, causing considerable curiosity throughout the trade, is now coming before the public in an announcement. Morros Picture News is the first to print the news and give the trade a complete description of their plan whereby exhibitors will be advised of the value of all feature films before they are released and fully posted to the characteristics and merits of each production before it is booked into the theatres.

The idea is one which has crept into the minds of many of the business' most wide-awake men, but one which has never before been put into practical use. The plan is to furnish reports on the quality of feature films to guide the exhibitors in booking.

Mr. Morrison, when seen at his office in the Times building, had this to say: "The idea came to me over and over again when I was engaged in booking regular service to exhibitors in Chicago and vicinity. Later, when I was running a feature exchange and seeing ten or more exhibitors daily, I took advantage of the opportunity of asking them what they thought of it, and it met with their universal approval.

"The plan is very simple. Mr. Poppe and I see all film releases; that is, the outside features and the features in the regular one-reel programs which are rented at an extra price, before they are released. Arrangements have been made with practically every manufacturer and importer to view these films at the offices of the latter. Reports are then written up and kept on file and are also mailed to exhibitors who subscribe to the service each week so that the subscriber will at all times be posted as to the merits and character of every feature on the market."

"The reports are not written in the form of a review. No attempt is made to please the eye or ear or the literary taste of any subscriber. They are written in as few words as possible and tell plainly whether a picture is good, passable or bad, and name the varying degrees of merit in which pictures are heir. A clear, concise statement is included with each report as to the class of audience the picture is best suited to.

"The reports are typewritten affairs, written personally by either Mr. Poppe or myself, and are made out on uniform size sheets, punched to fit a loose-leaf file which we furnish subscribers.

"Mr. Poppe, like myself, is thoroughly familiar with the game; in fact was reviewing pictures for one of the trade papers many years ago when the Patents Company and Independents were waging war on each other and features were unheard of. I've been in the theatrical business, in the theatre end, ever since he left the publication end, and is in close touch with the exhibitor in many parts of the country."

"Mr. Poppe had this to say: 'What Mr. Morrison has said thoroughly outlines our company's operation, but I might add that our plan is antagonistic to none of the existing members of the Motion Picture fraternity of interests.'"
CHARLES PATHE, who came to this country last spring and made important changes in the affairs of the American Pathe Company, is now here again—with this difference—that he will remain, according to his own statement, for a number of months or a year, or perhaps even longer.

At any rate, it is quite evident that Mr. Pathe has come to carry a successful issue the plan he had in mind last spring, namely, to put the American branch of Pathe Freres upon the same basis as the European house. This plan briefly means that his producing business will be conducted henceforth upon practically the very same basis as the book publishing business.

Said Mr. Pathe: "It is my desire to gather upon one here, in the same manner as I have done in Europe, a number of the most intelligent producers in America who will be stimulated to make the best pictures and earn the most money."

Studio Available for All

To every prospective purchaser whose ideas of production are acceptable to Mr. Pathe, will be offered all his company and excellent facilities of studio and factory production, and of film distribution. He will see all such applicants personally and lend his personal services to their work. He will also install all negatives that are offered to his company.

"My scheme," said Mr. Pathe, "is a simple one; it is as a matter of fact nothing more, nothing less than that which exists in regard to the stage and the publishing business, with this difference, that instead of giving the producer of film a disputable and uncertain percentage of the profits arising from his production, he will receive from us exactly 50 per cent. of the net profits from his film.

"The receipts from such productions in the way I offer will satisfy the reputation and the interests of the most ambitious film producer in the world."

In this connection, Mr. Pathe cites the profits made through this scheme by the celebrated comedian Max Linder. As an employee only with Pathe Freres, Mr. Linder earned about $8,000 a year. His earnings under the new scheme are ten times that amount, or $80,000 a year.

Topicals Will Form Programs

Mr. Pathe believes that the program in the near future will consist solely of features combined with such topical or news films as the Pathe News.

The complete program, in his estimation, is suitable for the small theatre at the present time, but in his estimation even the larger theatres will change eventually to features.

"Is it your intention to supply the exhibitor with a complete service?" Mr. Pathe was asked.

"I shall doubtless be able to do that," said Mr. Pathe, "and very shortly; that is to say, our productions will be sufficiently varied and of a sufficient number so that the exhibitor can make a selection from them for his program without relying upon any other source. However, it is not our desire to tie them down to an exclusive service. I am sturdily opposed to this idea."

Quality Not Quantity the Rule

"Furthermore, our emphatic policy will be the production of quality and not quantity. Producers who heretofore had made it a rule to produce a theme every week will soon learn that their idea is as false as the idea of the dramatic author who tries to produce a half a dozen plays for the theatre in a year.

"Three or four films in such a period properly studied, first from the point of the scenario and then carefully handled and executed, such is the policy that must be followed in the future by the producers who wish to earn money."

"At present," continued Mr. Pathe, "we are already producing twelve to fifteen reels a week. We shall of course extend the number of these, but our policy first and last is quality production. Our new scheme will enable us to broaden the gage—the variety of our productions."

"The European studios of Pathe Freres are still producing, but of course on a limited scale."

The English market, Mr. Pathe said, is as good as ever. Shipping facilities alone are at fault. Business is also normal in Russia, Spain, Italy and some sections of France. In fact, it is only in the war area at present that the theatre business is affected, and there it has completely ceased. As a matter of sentiment, no comedies are being turned out at present in the Pathe studios in France.

All of the new Pathe productions will be distributed as at present through the Electic exchanges.

New Brands Added to Kriterion Program

Mica Company Plans to Market the Paragon, Thistle, Monarch, Navajo, Robin, Santa Barbara, Alhambra and Kriterion Star

EXHIBITORS who have been following the advertising announcements of the new Kriterion Program will be interested in the following announcement given out at the temporary headquarters of the Mica Film Company, 230 West Forty-second street, New York.

About December 1 this company will make its headquarters at 1600 Broadway, where an arrangement has been made with E. V. Von Brandenburg, of the Gibraltar Film Corporation.

The Kriterion program will consist of the following brands: Paragon, Thistle, Monarch, Navajo, Robin, Santa Barbara, Alhambra, Kriterion Star and two others, the names of which will be announced later. There will be twenty-one releases a week.

In each will be included six comedies and six dramas. The first release date has been set for Friday, January 1. The Crown City Film Manufacturing Company, of Los Angeles and Pasadena, will produce the Thistle and Paragon brands which will consist of one comedy and one drama each week.

Donald McDonald will be in charge of the productions together with Bruce Mitchell and Arthur H. Coldwey. Prominent stars in the program will be Rena Rodgers, Ralph McComas and Allen Fralic. Dorothy Davenport will be the lead in the dramatic productions, supported by Joseph Singelton and Ed. Alexander.

The Santa Barbara Company will produce a comedy and a drama each week with A. M. McKenney, general manager, in full charge of productions. The dramatics with Fritzie Brunette as the lead will be directed by William Robert Dalry and Bert Angell will direct the comedies.

Two comedies a week will be produced. The other companies are the Robin Photoplay, Inc., with Jesse Robin as general manager and director, and J. L. Phillips and Margaret Ruby as stars; the Navajo Film Manufacturing Company, of Los Angeles, Charles K. French, general manager, and an old well-known cast producing western dramas; the Monarch Producing Company, Los Angeles, Harry Harvey managing director, formerly with the Nestor and Solax companies.

The Alhambra Film Manufacturing Company's announcement of stars and casts will follow shortly.

The office of the Mica Film Company will also be announced later. Exchanges already exist throughout the United States. These consist of twenty-nine distributing offices, along with which are included twenty main centres. The distributing idea is to give the exhibitor the quickest possible service, together with the cheapest possible shipping rates.

A number of the above companies have been producing for some time, but none of their former productions will be used.

COLONIAL ADDS TOPICALS TO ITS PRODUCTIONS

The Colonial Motion Picture Corporation has entered the topical field by securing the exclusive rights for photographing in motion pictures the annual Yale-Harvard football game on November 21 at New Haven.

VEILLER PLAYS TO BE SEEN ON THE SCREEN

Bayard Veiller, author of "Within the Law," "The Fight" and other plays, has signed a contract with the George W. Lederer Filmamotives Corporation for the screen production of the latter play. A strong company has been assembled.
“THE COUNTRY MOUSE”
(Bosworth—Paramount)
REVIEWED BY H. S. FULD

The present-day exhibitor has much to be thankful for. With one feature after another, each on a par with the others, and all of them good, he is at a loss to pick out a program. And now comes Bosworth with another crackerjack release in “The Country Mouse.”

Hobart Bosworth, the inimitable, gives a fine exhibition of his ability in his portrayal of an incorruptible congressman; and his wonderful physique is shown to good advantage when he dresses in evening clothes.

In this production he is supported by an exceptionally well-chosen cast, and even the characters in the minor parts are thoroughly alive to their respective roles.

Billy Balderson (Hobart Bosworth) is elected to the legislature, and taking his wife, the “country mouse” (Adele Farrington), with him, moves to the capital. About to be drawn into the clutches of the lobbyists, George and Myrtle Marshall (Marshall and Myrtle Stedman), Balderson proves himself proof against temptation where politics are concerned.

But the wiles of Mrs. Marshall are fast making him forget his wife Addie, and he spends most of his spare time with the former. Addie overhearing two female gossips referring to her as

“a little country mouse, a poor little frump with no spirit,” makes up her mind to meet Mrs. Marshall on her own ground.

With a blank signed check from her husband she enlists the services of Mme. Pauline, proprietor of a beauty parlor, and the result is such a complete transformation that she can hardly believe her eyes.

Passing Billy on the street he does not recognize her, but something about her appearance makes him say to himself: “My little country mouse might look like that if—”

An invitation to a ball and reception being accepted, Billy leaves his wife at home and goes alone. Quickly the transformation is once again gone over, and the country mouse appears in the ballroom in a wonderfully charming and brilliant woman. Marshall being among those present, quickly seizes his opportunity to persuade Addie to influence Billy’s vote, and Billy finding them together in what looks to him a compromising attitude, is furiously jealous.

The denoument is cleverly turned to a comedy finish, and the picture closes happily, with Addie teaching her hubby the latest tango dances.

The entire production is so interesting throughout that one is hardly conscious that it has taken four reels to tell the story. There is not a dull moment in it, and good clean comedy is there in copious quantities. It should add to the producers’ reputation.

STEINER LEAVES ON TRIP TO COAST

William Steiner, of the Photo Drama Company, is off on a trip to cover the territory and offices that are handling “After the Ball.” Two companies opened last Monday in Canada, one at the Grand Opera House in London, Ont., and the other at the Grand Opera House in Toronto.

Mr. Steiner will cover the coast country before he returns because the demand for bookings on “After the Ball” is so great.

“THE QUEST OF THE SACRED GEM”
(Pathé—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY CLIFFORD H. FANGUERN

The fine acting and photography and the effective settings of this attractive picture offer a striking example of the good work which is being done in American studios at the present time. A number of the scenes are laid in Indian temples, but so carefully have they been arranged that they have every appearance of having been taken in the Far East.

The views in the temple from which the diamond was stolen are of particular excellence. A great open hall, apparently built of massive materials and in correct oriental architecture is seen. At the far end of it is an idol in the form of a grotesque elephant seated upon a throne.

A crowd of native worshippers are bowing before the image. The theft of the diamond from the idol’s forehead is accomplished by an American disguised as a native. The priests are aroused, and a short but exciting fight takes place. All of this is shown in the dim light of the moon, which shines through a few high windows.

It is an exceptionally fine piece of photographic work, and its effectiveness is further enhanced by the attention to details. For example, a Hindu priest with a withered arm is the one who gives the alarm.

When the action of the story is transferred to the United States the scene effects are even better. A beautiful country estate is utilized, and the interiors are fully in keeping with what one would expect from the outside of the house. Later a fight on the housetops in New York’s East Side shows Brooklyn Bridge and the East River as a background. All of this adds to the force of the story, which is full of interest.

The cast is well balanced and includes some capable players. Edna Mayo is seen in the principal feminine role, which she handles in an attractive fashion. Charles Arling appears as the soldier of fortune who stole the diamond. Ernest Truex, as the office boy, adds some good touches of comedy. William Roswell is seen as the fiancé of the girl who inherits the wonderful jewel.

One rather startling scene shows one of the Hindu avengers of the desecrated idol hanging by a rope from the roof of a moving Pullman car. Opening the window, he stabs the thief to death, but is knocked to the ground by a telegraph pole before he can get the diamond.

The American soldier of fortune took the jewel from a temple in India. He met his death as mentioned above at the hands of the natives who had followed him. The diamond then went to his niece. Her fiancé apparently stole it from here, with the result that the engagement was broken. The mystery is finally solved by a detective, the diamond goes back to India, and the young couple are happily reunited.

As a business getter the film is one of unusual merit in every way, and should please any audience.
THOUGH much has been said, and more has been advocated both for and against the long feature—meaning those of four reels and over—nevertheless one is hard put to find any argument or reason that would class this release as too long. "Julius Caesar" takes about six thousand feet of beautifully tinted film in the telling. There is not a dull moment throughout the story, and the producers have gone to great lengths to make it historically correct. Once started, the film holds one in a grip of tense interest that never relaxes until the final scene.

Beginning with Caesar's courtship and secret marriage to Cornelia, daughter of Lucius Cinna, we are gradually shown the main events of Caesar's life in the order of their occurrence, ending with Caesar's assassination. Mark Antony's speech, and the caption: "Mischief, thou art afoot—take thou what course thou wilt."

Too much cannot be said of the perfectly obvious, painstaking care that the producers have taken to make the different scenes appear true to the atmosphere of the time. The settings for the interiors, the senate chambers, the rooms in the different abiding places of the characters, the tents on the battle fields; all of them appear "real."

If one takes into consideration the magnitude of a production of this kind, it occasions no small matter of wonderment that the scenes "go over" with such smoothness and celerity.

"Painstaking care" does not go half far enough in expressing the careful attention to the most minute detail; the number of rehearsals that must have been necessary in the large ensemble scenes; nor does the expression "real" go far enough in describing the depiction of the Senate chambers.

But mere words have their limitations, and much must be left to the imagination. This production really beggars description, in that a superfluity of praise cannot be given it, nor can an adequate amount of credit, congratulation or appreciation be showered on the directors and producers.

To describe the most interesting scenes would necessitate a detailed account of several. The assembling of the Gallic clans under Vercingetorix to oppose the advance of Caesar, the realistic fight between them and the Roman legions, the capture of Vercingetorix; Caesar's decision to cross the Rubicon, the robbery of the temple of Saturn, the battle between the forces of Caesar and Pompeii. Caesar's magnificent triumphal march through the streets of Rome with the spoils and captives of his many conquests, the assassination of Caesar in the Senate chamber, Mark Antony's oration in the market place, the riot and pandemonium that follows, and the burning of Rome all deserve detailed description. All are examples of wonderful production.

This production will go far to help the cause of the silent drama in its struggle with the house of the "legit." It is a "42 cm." coup, so to speak.

The exteriors, the marching armies of Pompeii, of Caesar, of the Gauls under Vercingetorix; the populace waiting in Rome for word of the battle the welcoming of the returning conquerors, when thousands of frantically gesticulating people are in view at one time; these are beyond description.

When one takes into consideration that "Quo Vadis?, "Last Days of Pompeii" and "Cleopatra" are products of this same company, and that "Julius Caesar" goes them all one better, it is then not hard to realize that powers of description are limited.

The acting of the cast portraying the different characters in this production is beyond criticism. One or two could be singled out and special credit given them, but the entire ensemble is so good that it would be hardly fair to them. Anthony Novelli plays the role of Caesar, and does so in his inimitable manner. This picture should add to the producer's reputation.

REVIEWED BY H. S. FULD

A TITLE running after the main title of this picture informs us that the film is "A silent drama of protest dealing with the World War." It does not add that it deals with it in a way that will give offense to none of the nations now taking part in the European conflict. This the picture tells us, it takes no particular part whatsoever, which is a large point in its favor.

If there is anyone living who does not realize the horrors of war, this film will straightway give him a correct idea of them, and he will realize the trials and tribulations that many on the other side of the water are now experiencing. In fact the picture makes an urgent appeal for peace, and should be speedily endorsed by all sane persons.

J. Searle Dawley produced the picture, and has presented us with an offering that bears the marks of his wide experience in the field. One fault might be found with it; that is, the characters are not well enough introduced to command the greatest interest at the start, but this fault disappears entirely as the picture passes the half way mark.

Laura Sawyer plays the leading feminine part, the wife of a soldier. Maximilian Jurgens is the soldier who loses his life in battle.

At the outset of the picture the scene shown is a curtain hanging at the top of some steps. From under this curtain runs a stream of dark blood; it trickles down the steps and spells "War." The curtain rises and the story starts. The young soldier is married and an hour afterwards is called to war. It is reported that he is killed in a battle nearby. His mother and wife go in search of him and find him—dead.

His wife is so shocked that her mind is unbalanced. His mother, determined upon revenge, takes it when the rival leader makes his headquarters at her home. She poisons him, then sets the house on fire, and then the scenes fade out.

AMES WITH ALLIANCE

THE Alliance Films Corporation announces the employment of George T. Ames as general director of agencies.

Mr. Ames started his film career in the rewinding room of the General Film Company, with which he was connected for two years. He then became associated with Ward's Exchange, booking features. From there he became identified with Kleine's Exchange, and later with the Weiss Exchange in the same capacity. Mr. Ames continued to make rapid strides in advancement until he became assistant manager of the Mutual exchanges.
"FOR HOME AND COUNTRY"
(Cornfield Days—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

Owing to the great success of "England’s Menace" and "England Expects"—the two patriotic productions already seen in this country, which were made by the London Film Company, it seems reasonably sure to predict that "For Home and Country" will meet with even greater success, as it is really a better picture.
It concerns war, but is so skillfully handled as to give no offense to the sympathizer of the powers now in conflict. What the picture accomplishes, converting a peace-loving minister to the sword, while not exactly in accordance with the ideals of religious and peace-loving souls, is very cleverly done, so well that it is excusable and not at all repellant.
Scenes of troops departing for the war have been so well scattered in with those scenes in which the principals appear that the result is a drama that possesses remarkable unity and coherence. These war scenes are slightly inferior to the others as regards photography, but the fact that they are actual scenes from the front will eclipse this small fault.
Great attention has been paid to the details of the picture, although when the director has secured details that are out of the ordinary he has not called undue attention to them. The scene through the lighthouse window is one of those deserving mention. A row of twinkling lights may be seen, ostensibly shining from the invading fleet of battleships. Again when the spy is shot from the inside of the tent, the hole the bullet made in the canvas may be seen. Small yet important details such as these will materially aid the good effect that the picture will create.
Another very beautiful scene is that in which the home country’s ships are to be seen in the harbor, as the sun is setting. In fact the picture is full of artistic scenes, as well as the ones in which detail is attended to.
At the outset of the story we see the minister and his daughter living peacefully. The daughter is loved by a member of the militia, but the father refuses to consent to the marriage owing to his distrust of any military man. But when war breaks out, and he sees helpless persons being mistreated by the enemy, the minister’s aspect changes. He even enters the ranks himself, and after the war is over readily consents to his daughter’s wishes.

ROBERT H. COCHRANE, JR., COMES TO TOWN

Robert H. Cochrane, Jr., is the name of the "party of the second part," and it is said that he is round-faced and handsome. Robert H., Jr., came to town October 10, bringing with him a world of happiness for the parents and hearty congratulations from a host of friends.

Along with its ability to report "mother and child doing fine," Motion Picture News offers its unbounded congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Cochrane.

MIGNON ANDERSON IN HAIR-RAISING AUTO RIDE

Mignon Anderson and Morris Foster, of the Thanhouser company, are willing to risk their lives any time. That is probably the reason they accepted Nolan Gane’s invitation to try out his new automobile. They did. They also tried a steep hill, two stone fences, a milk wagon and a Stanford trolley car, in quick succession.
Fortunately for all concerned the trolley car was firm on its feet, or rather its wheels. Gane quite unconcernedly backed his car out of the trouble, followed for some distance by an irate train crew and a most irascible wagon driver. Miss Anderson and Mr. Foster were finally landed (thanks to a kind Providence) at the studio. No, they didn’t thank him for the ride!

"LIFE'S SHOP WINDOW"
(Box Office—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

After witnessing sensational productions which profess to be true to life, and then seeing this, it comes as a welcome calm after a storm. This picture is more human and real than any we have seen for some time, and therein lies its merit, as a crowded New York house testified at its termination.
The picture is adapted from the novel which was written by Victoria Cross, and in its adaptation there must have been plenty of opportunities to give the picture a morbid and detestable character, but thanks to the competency of the director these opportunities have been entirely avoided. The production is a clean one, and anyone who has the good fortune to witness it will be glad he has done so.

WELCOMING THE NEW ARRIVAL

The scenes have been very appropriately chosen, and are supported by fine photography. The interiors are realistic, none of them ever being so elaborate as to detract from the attention that the characters deserve.
The events that lead up to the clandestine marriage of a servant in the house of an English countryman to a well-to-do boorish, who is learning the art of farming, consume the first part of the picture. Then he departs to make a home for her in America.
Shortly afterwards, the girl gives birth to a child, and her employer not believing that she ever married drives her from her house. She goes to America and lives happily with her husband until an old acquaintance from England appears. His stories and his experiences attract her, and she consents to leave the place with him. How she returns because of her child forms a very pretty finale.
AMONG the present-day directors and script writers of westerns, Thomas H. Ince, aided by William H. Clifford, has a very small number of equals. Whenever we hear the name of Ince it is involuntarily linked with the best of western dramas and melodramas. His wide experience and the wonderful equipment that the forces at Inceville offer are perhaps the best. So that his honors in producing this variety of pictures are well earned.

In "The Bargain" Mr. Ince and Mr. Clifford have produced a wonderfully strong western, which in its own particular class is very good. It contains a typical western story, full of fast, thrilling action, some of which is most sensational. One scene in particular warrants special mention. William S. Hart, who plays the leading part, and his horse, which most certainly must be a trick animal, roll over and over down a steep embankment.

This act in itself is most wonderful, but it seems almost miraculous when we learn that neither of them was seriously injured. Mr. Hart, who plays the part of Bill Stokes, "The Two-Gun Man," is constantly exhibiting his prowess in the saddle throughout the picture. The times when he is not astride his horse he is exhibiting his ability as an actor, and altogether gives an excellent account of himself.

J. Frank Burke is cast as the sheriff, Clara Williams as the girl, J. Barney Sherry as her father, and James Dawley appears in the small part of the traveling minister. Photographically the picture is excellent. Some remarkably extensive scenes have been obtained, and the film is clear in all parts. As the picture was taken in the Grand Canyon of Arizona, scenes have been obtained which are not at all familiar, which give the picture an air of decided freshness.

The experiences and hair-breadth escapes of Stokes, the Two-Gun Man, consume the major portion of the picture. Once he poses as an honest man and wins the heart of the daughter of a miner. Then he has to flee for his life. Finally he is caught on the Mexican border, just as he is about to reform and send the money he robbed the mail of back to the government.

THE BARGAIN

(ince-Paramount—Five Reels)
REVIEIVED BY PETER MELME

THE HOLDUP IN THE FOREST

The sheriff locks him in a room, then repairs to the gambling hall, where he proves him not such a competent sheriff after all, by losing all the money. He bargains with his prisoner that if he will get the money back for him he will give him his freedom. This the bandit does in a very clever manner. He returns for his bride, explains matters and the two set off for Mexico to live straight.

KLEINE TO RELEASE "MME. DUBARRY"

George Kleine announces the early release of "Mme. Dubarry," featuring Mrs. Leslie Carter in the title role. In addition to the work of Mrs. Carter, King Louis XV. of France, is played by Richard Thorntor, De Cosse. Briassac, Captain of the guards, by Hamilton Revelle, while Campbell Gollan handles the difficult role of Comte Jean DuBarry. This is the same cast which presented "DuBarry" throughout America.

THE COMING POWER

(Kinotopie—Four Reels)
REVIEIVED BY H. S. FULD

A POWERFUL representation of the suppression of corruption in politics, well acted, carefully staged, and holding one's attention throughout, thereby being just what is needed by the present-day exhibitor.

Frank Norman (Lionel Adams), gaining fame and the nomination for Governor through the inspired writings of Ruth Ellis (Edith Lucket), a crippled girl, is approached by a financier, John Carter (William Crimmins), known as "the vulture."

THE VULTURE" BUYS POLITICAL FAVOR

Norman being above bribery, several ruses are resorted to in order to compromise him, Miron Mendell, a cat's-paw of Carter's being the go-between. Vera (Anna Rose), the daughter of Mendell, has met and fallen in love with Frank.

Failing in her attempt to bribe him, and stung by Frank's contempt of her, the girl's better nature is aroused. She warns him of the attempts of the plotters, thus becoming the friend of both Ruth and Norman.

Carter, furious at being balked in his designs, plans a frame-up which will land Norman in jail and disqualify him for election. The plot succeeds. Norman is accused of the murder of a gangster, and though realizing he is in the power of "the vulture," Frank cannot help himself.

Resorting to strategy, Vera succeeds in getting a confession from the gangster, who proves to have been only slightly wounded, though rendered unconscious by a blow.

Norman is released, and his enemies are all placed in jail after his triumph at the election. Ruth, dying, places Frank's hand in Vera's, and everything comes out all right.

One of the closing scenes of this release is worth special mention. A wonderful vision appears to Ruth when she is dying, in which she sees Justice helping the workingman and bringing Truth and Honesty together in politics.

The dissolving view where the workingman's chains are struck off by Justice is beautifully executed, and too much credit cannot be given the director.

The story is by Raymond C. Hill, and Catherine Carr pictured it.

HENDERSON, NEW IMP DIRECTOR, COMES FROM THANHOUSER

Lucius Henderson, the new Imp director, has had a wide and varied theatrical experience.

When Mr. Thanhouser formed his first company eight years ago, he selected Mr. Henderson as his second director. Mr. Henderson worked under Mr. Thanhouser at the New Rochelle studios until the company was taken over by the present regime.

Mr. Hite, of the new Thanhouser company, transferred Mr. Henderson out to Los Angeles, where he produced, "Cymbeline" and "Carmen." Following this, Mr. Henderson was given control of the Majestic company, where he occupied the position of managing producer.
"THE MAN FROM HOME"
(Lasky—Five Realis)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

The Lasky company will be obliged to aim at and attain an exceptionally high goal if it intends to surpass the almost unequalled merit of "The Man from Home" in the future. It has not been our pleasure to view all of this company's productions, but of all that we have seen this is by all odds the best.

The photography is up to the usual standard, the scenes and sets are magnificent, the acting is not to be criticized, and the story is so well constructed that the interest is never for a moment lost. And what more could be asked? The answer is plain. And it is also plain that the exhibitor who advertises "The Man from Home" will pack his house.

It was only a few years ago that David Belasco produced Booth Tarkington's novel of this name on the stage, and now he and the Lasky company are to be thanked for offering it in motion pictures. If the picture is to be classified it will come under the head of comedy-dramas, but it is so far removed from the average comedy-drama that it stands in a very small class of this variety of pictures.

It seems rather useless to speak of the excellent photography as this brand of pictures never contains anything but the best photographic work. Some gorgeous scenes have been obtained. And the light and shadow effects are flawless.

Leading the cast is Charles Richman, who plays the role of Daniel Vorhees Pike, an American country lawyer, equipped with all the subtlety which we would suppose such a gentleman to possess. The way he gets the idea of marrying a bankrupt English lord out of his ward's head is both amusing and tense, and the big situation that his machinations lead all the principals of the play to is immensely dramatic and forcible.

Theodore Roberts has been allotted the role of the Grand Duke Vasily Visilivitch of Russia, and makes the most of his part. Many a humorous scene passes between him and Pike; when the breezy American has struck up an acquaintance with him. Fred Estabrook, as Earl Montague, a smaller part as the Earl of Hawcastle, and Monroe Saltsbury plays the honorable Almeric St. Aubyn (the Earl's bally offspring) in fine style. His part of the young English lord is exaggerated, but very funny.

Dorothy Quincy and Jode Mulally are the two American children of Old Man Simpson (Dick La Reno), who are all but lanced by the English lord and his son. Horace B. Carpenter as Ivanoff, and Anita King as Countess de Champigny complete the cast, which is one of the most well balanced we have seen for some time.

The main plot deals with Pike's efforts to dissuade the Simpson children from becoming adherents of the penniless Englishmen, which he finally succeeds in accomplishing. There is a sub-plot showing how false the older lord is when he elopes with a Russian's wife and sends Ivanoff to Siberia, which is closely allied with the other.

From the very outset there is not a slow moment. Humorous and dramatic situations have been mixed with great intelligence. There is one big situation to which all the smaller ones lead, which is both powerful and gratifying to see. Then, too, the ability of the cast, and the finished manner in which they perform go a long way in helping the production. In short, the picture is perfect in every degree.

"LITTLE SUNBEAM"
(Ralston-Box Office—Three Realis)
REVIEWED BY CLIFFORD H. FANGBURN

This is the sort of picture which if it were told in a printed story would be read with interest by every member of the family. In other words, the human element is present to a pleasing extent.

SUNBEAM ON THE FARM

The characters are neither members of aristocratic foreign houses, nor American millionaires. Instead, they represent the fine, every-day persons of moderate means who make up the great bulk of this country's population. Even the villain is a familiar type.

The mere fact that the characters are of this sort makes their interpretation more difficult, but the cast proves itself a decidedly capable one. Jackie Saunders, who is seen in the title role, displays all of that sweetness and charm which has made her so popular. She is a cheerful, fun-loving little girl, whose chief care is to make those about her happy. The other players give her fitting support.

There is a large number of fine rural scenes during the course of the picture, those showing the interior of the farm house in which Little Sunbeam lives, her sister and foster parents being especially realistic.

The village blacksmith adopts Little Sunbeam and her sister. The sister meets a stranger from the city, who exercises an influence over her which Little Sunbeam instinctively recognizes as an evil one. The blacksmith's daughter had eloped with a stranger some years before and this seems to be what the stranger is planning with the innocent sister. Such proves to be the case.

Little Sunbeam goes to the city in search of her sister. The man who took her from her home has cast her off. The boarding house in which the searcher lives is next door to the house in which the blacksmith's daughter is living. Little Sunbeam plays on her violin, and the old songs influence the erring girl next door to go home. Eventually she finds her sister while posing for an artist, who has fallen in love with her.

MOST OF ORIGINAL CAST IN "OFFICER 666"

George Kleine's "Officer 666," which is rapidly being completed by Director Frank Powell, will feature the same cast of characters used in the original stage version of the story, with the exception of the lead of Travers Gladwich, which is being handled by Howard Estabrook because of his special adaptability for the part.
"THE FLOATING CALL"
(Republic-Mutual—Two Reels)

PICTURES that combine a story of newspaper life, whether it be true to life or not, and a detective story, are always received with great enthusiasm. "The Floating Call" will be a success, but not for this reason alone. Much of its attractiveness relies on the excellent manner in which it is produced, the pronounced ability of the cast, and again because the story is not a common one.

Fred A. Kelsey directed the picture, and the amount of action and the intense scenes that he has put into the two reels sustain one's interest throughout the two thousand feet. Mr. Kelsey's specialty seems to be this variety of story and that in which the crooks and the railroad play important parts. He hardly has a superior in producing pictures of these thrilling varieties, and this picture is an excellent example of what he can do.

As in all such stories the termination is apparent as soon as the plot has formed. Therefore the development of the picture is the keynote to its success. The situations that arise in the short space of two reels are sufficient to make the picture go, and the way they are developed is most interesting.

Of course the love story is secondary, almost entirely neglected in this instance, but it is doubtful if it will be missed. If love sick souls who care only to see a romance depicted on the screen before them witness this offering they will wish for more.

Leading the cast is Irene Hunt, playing the role of Bella, the reporter, who is mainly the cause of bringing a band of counterfeeters to bay. W. E. Lawrence and George Seigmann are the two head counterfeiters. The city editor is Ralph Lewis and the part of a jealous reporter is carried by Vester Perry, Connors, of the U. S. Secret Service, who is Bella's lover, is played by Robert Burns. The cast is exceptionally well balanced.

BELLA IS MADE CAPTIVE

"RIP VAN WINKLE"
(Rolfe-Also—Five Reels)

FOR many years Joseph Jefferson toured the country in his stage version of the story of "Rip Van Winkle." So popular did his play become that he became one of the most widely known actors on the American stage. After his death his son, Thomas Jefferson, took up his father's work and won equal distinction. In common with many other legitimate successes "Rip Van Winkle" has now been prepared for the screen, and with most elaborate settings.

Washington Irving's story was arranged for the stage by the elder Jefferson, and his original manuscript has been used in preparing the film version. Besides this, Thomas Jefferson appears in the title role, thus making the production as close to that seen on the stage as is possible.

The atmosphere of the film is convincing. The scenes which take place in and about the old Dutch village on the Hudson are carefully arranged both as to the houses shown and the costumes of the players. Many fine views in the Catskills show the beauty of the country in which Rip loved to roam with his dog, idling away his time to the distraction and anger of his wife.

Another point of much excellence in the picture is the photography. This is of the best, and many fine lighting effects add to the strength of the film. Part of the action takes place in Rip Van Winkle's house during a thunder storm. The incessant lightning flashes which can be seen through the window are unusually realistic, many of them appearing to light up the whole countryside. Firelight and moonlight effects are also used with entire success.

The story of "Rip Van Winkle" is one with which every child is familiar, and it is only necessary to say that it is faithfully followed from Rip's youthful days of conviviality to his return after his twenty years' sleep, and his ultimate happiness with his daughter.

When the picture opens Mr. Jefferson is shown in his study. He picks up a copy of Rip Van Winkle and becomes absorbed in it. Then the story begins. At its close the actor is seen laying down the book, after which he drinks a health to the picture of his distinguished father as he thinks of Washington Irving's immortal story.

Daisy Robinson makes an attractive Meenie Van Winkle, while her cowardly but persistent lover, Cockles Von Beckman, is well portrayed by William Chamberlain. William Cavanaugh is seen as the swaggering, haggard Derrick Von Beckman, a part which he handles commendably.

The characterization of Nick Vedder, the innkeeper, by H. D. Blakemore is particularly good, as is that of his son, Hendrick, by Wallace Scott. Others in the cast are: Maurice Stewart, Clarice Claire, Loel Stewart, G. Sabo and Walter Kendig. Also the Russian police dog who appears as Rip's canine pet must be mentioned, as he is quite as accomplished a four-footed actor as the screen has seen for some time. The actions of this diverting animal indicate a high order of intelligence.
“THE NINETY BLACK BOXES”
(101 Bison-Universal—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

IT is a well known fact that great difficulties present themselves in filming a picture adapted from a story, much of whose beauty lies in its descriptions, and intercourse between the characters, and those very difficulties must have been exceptionally hard to overcome by the director of this series taken from George Bronson Howard’s stories concerning Francois Villon, which ran in the “Century Magazine.” But Charles Gilby has overcome them in a masterly way, and produced in this picture, which is the fourth of the Francois Villon series, a story that is exceptionally powerful.

Villon is again sent on a mission by his master to conquer a haughty lord. He enters his kingdom and makes friends with the man he is sent to kill. The lord, John Balue, keeps his prisoners in small cages, appropriately called black boxes. They are small and the prisoners are unable to stand upright or move about. Balue takes him in to his dungeons and shows him his means of torture with great pride. Villon manages to secure a key to one of the cages and lets its inmate out, who helps him overpower the oppressor, and then sets all the others free.

Then the party gains the free air, but are pursued by soldiers, with whom they engage in a battle royal, overcoming all but their leader, who manages to escape.

Villon, learning to return to his master as he was not wholly successful in his mission, joins the band of outlaws of which he was once a member before becoming the agent of Louis.

INDIAN AUTHORITY MAKES $75,000 MOTION PICTURE

AFTER three years among the little known natives of Alaska and northern British Columbia, Edward C. Curtis has just completed a motion picture drama to be called “In the Land of the Head Hunters.” A private exhibition of this remarkable production was given last week in the Vanoscope projection rooms, New York City.

Mr. Curtis is the famous North American Indian authority whose photographs are hung in the art galleries and museums throughout this and other countries. But it is as the author of the $1,500,000 work, “The North American Indian,” the field research for which was conducted under the patronage of the late J. Pierpont Morgan, that Mr. Curtis is perhaps best known.

The motion picture “In the Land of the Head Hunters” has naturally great scientific and educational value, and is artistically of much beauty. But it is no mere collection of scenes from Indian life. “In the Land of the Head Hunters” is an Indian epic drama. The films represent an outlay of $75,000. A feature of its presentation in leading theatres throughout the country will be orchestral rendering of native music symphonized.

“In the Head Hunters” all the characters are North Pacific Indians, and all the action is true to native life. Although he has been a “winter dance brother” with several chiefs of the region for a quarter of a century, Mr. Curtis had to live in a North Coast village for a year before the Indians of that village and two others consented to enact for him the dramatic legends of their clans.

Mr. Curtis states that in all his thirty years of life among aborigines from Mexico to Alaska he has never found Indians living under more primitive conditions than those who took part in “The Head Hunters.” Nor has he ever found natives more picturesque of the camera. Those who understand the temper of the real Indian, as contrasted with the “show Indian,” know that only “Chief Curtis,” with his knowledge of Indian dialects and Indian character, could have made the films of “The Head Hunters.”

These Indians are seafarers. From great cedars they fashion canoes to hold as many as 80 persons, and wrest a livelihood from the ocean. A successful hunt for a 90-foot whale and raids on the clustered sea lion rookeries far out to sea figure in the film. The action proper deals with the love of a young chief, Montana, for Naida. To win her, Montana and his clan have to stamp out the head hunting clan of Yaklus and his brother, the Sorcerer, who covets Naida. Head hunting, Mr. Curtis states, ceased among certain clans in this region only about the middle of the last century. Ceremonial cannibalism and head hunting were concurrent.

“THE TAINTE”
(Pathe—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY CLIFFORD H. PANGBURN

THIS is a story of the inherited tendency for crime, and is full of interesting incidents culminating in an exciting and stirring wreck of a large-sized locomotive. It is the sort of film which ought to produce results at almost any type of theatre.

The interior settings are of the ideal sort which are so carefully arranged for their connection with the story that the spectator gives them little or no thought. Besides this, there is a number of attractive exteriors. Most important of all the film presents a rather improbable narrative in a convincing manner.

The cast is a strong one. The leading part is taken by Ruby Hoffman, who plays first the role of a young girl, and then that of a woman of forty or more. Others are Edward Jose, Creighton Hale, M. O. Penn, Louis Hendricks and Sam Ryan.

Vera Knight, a country girl, obtains a place as an assistant to a woman scientist. The woman’s secretary and bookkeeper wins her affection and then betrays her. He has also stolen money from his employer.

Learning of both his acts the scientist orders him to marry the girl under pain of being sent to jail for theft. He consents, but plans to run away, taking all the valuables about the house. He is surprised by the woman, who is killed in trying to stop him.

VERA SEeks PEACE

The girl is convicted on circumstantial evidence. She spends twenty years in prison, while her son grows up without knowing who his parents are.

She is released for service to the government and becomes a member of the secret service. She discovers that her son has inherited his father’s tendencies and is apparently a criminal.

It finally develops that he is the victim of his own father, who is masquerading under an assumed name. He is killed when a locomotive on which he is seeking to escape the government officers is ditched. The son learns who he is and there is a happy ending. The wrecking of the locomotive is a very spectacular effect, and puts a climax on a strong story.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS

"Countess Swede." (Essanay, Mon., Nov. 16.)—Reviewed in Motion Picture News, issue of Nov. 17, page 50.

"Adventure of Lost Wife." (Edison, Mon., Nov. 16.)—Review appeared in Motion Picture News, issue of Nov. 17, page 50.

"Lord Cecil Keeps His Word." (Lubin, Mon., Nov. 16.)—The latest installment of the "Beloved Adventurer" series, Lord Cecil being told by the swindler that it is the property of an orphan named Elizabeth, connected with the most mysterious murder in the history of the murder, but the purchase price. Meantime Betty Carson marries him in spite of the warning from Elizabeth, thus preventing Carson from obtaining it as he had hoped. But Betty finds that Betty Carson is really Elizabeth, and that he is no longer a match for her.

"The Child Thou Gavest Me." (Biograph, Mon., Nov. 16.)—Two women become mothers of girls at about the same time. While their husbands are away one of the women dies. On the same day the other woman’s baby dies. The grief of the widowed mother brings out the best in the baby’s father for the sake of the child.

"She Was the Other." (Lubin, Tues., Nov. 17.)—On the same reel with "Cheap Transportation." A small town police chief plans to have his pretty sister inspect the force in order to cut corners and bring in new young men. The men understand that the inspectoress is a deadly attractive old maid. A fairly amusing story.

"Cheap Transportation." (Lubin, Tues., Nov. 17.)—A burlesque trick picture in which a murder is brought about due to a railroad company’s keeping the postman from delivering a letter.

"Ernest Maltravers." (Biograph, Two reels, Tuc., Nov. 17.)—This is an adaptation of the novel of the same title by Bulwer-Lytton. A pretty young girl is eloped with for 800 of rank to a gypsy girl, their subsequent separation due to the family’s disapproval.

"Hope Foster’s Brother." (Vitagraph, Two reels, Wed., Nov. 18.)—An actress by good luck and determination obtains an important role just when her career seems to be going broke. Her appearance is a great success because of the cleverness that has gone into the role. As a matter of fact, the old lady is almost at the point of death, but pulls through by what the doctor calls a miracle.

"The Peach at the Beach." (Kalem, Tues., Nov. 17.)—A slapstick comedy dealing with the adventures of a man who is trying to elope with a girl. While he tries to elude his fiancé’s friends, he is married to a girl he does not know.

"His Nemesis." (Kalem, Two reels, Wed., Nov. 18.)—A business averts financial ruin by using their system of honest business. The innocent man’s daughter realizes the truth but cannot prove her story.

"Fixing Their Dads." (Vitagraph, Wed., Nov. 18.)—Two old widows are rivals for the hand of a young man whom they both want to see become engaged. One old widow marries a former sweetheart. The young men then try the parental blessing and the old men becomeorgen.”

"The Marriage Wager." (Lubin, Two reels, Wed., Nov. 18.)—A sensational melodrama which includes a killing and several attempts at murder. A jealous man is trying to rob his brother of the fortune which he believes should belong to him. He learns that there is a will to save the day and marry the daughter of the man raved from action.

"Too Much Burglar." (Vitagraph, Thurs., Nov. 19.)—A burglar arranged with a view to making a man a hero, almost succeeds before the detective gets there.

"Buster Brown and the German Bard." (Edi.-

"Dixson’s Diamonds." (Essanay, Sat., Nov. 21.)—Reviewed in Motion Picture News, issue of Nov. 17, page 50.

"A Horse on Sophie." (Essanay, Thurs., Nov. 19.)—Reviewed in Motion Picture News, issue of Nov. 17, page 50.

"Broncho Billy’s Scheme." (Essanay, Sat., Nov. 21.)—Reviewed in Motion Picture News, issue of Nov. 17, page 50.

"If I Were Young Again." (Selig, Mon., Nov. 16.)—Reviewed in Motion Picture News, issue of Nov. 17, page 50.

"The Sheriff’s Reward." (Selig, Tues., Nov. 17.)—Reviewed in Motion Picture News, issue of Nov. 17, page 50.

"The Mysterious Box." (Selig, Fri., Nov. 20.)—Reviewed in Motion Picture News, issue of Nov. 17, page 50.

"Her Sacrifice." (Selig, Sat., Nov. 21.)—Reviewed in Motion Picture News, issue of Nov. 17, page 50.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"The Mystery of Grayson Hall." (Eclair. Two reels, Wed., Nov. 18.)—A detective who will command interest, played with force by Fred Henry, is a detective and murdered man. The picture is well developed, and although the murderer prepared his case with care, the detective’s methods are entertaining to watch.

"The Strike at Coolcada." (Eclair, Sun., Nov. 18.)—How a railroad employee saved the life of his wife and her baby.

"The Dead Band." (Carl Laemmle, 16 reels, Wed., Nov. 18.)—In opposition to the strike breakers makes this story even more real. The story is told by Walpole and Mildred Bright. The train crossing the burning trestle creates suspense.

"An Il Wind." (Sterling, Mon., Nov. 19.)—A true story of the law and the lawless.

"The Shoemaker’s Eleventh." (Rex, Thurs., Nov. 20.)—A detective who was supposed to be "dangerous" by money matters. He shortly has the surprise of his life, which is a good story.

"The Plot at the R. C. Cat." (Kalem, Sat., Nov. 21.)—The second episode of "The Hazards of Helen." makes an entertaining picture; deviating slightly too much into unnecessary detail is its only fault. The main situation could have been made stronger, but it stands as a good one. Helen Holmes as the operator almost spoils the illusion, for with her cleverness.

"The Dog Raffles." (Sterling, Thurs., Nov. 12.)—Trained dogs are becoming popular, the one that appears in this reel is quite an actor. The picture is very funny, besides, and the dog shows a number of men with a stick in burning dynamic. The only trouble is that it is a bit too long; a better development of an important part and the acting of its members will make it a better picture.

"The School Teacher at Angel Camp." (Frontier, Sat., Nov. 14.)—Not to be released. The film falls short of the standard set by the company.

"The Chorus Girl’s Thanksgiving." (Rev.-

"Her Own Home." (Eclair, Sun., Nov. 15.)—Reviewed in Motion Picture News, issue of Nov. 17, page 50.

"A Bear Escape." (Sterling, Mon., Nov. 16.)—One of the best of the kid comedies. One of the rival dressers has a bear in hopes of frightening another, but a real bear turns up and scares the rivals out of their wits. The object of their emotions tames the animal with a lump of sugar.
“Where the REAL FEATURES come from”

Mr. Cyril Maude

In “BEAUTY AND THE BARGE”

A Gem of Sparkling Humor by England’s Greatest Comic

By W. W. JACOBS

Released through The Paramount Pictures Corporation

“The Widow’s Children.” (Reliance. Wed., Nov. 11.)—The widow’s property is in the way of a proposed fence; the under surveyors proceed to burn down her barn after she has driven them from the grounds. One of her children is slightly burned, but rescued by the head surveyor, who takes an interest in the children, and one of them asks him to become their father. Very pleasantly played by Arthur Mackley and Mrs. Robert Mackley.

“An Incompetent Hero.” (Key-Bec. Two reels. Fri., Nov. 12.)—Reece Arbuckle, always fatty, this time a non-descript. His charitable intentions are mistaken for another man’s by the husband of the wife in the house next door. Upstairs situations lead up to a very comical climax laid in a bedroom. It is so funny constructed, however, that it will not offend. A picture that appears after this, which is as hilarious as usual.

“Silent Comedy.” (Thanhouser. Fri., Nov. 6.)—A girl apparently shields a burglar when she is really protecting her father. The thief relents but the father has sent to jail. Later, seeing that his daughter has changed the young man’s outlook on life he obtains a pardon for him, and allows him to marry the girl. A quiet family story, but interesting.

“The Terror of a Booby.” (Komic. Nov. 9.)—Just a barnyard comedy and not a very good one. A little boy and his horse and the horse’s owner.

“The Life Savers.” (Crisco. Tues., Nov. 19.)—Two Dutchmen intend on becoming life guards and seem to be successful in the first few scenes of this picture, and their maneuvers are exceptionally interesting. Matty, besides getting her life, puts the undesired lover to rout, and leads a romance to a very pretty ending.

“Man to Man.” (Frontier. Sat., Nov. 21.)—Not to be released, as the picture failed to come up to the standard set by the company.

THE STRAIGHT ROAD
(Famous Players—Paramount—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A YOUNG girl's rapid journey upon the downward path makes a very interesting, though often distasteful subject for a picture. Therefore when the order is reversed, and we see the girl traveling the opposite direction, the sight is both gratifying and refreshing to the eye. And as the former event doesn't occur half as often as it is professed to, and the latter one happens oftener than is thought by some misguided souls, its depiction on the screen makes it more realistic than the former, and of course pleasanter to witness.

In "The Straight Road," the author, Clyde Fitch, has drawn a strong portrayal of the reformation of a girl, who literally came from the gutter. The play shows to great advantage on the screen; it is impressive, its situations are tense, the characterization rendered by the players are finished portrayals enacted by stars of an equal calibre.

Glady S Hanson appears as Mary O'Hara, the girl of the slums who rises from the low level of life in which she was reared and who at the risk of her own name lays bare the true and disgraceful character of Aines, who is engaged to a social worker. Arthur Hoops is cast as the man Douglas Aines and impersonates the character admirably.

He brings out the evil and lustful character of his part with striking precision, so well that one is inclined to think it could have been done no better. Ruth Thompson, the well-meaning but misguided young woman who is a slave to Aines, played by Lorraine Huling, William Russell is Bill Hubbell, the saloon keeper. He seems a little too refined-looking for his part, but doubtless there are refined appearing bartenders as well as less reputable men.

He is of athletic build, and when he knocks out a promising white hope in his back room and a little later floors a stalwart negro, any doubts which may have arisen before concerning his ability for his job are speedily squelched. Iva Shepard has a smaller part as Lazy Liz, a woman of the streets.

The sets of the production are realistic and the scenes well chosen; the photography in the print viewed is not quite up to the standard of the company, but the film is delicately tinted and the light is good throughout.

"The Straight Road" will be witnessed with pleasure by all. The story is carefully constructed; the attention is always held; the climax is reached by a series of events each of which has a powerful meaning which is driven home by the good acting of the cast. The ending is happy for all concerned, except the villain, who receives his just deserts. On the whole, "The Straight Road" is a fine picture.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL NO. 72

UP-TO-DATE and the very latest war news pictures are shown in the Hearst-Selig "News Pictorial No. 72," released Thursday, November 5. There are also news pictures of the great Illinois mine disaster and other leading features. How the European war has made millions of women and children homeless is vividly portrayed. Other interesting parts of the war section are a batch of German prisoners being fed away by Belgian soldiers, King Edward's Regiment of Horse leaving London for the front and English raw recruits being drilled at Aldershot.

The mine disaster at Royalton, Ill., in which fifty men were killed was the most striking of the domestic topics. The scenes were all made the day after the explosion occurred and while the bodies were still being brought to the surface. There is also an excellent picture of the new military aeroplane designed and built by Glenn Martin, being tried out at San Diego, Cal. An interesting novelty is the picture of the girl messengers on rollers.

EDMUND BREESE IN "THE WALLS OF JERICHO"

EDMUND BREESE, who will soon be starred in the Box Office Attraction Company's production of Alfred Sutro's remarkable play, "The Walls of Jericho," is one of America's most intelligent character actors, and has had an enviable career on the stage.

Mr. Breese supported Mme. Rhea. In 1898 he played with James O'Neill in "The Count of Monte Cristo" and "Virginibus," after which he was one of the principal members of "The Three Musketeers" with a cast which included Blanche Bates and Margaret Anglin.

His most notable achievement, however, came next when he was cast as John Burkett Ryder in "The Lion and the Mouse." His work in that role established him on the American stage. He then went to London and Americans saw little of Mr. Breese for some time.

COMMERCIAL BIOPHONE CO. EXPANDS

ARRANGEMENTS have just been completed whereby the Commercial Biophone Company, of 110 West 40th street, New York City, takes over the contract formerly held by Pathe Freres controlling the entire output for the United States and Canada of the productions of Messter and Autor films of Berlin, including the Henkie Porten Series.

The first shipment of sample prints has arrived, and announcements to the trade may be expected in the near future.

COXEN IN DARING ROPE-CLIMBING SCENE

A MOTION picture actor's nerve and ability to do the almost impossible is to a great extent illustrated in "The Stolen Masterpiece," a Flying A production in which Ed Coxen and Winnifred Greenwood are featured.

In this picture Mr. Coxen is called upon to climb for considerable distance up a ladder hand over hand, his feet dangling in the air, and old mother earth five stories below.
Another genuine scene from

which shows more and better views of today's epoch-making events than any other news film made.

A world-wide organization, a world-wide reputation, and unequalled facilities account for the enviable position of the world's most widely circulated film.

The Pathé News is a voucher for the reputation of the exhibitor who shows it. Show it twice a week. Issued through the Eclectic Feature Film Exchanges.

LORIMER JOHNSTON JOINS BALBOA

The Balboa Amusement Producing Company has contracted with Lorimer Johnston, one of the best known and most talented producers of feature films, to take charge of a newly organized company of players. He has taken up the filming of a three-reel drama, “The Light in a Woman’s Eyes,” from a scenario written by F. M. Witherwood, editor at the Balboa studio at Long Beach, Cal. Among the members of the new company are several noted thespians, including Caroline Frances Cooke, Constance Johnson, Douglas Gerrard, Howard Davies, William Carroll and Ben F. Clinton.

KERRIGAN RENEWS CONTRACT WITH UNIVERSAL

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company announces the signing of a new contract with Jack Kerrigan of the Kerrigan-Victor Company, which covers a period of two years. While Mr. Kerrigan’s popularity is too well known to require any particular word, it is interesting to learn that during his work with the Universal he has been awarded first prize in three contests and second and third in seven others. He is at present working on a series by Louis Joseph Vance, called “Terrence O’Rourke.” Jacques Jaccard will continue to act as co-director with Mr. Kerrigan in the production of the future releases.

LIFE PHOTO PLANS STUDIO IN CALIFORNIA

A new western studio at San Diego, California, has been decided upon by the Life-Photo Film Corporation, which is now releasing through Alco. The great variety that the scenery of California offers to the film producer appeals to the officials of the producing organization. It is entirely possible, they say, to have forests, rivers, flat lands, and prairies (at least moving picture prairies) within easy reach of the central plant. At the same time there is of course no restriction on the production in California of modern interiors.

Jesse J. Goldburg, secretary of Life-Photo, and Leonard Abrahams, vice-president, are arranging their business affairs so that they can get away in a few days.

BALBOA FILM BREAKS LONG BEACH RECORD

Los Angeles, Cal., Nov. 9.

Records were made at the Columbia theatre, Long Beach, Cal., when the Balboa feature, "The Will o' the Wisp," was shown for three nights. Each evening the police department sent four men to the theatre to protect the Pike—the amusement street—at the beach resort—from being blocked by the crowds. The former record for the house was made three years ago, when "The Pilgrim's Progress" was shown.

LUBIN FILMS GEORGE ADE COMEDY

The Lubin company are now staging George Ade's "The College, Widow," which will feature Ethel Clayton and George Soule Spencer. The football game will be played with all the vigor of the real battle between rival colleges. The comedy is being staged by Barry O'Neill, who has a free hand to make the comedy one of the features of the season.

Modern Achievement in Lobby Fixtures

Adequate Lobby Display is a Vital Feature of Every Theatre—The Output of Several Companies, Here Described, is Indicative of the Opportunities an Exhibitor Has with the Styles and Varieties Now at His Command

(Editor's Note.—Any information as to where to purchase particular styles of frames or other lobby display accessories may be had through our Buyers' Service Department.)

Among present day exhibitors there is a class, though getting smaller every day, that still persists in keeping behind the times in regard to lobby displays and proper showing of posters of their current and coming programs. Why in these days of progress and invention an exhibitor should stick in the same old rut and think that, as long as he has given proper attention to the interior of his theatre, looked after the comfort of his patrons in various ways, put on a good show, why he should stop there and not pay any attention to the front of his theatre, is beyond comprehension.

The time has arrived when exhibitors and managers of show houses must make an attractive lobby display and give as much attention to the front of their houses as they do to the booking of their show and the comfort of their audiences.

There are now on the market various forms of poster frames large and small, easels, and so forth, in so many different styles that it should be easy for one to take a catalogue of any of the various firms advertising in Accessory News and pick out the style or styles best suited to his type of theatre front.

Goods That Are "Use-Proof"

The modern lobby frames are made to withstand the roughest usage. Heavy sheet brass is drawn through a die together with a wood-moulding in such a manner that the brass is clinched to the wood so that it is practically one solid piece, with no sharp edges to cut the hand when cleaning or polishing frames.

Besides being finished in polished brass, the lobby frames are also made in the following finishes which do not have to be polished: burnished brass, brass oxidized, gun metal, brushed or dull brass, german silver, statuary bronze and oxidized.

A patent clip which clamps the poster firmly to the backboard is furnished gratis with all 3-sheet and 6-sheet poster frames. The posters by the use of these clips are quickly attached without using any thumbtacks, and hold fast so that the wind will not tear the poster when no glass is used.

In the following article with the aid of a few cuts, will be made clear how by the proper use of poster-frames and fixtures, an exhibitor can display his posters to best advantage, either in his lobby or in front of his theatre.

How many times is a beautiful marble front or lobby spoiled as far as appearances go by indiscriminate pasting or otherwise covering up with posters and advertising matter! It is all right to paste posters on fences or on the fronts of unoccupied or unrented buildings, but banish the pastepot from the front or lobbies of theatres.

There are frames and easels for one sheets, and these frames are also made with hooks so they can be hung along the wall, on a long rod running along the wall, at about the height of the average picture molding.

If desired a sign on top of the frames composed of the letters, spelling "COMING," "TODAY," "TOMORROW," and so on, is furnished at a slight additional cost.

The backs are of non-warpable compo-board, hinged to the frame in such a manner as to make the insertion of the poster an easy matter. Once inserted, it is secure.

These frames are also made in large sizes for the accommodation of three and even six sheet posters, with or without glass fronts. There are also frames for two, three, or four one sheets, or two one sheets and one three sheet. In fact, if the combination desired cannot be found in the catalog, you can have it made to your own order.

These large frames, using the six sheets for example, are made very strong and substantial, with the compo-board backing entirely removable. The poster is held tightly to the backing by twenty-four locking clip attachments, as may be seen from the cut. These are furnished without glass and with two brass legs on the bottom to raise the frame slightly off the ground.
Strong hooks can be substituted instead of legs so as to hang the frame over the lobby or entrance, or easel legs can be attached for back tilting.

The Interchangeable Tile Letter Sign.

Another frame that could be used to advantage at the entrance or side of the lobby is the "Interchangeable Tile-Letter Sign."

These letters are black on highly glazed white tile blocks, and are easily inserted by sliding into grooves at one end of the board. Announcements can be easily changed. The frame, which can be set on easel or hung from hand rail or on wall, has a locking attachment to prevent the theft of letters.

New Wall Covering

Williams, Brown & Earle, 918 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, have recently brought out a new compound for spraying the walls of motion picture theatres.

This compound is intended to be put on the white wall as a finish upon which to project pictures. It is claimed by the manufacturers that the resultant effect is agreeable and that the picture produced is brilliant. The principle of this wash covering is not new and this particular compound is said to be satisfactory.

Novel Slides for Thanksgiving

For Thanksgiving Day an excellent series of attractive slides has been prepared by the Novelty Slide Company, of 67 West Twenty-third street, New York. There is a variety of Thanksgiving Day greeting slides, and in assortment of clever advertising slides with appropriate designs and suitable illustrations for the holiday.

A new pamphlet has just been issued, illustrating these various slides and will be mailed to exhibitors upon request.
Is It the Novelty Only in Motion Pictures That Now Attracts an Audience?

BY HERBERT S. ANDEm

FIFTEEN years, yes, you may say eighteen years ago, the wonder of animated pictures was sufficient to attract. The spectator was not concerned in the picture he was to see. He was anxious to see an exhibition of anything the exhibitor had to show him.

He wanted to see and be convinced that motion picture photography had been discovered as stated in newspapers and publications throughout the country. This fact only was uppermost in the public mind. There was an invention to be seen. The exhibition could be given in most any place. A vacant store, improvised for the occasion and some announcement signs displayed in any box but an attractive manner, and you had an audience waiting to see the latest wonder of the twentieth century.

The exhibition would last about twenty minutes to one half hour. The films were made only in fifty-foot lengths. In about twenty seconds this short length of film would have been projected on the screen. This fractional part of a minute was too short a space of time to satisfy the audience with one subject, or scene, and, to facilitate also in the operation of the machine, these fifty-foot lengths of film were joined end to end in belt fashion. This belt of film was then threaded over rollers on a "spool bank." In this manner the subjects could be repeated any number of times. Repeating the scene a second time was the practice.

The Pictures of the Early Days

The subjects shown! What were they? One of the earliest, and a very popular subject, too, was a scene purporting to be in a barber shop. In reality, it was a made-up scene in the first kinetographic theatre erected for this special use in taking of animated pictures at the Edison laboratory.

This theatre building was popularly dubbed the "Block Maria" from the weird appearance of this revolving building. By watching very closely one could see a man being shaved in the barber chair. Another man was having his shoes blackened. While this was going on he was seen smoking a cigar.

The rising smoke from the "puffs" at the cigar created more wonder and excitement than anything else in the picture. It was wonderful! The reproduction of motion to the people was conceivable to one's mind. But the reproduction of smoke, in motion, was a step beyond the conceivable.

What would happen, if today, this same film should be reproduced in any of the numerous theatres? Just imagine for the moment the scope of action portrayed in this scene. The motion of the arms and hands of the barber, the shaving of a customer! Or, the motion of the bootblack's arm polishing shoes! Could you exhibitors of today hold an audience within a theatre for a longer time than the fifteen seconds it takes to reproduce this season? You certainly could not.

After more than two decades have passed since the Lumiere Cinematographe and the Vitascope appeared to the public, this public to-day has been educated from a wonder of this invention to the entertainment only to be derived from varied scenes shown on the screen. This entertainment is the only element that now attracts an audience.

The exhibitor to be successful must please his audience. This has never been different. There is this difference in pleasing an audience of today, however, that you have to give them a good show without the element of the wonder of motion picture photography playing a part in the attraction.

Only Fine-Grade Film Can Be Used

New material must be given. This means, films that are too much worn, or those that have scratches from long use of the film going repeatedly through projection machines, cannot be used. It is poor economy to exhibit films in this condition. The audience does not know the cause for this appearance in the picture on the screen. It has been described as rain effect, or "rain pictures," which is quite expressive. At any rate, the audience takes notice of it and knows that something must be wrong. They do not see it in all pictures and they will soon discover the reason.

The next important step is to give only good work on the screen. A good motion picture machine is the all important thing. Starting with a good machine, it should then be firmly anchored in a manner to absolutely prevent any motion or vibration to the picture on the screen from the work of the operator in turning the crank, putting in of lantern slides, or pushing the arc lamp into position for operating.

Nothing disturbs the vision of an audience as much as this movement of the picture. For the best results in pleasing an audience it also means to have a good operator in the booth. Here is another false economy for the exhibitor paying low wages to the operating help and securing only mediocre operators. Good operators cannot be retained long at small wages. The two star actors at your show are the projection machine and its operator.

Star actors in other classes of theatricals demand first attention and obtain the best in salaries. Why not give these stars of the motion picture theatre their just due in respect to attention and to money? Pay the money for good material in these two places and watch the increased box office receipts.

Next to the annoyance of seeing a picture on the screen shaking as if it had a "chill," is the everlasting trying, on the part of a poor operator, to obtain a sharp focus to the picture being shown. He is turning the adjustment for the focussing back and forth to a greater degree than is necessary for careful work.

The picture blurs unnecessarily and the eyes of the audience alter in sympathy with it. This blurring of the picture causes additional eye strain to the spectators. The eye is already strained from the necessary intermittent motion, or succession, of the individual pictures.

Good Selection the Exhibitor's Duty

Selection of a program having a varied character, as to film subjects, is a topic to which the exhibitor must pay much attention. There are photoplay films, in two or more reel features, in great numbers from which a program may be selected. In fact, there are so many of these photoplay titles marketed, when compared to other classes of subjects, these are almost forgotten.

To give a show containing only photoplay films, varying the program by titles as to whether it is tragic, humorous or emotional, does not satisfy completely. In the other classes of houses, namely, vaudeville and theatre of varieties, a program having all the acts of a similar character, viz., one-act playlet, singing, instrumental, monologue, or gymnastic, would soon bring failure.

A varied bill, no acts similar in character, which is the general run of a program in this class of house, satisfies an audience. This audience, having once been amused and pleased, wants more.

Some exhibitors, outside of New York City, have already awakened to the fact that the novelty in motion pictures does not now attract an audience and are following a policy of giving a well selected and varied program.

A theatre in Montclair, N. J., has adopted such a plan. The (Continued on page 75.)

Some Mistaken Ideas Regarding Dynamos
BY H. S. ANDEM

"HOW much current does this dynamo generate?"

One hears this question asked very frequently. Many operators, no doubt, would ask this question themselves when visiting some generating station and think it perfectly correct.
Motion picture machine operators pride themselves on their knowledge of electricity. Can many of them see the technical error in expressing the question of a size of a dynamo by asking:
"How much current does it generate?"

A dynamo does not generate current. Then does a dynamo generate electricity? No. A dynamo does not even generate electricity, though this, too, is another familiar expression.

Before answering what does a dynamo generate let us consider two parallel cases of machines known longer in this world than dynamos. A pump is used to force water through a pipe.
The pump does not generate water. It merely generates pressure to the water, and causes the water to flow out over any path it may find of the least resistance back to the level of its supply, or to the centre of the earth if it can find such a path.

A blower is caused to revolve at a high velocity for producing a blast of air. But this blower does not generate air. It generates, or produces, pressure to the air only and the air flows through any outlet it may find until the pressure the blower imparted to the air is spent in overcoming resistance.

A dynamo acts similarly. It generates electrical pressure. This pressure then causes a current of electricity to flow over any path it finds, seeking one of the least resistance. The more lights, motors and other electrical devices connected across the wires from the armature the less resistance is offered to the electrical pressure generated and the greater the current becomes until the strength of current flowing is so great that the wires on the armature get hot.

This heating of the armature determines its capacity for work.
The larger the dynamo the larger the wires that may be placed on the armature and the larger the current it will stand before heating.
This is how the question "How much current does this dynamo generate?" originated, meaning, as we now see, how much current does this dynamo carry, or allow to flow through it, before the armature gets too hot?

Dynamos generate electrical pressure only. Currents cannot exist by themselves. Currents result from pressure overcoming resistance. That is, there being a pressure there must be current. And if there is pressure and a resistance equal to, or greater than this pressure acting against it, no electrical current can exist either.
Pressure only is present.

The Renfax System and Its Use

M. T. asks: I am an experienced operator but I never had an opportunity to handle a talking picture machine. Will you let me know if the Renfax system is very complicated. I think my boss is crazy about it and is just trying to make arrangements with the Renfax people to have their device installed in our theatre at once.

Answer: You must not be frightened by any talking picture system and especially the Renfax which, in my opinion, is the simplest of all. The two figures given below, together with several technical explanations and a confidential visit to the company at 110 West Fortieth street, will put you right. Don't forget to ask for Alfred E. Gold, the chief mechanic, who understands his business and know how to make himself clear to others. If you tell him that I sent you there you will not doubt get the best treatment and enjoy your visit.

Projection

The two drawings, Figure 7 and Figure 8, which represent the whole device, give an idea of how simple it is and how easily the system can be worked in conjunction with any projector. Let letter O be a contact maker of the same type as N and is fixed to the spindle rotated by the handle, which operates the projector.

Bearing on each side are two springs O' mounted on blocks O" of insulating material and having terminals O' for the necessary electrical connections.

The contact is established so that when the handle of the projector is rotated it controls the number of times per second that the electro-magnet is energized.

Figure 8 gives a broader idea of the apparatus and its connections than Figure 8 which is only a partial view showing the connections with the handle of the projector. As the contact makes N and O rotate their respective electro-magnets G and L become energized whenever a connection is made with the battery through their respective contact makers, and this takes place with the form of contact maker shown in the drawing, four times in every revolution.

As the armature C of the electro-magnet G for example is attracted, the pawl D attached thereto passes over a tooth on the ratchet wheel B. When the armature C is released owing to the action of the spring E the ratchet wheel is rotated through a distance corresponding to one tooth. The same operation takes place with the armature H of electro-magnet L when the latter is energized. If the speed of the contact makers N and O are alike, the armatures operated by their respective electro-magnets will rotate the ratchet wheel B, but will not move it longitudinally.

However, if the kinematograph or projector is being operated at too high speed, its contact maker will make a higher number of revolutions and consequently make electrical connection more frequently than the corresponding contact maker on the phonograph or talking machine. The result of this will be that the armature H will move its pawl I more frequently than the armature C moves its pawl D, and the ratchet wheel receiving a greater number of thrusts at one side than it does at the other will be moved in a longitudinal direction.

When this takes place the pointer M attached to the spindle of the ratchet wheel will move so that either or both half, M' or M", of the transparent screen will appear in front of the illuminated circle on the electric lamp, thereby indicating to the operator, according to whichever color is assigned to the projector or kinematograph, that such kinematograph is being worked too quickly.

If the operator then lowers the speed of operation of the kinematograph and allows the talking machine to increase its speed slightly, the ratchet wheel will be moved back to its proper position owing to the action of the pawl D moving the ratchet wheel B against the pawl K.

The above description and drawings are rather primitive as the apparatus now distributed by the Renfax company has been greatly improved, and I should add that Alfred E. Gold is constantly improving the apparatus which, as it already is, must be considered the simplest and most reliable talking picture machine to be found on the market. Therefore we think that you will have no trouble in making yourself familiar with the apparatus should your employer finally decide to get you one.

The Importance of Cleansing Lenses

The importance of keeping all the lenses of a motion picture machine absolutely clean cannot be too firmly impressed on operators’ minds. By this caution it is not meant to blow one’s breath on the glass and then polish with a handkerchief, even if this handkerchief be a clean one.

However, an old cambric handkerchief that has been laundered several times will answer. But still better for this use is a piece of unglazed tissue paper. Dust off the outer surfaces of the lenses with a good camel’s hair brush kept for this use only. Then wipe off the lens with the tissue paper giving a revolving motion to the hand.

Paper has a marked property toward glass, cleansing it and producing a high polish. Paper has been recommended for a long period for use in cleansing window glass. It is also an excellent cleanser for nickel plated surfaces.

The outer surfaces of the lenses ought to be cleansed in the above manner frequently. Especially the surface of the condensing lenses next to the arc lamp, i. e., within the lamp house, to free the carbon dust particles having deposited on it. Each day before starting to operate is not too frequent to cleanse this surface of the condensing lenses. Also the surface of the projecting lens, next to the film, needs frequent attention of an operator who takes an intelligent interest in his work.

If these surfaces of the lenses are not kept clean and bright, some of the light is lost.

Any smoky appearance on the lens had best be removed immediately. Light will be absorbed by it as also will some of the light be reflected back in all directions and be lost.

The inner surfaces of the lenses will not require so frequent cleansing. When these do have to be cleansed great care should be used and not disarrange the relative position of the several single lenses.

If any one lens is not replaced exactly as it was originally the focus and correct definition of the lens will be very much impaired.

Building and Furnishings

"The Theatre That Is Different"

Of the 300 or more motion picture houses in Philadelphia none is more unique in appearance than the little Belvidere, situated on Germantown avenue near Gravel's Lane and Chestnut Hill, one of the beautiful suburbs of the Quaker City. This being one of the oldest parts of the city, it is filled with many points of interest.

Colonial architecture is the prevailing note in these quaint old structures, and into this atmosphere the Belvidere, designed by Sauer and Hahn, of Philadelphia, fits as though it too were of "ye olden tymes," instead of being erected in this year of grace, 1914. Built of red brick and black headers with buff facings and wrought iron fittings, strictly colonial in line and feeling, the theatre looks like a dignified old mansion, devoted to good cheer and hospitality. Its wrought iron lanterns, while giving all necessary light, add to this illusion, and only the attractive posters announcing the daily program proclaim to the passerby that this is in reality a motion picture house catering to his pleasure and earnestly desiring his patronage.

The interior is as harmonious and artistic as the exterior. There is an attractive little lobby with flooring of red tile. In one corner is the neat and unassuming ticket office; in the other, with entrance inside, a complete retiring room for ladies and children.

On entering one sees the ample space devoted to standing room, and is then attracted to the unusual lighting; although the performance is going on, there is perfect darkness for the pictures, and yet not the darkness one usually finds in all playhouses. Another long look and the reason for this becomes evident.

Four large indirect colonial lamps shed a green glow over the house. This arrangement gives the comfort of finding one's way about with perfect ease and yet in no wise detracting from the proper projection or lighting of the pictures.

FITTING, but this having already been pre-empted, Mr. Dixon chose the Belvidere as being euphonious and dignified.

There is a daily change of program, with only Wednesday and Saturday matinees. The prices are ten and twenty cents. A Mary Pickford play is given weekly, as also other Famous Players productions.

Although but recently completed, the Belvidere has gained in a short time a firm hold in its locality and the surrounding country. Not only is it attracting the natives or local contingent from

FLOOR PLAN OF THE BELVIDERE THEATRE, CHESTNUT HILL, PHILADELPHIA

Chestnut Hill and thereabout, but the "society" folk in the vicinity are coming in goodly numbers.

On Thursday nights, which the smart set for some occult reason has made its own, it is quite the fad to take in the Belvidere attractions. The string of motor cars stretches for blocks, and the brilliant evening gowns of the women, with the sober background of the "claw hammered" men, give the little Belvidere as gala an appearance as an opera night "downtown."

So noticeable has this patronage become that a society writer of one of Philadelphia's leading dailies commented on it recently in her columns. One thing of which the owner and architects are equally proud is the fact that Carl Pierce, Bosworth's well-known representative, having heard of the Belvidere "way out West," made a point, during his recent stay in Philadelphia, of visiting this "different theatre."

1500 Seat Theatre in Wisconsin Town

P. J. Hanson and Harvey Hanson, proprietors of the Palace Theatre, Antigo, Wis., will begin the erection next spring of a new photoplay theatre 185x44 feet in dimensions, with a seating capacity of at least 1,500 people.

There will be two balconies, and box seats will be arranged on either side. The seats will be upholstered, and be placed a sufficient distance apart to enable patrons to leave them without disturbing those in the adjoining ones. A pipe organ is to be installed. A site for the theatre has been purchased at an approximate cost of $11,000.

New Lobby Frame on the Market

A NEW design for lobby display frame has just been put on the market by Menger and Ring. This particular design is most attractive. The general effect is brown and gold with a blue ribbon effect across the top, on which will be printed the name of the theatre.

The general appearance is one of absolute neatness and it will be a great addition to their already large stock of attractive frames.

Dozen Theatres Are Being Erected in Detroit

That the motion picture industry is growing by leaps and bounds, as far as Detroit is concerned, is proven by the fact that there are today at least a dozen houses in course of erection, several big ones being contemplated, to say nothing of quite a number that have been completed this past summer.

First, there is the Alhambra, a theatre seating 1,500 that is about ready to open at the corner of Woodward and Kenilworth avenues. It is owned by the Casino Amusement Company, of which John H. Kunsky is president. This house is costing in the neighborhood of a hundred thousand dollars; it will have many new features, and predictions are that it will be among the finest picture houses in the middle west. T. D. Moule, formerly manager of the Liberty, will have charge of the Alhambra. He has represented a representative of Motion Picture News that the house will be ready to open not later than Saturday, November 14.

Another new house that will seat 1,850 people, all on the ground floor, is in course of erection at the corner of Woodward and Willis avenues. Harry Goldstein, the secretary and general manager, says that it will be the largest picture house in the country having all its seats on one floor. There will be no balcony. There will be a lobby capable of holding 1,500 people.

Will Show Features Only

It will be an exclusive picture house, showing high-class features only. It has a frontage of 122 feet on Woodward avenue, and runs back 176 feet. There will be four stories on the Woodward avenue front. The building will be of steel and terra cotta, and fireproof insofar as it is possible to make it. It will have 20 exits.

Among the features of the house will be an electric fountain, auto boxes, huge pipe organ and smoking room. In fact, Mr. Goldstein says it will have features that no other house in the country has ever had. He expects to have his theatre in operation by the middle of January.

Then there is the new Knickerbocker Theatre on Jefferson avenue, east of the Belle Isle bridge approach, being erected by the Ingersoll-Gaultier Company. It will seat 1,000 people, will cost $70,000, and will be completed by May, 1915.

The Maxime Theatre, on Mack avenue, being erected by A. Arthur Caille, is about completed, and will seat about 1,000. It will open within sixty days.

More Than 125 Theatres in Detroit

Fuller Clafin has let contracts for a house seating 1,500 people, to be erected on the Grand Boulevard by the Boulevard Theatre Company. The house will be on the duplex style, being the first in the United States of its kind.

These are only a fraction of the dozen that are being put up in Detroit. And still occasionally one hears the remark: “Is the moving picture business going to last?” It is a fact that there are less transfers in the moving picture business, that is the buying and selling of theatres in Detroit, than in any other line of trade.

Men who own houses in Detroit are making money, despite the fact that there are more than 125 in operation. It proves beyond all doubt that the patronage at the movie houses is constantly increasing, and that new patrons are being created every day.

Messrs. Gillingham & Smith, of Grand Rapids, Mich., have secured a long lease on the property at 210-218 Monroe avenue, now occupied by the Star Clothing Company, and as soon as the present tenant vacates, which will be April 1, 1915, work will start on a high class moving picture theatre, seating around 1,800, to be known as the Strand.

Plans for Detroit Strand Complete

Plans for the new Strand Theatre on Jefferson avenue, Detroit, are completed, but the actual construction work has been put off until the spring. Mr. John Kunsky, who will erect this new playhouse, feels that he will have “his hands full” with the Alhambra and the Washington this winter and that spring will be a better time to begin work on the Strand. In this connection, it might be said, Mr. Kunsky is very well satisfied with the way business is coming at the Washington; the patronage is increasing week by week, indicating that the house is becoming known.

C. A. Scheffler plans to erect a $60,000 picture theatre on West Forest street, Grand Rapids, Mich. Morgan W. Jopling, Michigan, Mich., has ordered six motion picture machines which will be used in the theatres owned by the Delft Theatre Company in Escanaba, Marquette and Munising.

Patriotism Re-opens Calgary Theatre

Another picture theatre has been opened in Calgary and, although it is not a new one, it is being operated for a new cause. The cause is patriotism. The Rex Theatre, which was built about two years ago, and which is one of the finest buildings both from exterior and interior, was to have been torn down to make room for the building of the new postoffice which when completed will occupy almost half a block.

For a few months the house remained closed, but an enterprising citizen, M. Mannist, was granted leave by the government to re-open the building for the showing of moving pictures. Mr. Mannist stated in his request to the government that the theatre would be operated for the purpose of donating to the patriotic fund which is being raised here.

Some of the biggest features of the season are secured by Mr. Mannist and large crowds are attending the new house. The major part of the proceeds weekly are given to the Daughters of the Empire society in Calgary and the money is being expended for patriotic purposes.

The Rex was practically the first of the larger and more modern film houses to be built in this city. From the outside it presents a most beautiful appearance, being decorated from top to bottom with electric lights.

Delft Theatre Opens in Marquette

The new Delft Theatre on Washington street, Marquette, Mich., opened at seven o’clock, Wednesday evening, November 4. It is owned by the Delft Theatres, Inc., of which H. S. Gallup is general manager and Morgan W. Jopling, president.

The theatre is one of the most modern in the upper peninsula and is entirely fireproof in construction. Shows will be given twice in the afternoon and twice in the evening, making a total of four shows daily. The theatre seats 300 on the main floor and 80 in the balcony. The decorations, both inside and out, are typical of Holland and harmonize well. The border in the exterior decoration is of blue tile in two colors; above the ticket office are four oval windows with Holland scenes.

The lighting system is distinctly individual; it is known as the "skylight" system and by its means a soft light is diffused throughout the theatre. In the center of the ceiling is a large window of colored glass, above which the electric lamps are placed.

Beneath the balcony are several indirect lamps. The house has installed two Power 6A machines. Miss Ada Mapes is in charge of the theatre. The Delft Theatres, Inc., will shortly open theatres in Munising and Escanaba.
Directory of New Theatres

New Feature Theatre For Dallas

A CONTRACT has been let and work started on November 1 on the construction or rather complete overhauling of a theatre in Dallas, which will be known as the "Feature Theatre." The sum of $30,000 is to be spent in overhauling the theatre formerly known as the Crystal Theatre, a vaudeville house on Main Street. The building is located in the heart of the theatre district of Dallas.

Ben B. Lewis, a local business man, is at the head of the company which has been formed to take over the playhouse. It is the plan of the promoters to show only feature pictures, as the name of the house indicates. Work will be pushed as fast as possible, and it is said that when the work is completed this will be one of the most beautiful picture houses in Dallas of the southwest.

Lakewood, Detroit, Ready Next Spring

ARCHITECT E. C. THULIN has about completed his plans for the new Lakewood motion picture theatre to be erected at Jefferson and Oneida avenues, Detroit. The building will be erected by a company to be known as the Lakewood Theatre Company, whose capital stock will be $50,000.

The building will have a frontage of 66 feet on Jefferson avenue and will run back 140 feet; the seating capacity will be 1,000. The exterior will be of pressed brick and stucco; the front part will be occupied by stores and offices. The principal stockholders in this new enterprise are John Cutler, Bertha E. Cutler, C. J. Roberts and R. S. Larrabee.

Work will start inside of thirty days and the theatre completed by spring.

$200,000 Theatre Opens in Milwaukee

The first downtown photoplay house to open in over a year's time is the new Strand theatre, Fifth street and Grand avenue, which has just opened in Milwaukee. The house is one of the largest in the Northwest, seating 2,000, all on one floor.

It cost $200,000 to erect and combines all of the most modern innovations with comfort and beauty. The admission price is to be ten cents, with the box seats at twenty cents. A magnificent three manual organ has been installed, which, combined with a splendid orchestra, should provide excellent music. Ethel Barrymore in "The Nightingale" opened the house.

The theatre is owned and operated by the Photoplay Company, and is under the management of Philip Gross, Jr.

Markee, Palo Alto, Has Gala Opening

THE new Markee Theatre of H. C. Schmidt has been opened at Palo Alto, Cal., the opening attraction being "Vendetta." This house is one of the finest on the San Francisco peninsula, and caters especially to college folks, this city being the home of Stanford University. Mr. Schmidt is an officer in the Exhibitors League of California, and a large delegation of exhibitors and exchange men were present at the opening of his new house which took place on the evening of October 26.

Theatres Here and There

WORMALD and Thompson, who now operate a photoplay house at Conneautville, Pa., are erecting another house in the town. According to the agreement reached with the contractor the house will be completed by December 1. It will be thoroughly up-to-date and fireproof throughout, and will be erected according to the building code commission's requirements.

It will have a seating capacity of 250, and will cost when completed $15,000.

Angelo Lazzari has completed the erection of his new house at Monongahela City, Pa. It has a seating capacity of 170, and is well located, and should do a large business. Warner's Features are to be used.

C. W. Shepp, a hotel proprietor of Irwin, Pa., will shortly open a motion picture theatre at Claridge, Pa., a mining town near Harmony, Pa. The new theatre will be called the Palace, and will have a seating capacity of 200.

Work is being rushed on the Garden Theatre, Johnstown, Pa., the work going on day and night so as to have the theatre ready to open by Thanksgiving Day. The theatre will have a seating capacity of 1,000. George Knox, the well known amusement man, will be manager of the theatre.

Carle Carlton's theatre at Butler, Pa., is rapidly nearing completion. The theatre will have a seating capacity of 325 seats, and will use Paramount pictures. It will be fireproof throughout, and will be one of the finest theatres in that section.

A. J. Arkush, who recently assumed charge of the Bell Theatre at Redwood City, Cal., is preparing to make a number of improvements, and will increase the seating capacity by 150.

The Ellice Theatre, located in the northern part of Berkeley, Cal., and originally a part of the Turner & Dahnhken Circuit, has changed hands, the new owner being C. N. Williams, formerly of Alameda, Cal.

Kahn & Greenfield have had plans drawn for the erection of a moving picture theatre on Fillmore street, at Eddy, San Francisco, and contracts for the construction of the house will be let at once. The theatre will have a seating capacity of one thousand, and will be ready for occupancy by the time the Panama-Pacific International Exposition is in full swing.

John's Theatre has been opened at East Oakland, Calif., by A. John, who also conducts a candy store in the vicinity.

R. E. Gumm, of Lagrange, Ky., has purchased the leases of the Palace and Exhibition theatres at Corinth, Ky., and has assumed the management of these houses. Mr. Gumm has had several years' experience in the motion picture business.

Manager Stivers, of the Hipp Theatre, Jackson, Ky., is making a number of improvements in his house. A new hardwood floor, sanitary opera chairs of the latest design, a picture screen and a modern heating plant have been installed.

The Casino Theatre at 304 Federal street, North Side, Pittsburgh, has closed for repairs. Stein and Netzer are the proprietors. The theatre has a capacity of 1,000 and is said to be the finest theatre in that part of the state. The Famous Players Film service is being used and a string orchestra furnishes the music.
Music and the Picture

The Wrong and the Right Attitude of the Motion Picture Musician

BY H. S. FULD

FROM time to time we have urged, in these pages, that the playing for pictures should not, in most cases, be attempted without the musician having his “stock in trade” by heart. Whether it is a “Photoplayer,” a “Wurlitzer,” or just a plain piano, try to avoid having a light burning in the orchestral pit. Try playing for the picture in the dark, with the only light that reflected from the screen when the picture is on.

True, there is nothing that sounds better than a good popular classical selection, when played right; but limit the playing of these to “scenic,” “educational,” or long scenes where the action on the screen would be helped, in your opinion, by such renditions. On these occasions, if you need the sheet music to play the selection, a light would be needed, and probably not noticed, but if the light is burning only to show the audience the identity of the player, why not use a spotlight and be done with it? Probably not more than a few will paying any attention to the music if the picture is being properly played to, which is as it should be.

“Grand-Stand Plays” Are Out of Place

If the music is right for the picture it will be inconspicuous, and be the right accompaniment for drama or comedy as the case may be; but any “grand stand playing”—for there is no better way of terming the playing of operatic or other selections at the wrong time—distracts the audience’s attention from the picture.

True, again, the artist might have exceptional ability and be not averse to exhibiting his talent, probably with no thought of applause, audible or otherwise; but imagine the clapping of hands at the close of a musical selection and the picture on the screen in the middle of a tense scene!

The average audience in the motion picture theatre is not a music-loving one in its entirety, but while most of those who take pleasure in viewing the pictures would, and probably do, appreciate good music, nevertheless the place for rendering these solos is either between pictures or as overtures before or between shows.

A New Song on Mary Pickford

It has just come to our notice that the Jerome H. Remick Music Publishing Company have released a song by Richard A. Whiting, of Detroit, entitled, “Mary Pickford, the Darling of Them All.” The tune is of the catchy waltz type, and the publishers are confident that the sales will reach a million copies. When the song becomes popular it could no doubt be used to good advantage for “Mary Pickford” releases.

The chorus runs as follows:

She’s the darling of the movies,
For she’s “Such a little Queen,”
And she stepped right down into my heart
From a moving picture screen.
Fairy Mary, dainty as a Dresden doll,
She’s the “Good little Devil” could make Satan on the level.
Mary Pickford, you’re the darling of them all.

Scranton Will Have $75,000 Theatre

LARKSVILLE, Pa., is to have a new motion picture theatre. A site has already been secured on the main street of the town, and the work of erection will start within a few days. The new house will have a seating capacity of about 1,500.

Meyer Davidow, a well known real estate broker of Scranton, Pa., has decided to erect a handsome motion picture theatre in the central city. He announces he will erect a modern fireproof building at the corner of Spruce and Wyoming streets. Plans have been submitted, and the contract will be awarded this week. According to the architect’s estimates the new film theatre will cost more than $75,000, exclusive of furnishings, which it is expected will demand the expenditure of $40,000, making the building one of the handsomest theatres in the state of Pennsylvania.

The theatre when completed will have a seating capacity of 1,500, but will only have one balcony. There will be two ladies’ retiring rooms and two men’s smoking apartments on each floor, while a wide promenade will encircle the rear of the main floor. The equipment will include everything that is up-to-the-minute.

Washington, Detroit, Has New Organ

MANAGER HOWARD O. PIERCE feels very proud of the new pipe organ which has just been installed in the Washington Theatre, Detroit. The first recital was given Sunday afternoon, November 1. The organ is said to be the largest in the Middle West, the pipes ranging as high as twenty feet.

PICTURE THEATRE EQUIPMENT COMPANY MOVES TO NEW QUARTERS ON TWENTY-THIRD STREET

H. T. Edwards has moved the Picture Theatre Equipment Company, so well known and long established at 21 East Fourteenth street, to a commodious ground floor store in the handsome Fifth Avenue building, New York City. Local exhibitors, managers and operators, as well as Mr. Edwards' large visiting trade will greatly appreciate the convenience and splendid facilities of the new location.

Mr. Edwards is the last of the old guard to leave the Fourteenth street section, which for several years was the centre of the picture industry in this city. He points with pride, however, to the fact that his business on Fourteenth street continued with constantly increasing success even after the trade in general had moved further uptown. This, of course, is due to the fact that the Picture Theatre Equipment Company is known from one end of the country to the other for its large and complete assortment of equipment and for Mr. Edwards' well-known reliability and thorough service to his customers.

In his new location at 19 East Twenty-third street, Mr. Edwards expects to make still more of a specialty of his mail order business. He is prepared to take care of any order, large or small, and to make shipments with the promptness for which his concern is so well and favorably known.

Present indications point to a rapidly increasing business for the firm.

Exhibitors—IT'S A KNOCK-OUT

The Smashing Big New 24-Sheet Stand for the Great “MASTER KEY” Serial—You Could Hunt America from End to End and Not Find Its Equal

GENTLEMEN: In the production of this super-magnificent 24-sheet poster for The Master-Key serial, we have just knocked competition cold. Your competitors will grow green with envy—they will hate you in their hearts, but while they are hating—YOU—(get that) YOU will be getting the merry old coin. We have spent tall dough to work out this stand. It’s so strong, so compelling, so all fired powerful as to make you gasp in wonder. It is done in 5 colors, simply lavish, a dream of Art. NOW GET THESE POSTERS. Put them up on extremely prominent boards. THEY WILL JAM YOUR HOUSE. Nothing you’ve ever seen begins to equal them. They will make the average poster sink into absolute insignificance. These 24-sheet stands are a genuine masterpiece and a veritable “Knock-out.” Now do it right. Order these DIRECT from your Exchange. Order NOW, this minute. The public will imagine you’re running a Broadway show house. The results will knock you silly. Hundreds of “Shrewd” exhibitors are using these 24-sheet posters. ORDER THEM IMMEDIATELY. Better wire your exchange as quick as you see this Ad. Or if you can’t get them from your own exchange, write or wire

MAJESTIC AND KOMIC GUIDE FOR EXHIBITORS
(In which we try to tell only the truth about all Majestic and Komic releases)

THE LITTLE COUNTRY MOUSE (1 Reel Majestic) Release date Tuesday, Nov. 17—A pleasing story and picture play featuring Blanche Sweet, in which a young girl is saved from the snares of high society.

THE SAVING GRACE (2 Reel Majestic) Release date Sunday, Nov. 22—A decidedly refreshing and entertaining comedy drama, with Dorothy Gish in the leading part. The new parson redeems the simple country girl from ignorance and by his vigorous action saves the father from crime.

ETHEL HAS A "STEADY" (1 Reel Komic) Release date Sunday, Nov. 22—No. 11 of the famous Bill, the Office Boy stories of Paul West, featuring Fay Tincher, as Ethel, the stenographer. A good number, in which Bill's love letter causes trouble for Ethel.

ANOTHER CHANCE (1 Reel Majestic) Release date Tuesday, Nov. 24—A melodrama of fair interest and quality, in which an ex-convict is saved from a return to crime by the interference of a crippled newsboy whom he had befriended.

THE SISTERS (2 Reel Majestic) Release date Sunday, Nov. 29—Featuring Lillian and Dorothy Gish. For our candid opinion see announcement above. The story tells of a mutual love and sacrifice of two young mothers under circumstances that will touch the heartstrings of every spectator.

A CORNER IN HATS (1 Reel Komic) Release date, Sunday, Nov. 29—A very good farce with a novel idea, showing how much trouble an industrious dog can create.

NOTE—Florence La Badie and Sidney Bracy—America's two foremost photoplay stars who made such pronounced successes in The Million Dollar Mystery—appear in regular Thanhouser releases. These releases are distributed exclusively in the United States and Canada by the Mutual Film Corporation.

Tuesday, Nov. 24th—"Mrs. Van Ruyter's Strategem," (2 reels) a drama depicting the life of a wealthy widow who doubts the character of the relatives who are to inherit her fortune. Her lawyer suggests she change places with her housekeeper and invite the relatives, who live in different states, to visit her. In the position of housekeeper, she discovers a plot between the butler and her niece to discredit the new maid. She succeeds in having this matter righted. She finally makes a new will much to the sorrow of all her relatives. A very interesting play cleverly acted by—Carey L. Hastings, Ethel Cooke, Harry Benham, Helen Badgley and Muriel Ostriche.

Sunday, Nov. 29th—"A Denver Romance," This drama centers around a young western girl who has just returned from an eastern college. At the railroad station she meets a young New York bachelor who is traveling West to see the country. Her father is an old Westerner who believes that all Easterners are effeminate and lacking in manhood, but is finally converted by the young New York bachelor after a wonderful display of guns. The cast includes Mignon Anderson and Morris Foster.

Tremendous Opportunity For Wide-Awake State Right Buyers

THE Balboa Amusement Producing Company, of Long Beach, California, manufacturers of St. Elmo which has smashed box office records all over the country and will continue in popular esteem for years to come, is now ready to dispose of the state rights of

Beulah in 6 Reels

Beulah was written by Augusta J. Evans as a sequel to St. Elmo and has been read by generation after generation of book-loving Americans. It is a wonderful story wonderfully told—a romance of the Southland—a genuine, heart-gripping work of fiction with a bigger plot, more action, deeper mystery, sweeter sentiment and stronger passions than St. Elmo. It adapts itself to the screen with surprising ease and as a motion picture offering that will stand supreme among the masterpieces of cinematography.

What St. Elmo Has Done and Will Do

Since its release St. Elmo has been in constant demand by exhibitors in every section of the United States. It will make more net profit than any other motion picture attraction now before the public.

Beulah in 6 Reels

will be an elaborate production with more than 200 gorgeous scenes. The cast is one of the strongest ever assembled. St. Elmo is great, but Beulah will be greater—greater because of the more extensive experience and improved equipment of the Balboa Company which now has a hundred winning features to its credit.

You Take No Chances With Balboas

Balboa features, always highly dramatic and rife with human interest, are perfect in photography and all those essentials that combine to make crowd-drawing, money-making photo-plays. If you are in the market for the state rights of Beulah, get in touch with us at once. Write or wire without delay. This is the first Beulah announcement, and in view of the unprecedented success of St. Elmo, Will O' the Wisp, The Criminal Code, The Square Triangle, The Rose of the Alley and other Balboa films, there will be a big demand for our latest and greatest motion picture achievement.

When we tell you that our All American Made program will be of compelling interest to the most critical moving picture fan, we feel absolutely safe in making such an assertion. We want you, too, Mr. EXHIBITOR, to allow yourself to become interested in the KRITERION SERVICE

Which means

EVERY DAY A COMEDY

EVERY DAY A DRAMA

EVERY DAY A SPECIAL

and

EVERY SUNDAY A KRITERION ★ SUBJECT

Our early ideas and ambitions to give the Exhibitor something he wanted and really needed will be more than realized when our product is screened.

If you will accept good advice, communicate with us immediately and make arrangements for a screen demonstration, also to get acquainted with our distributing agent in your territory.

A VERY prominent film executive told me of an interesting incident last week.

He had a letter from a well-known Southern banker and business man asking for a New York appointment and assumed the call would relate—possibly—to railroad or other construction matters.

To his surprise, his caller plunged brusquely into a keen discussion of film exchange and theatre conditions. It appeared he was largely interested in a new chain of picture theatres.

"THIS is a bit out of your line, isn’t it?” asked the film executive, as his caller was leaving. “I am wondering what induced you to become an exhibitor.”

Mr. Southerner’s reply is significant.

“My associates and I,” said he, “after a very careful investigation came to the decision that good business methods—largely the same methods that are standard in other lines—would bring very successful results in the exhibiting business.

And so we have found it.

“There is plenty of competition so far as numbers of theatres is concerned—too much.

“But there’s little competition as concerns keen business management and clear policies.”

A NEW era is on in the exhibiting business. It has been growing steadily and sturdily. The handwriting is on the wall for every exhibitor to read.

Many more men like the Southern banker are in the business and are going into it—everywhere. They are bringing with them positive methods and thought. They are inducing a new kind of competition—not of numbers of theatres, but of well built, thoroughly equipped theatres run by the rules of the modern, systematic retail store.

And the same new era is on with the producer of pictures.

THE first and best producing successes were made and continued to be made, simply through the introduction into the business of mathematical reasoning and merchandising sense.

It has been remarked as strange that this has not become more general, but it is—now.

Business executives, trained to other and older—if not greater—industries, are entering the ranks here and there and are making themselves felt in no uncertain way. They are patiently introducing system and sense and impatiently crowding out loose action and talk—jealousies, temperament, gossip, exaggeration, gambling.

They are getting the business down to brass tacks.

OFTEN it is argued that this is an amusement business and so cannot be ruled economically and methodically. Which is wrong.

It is as badly untrue as to say, concretely, that a picture costing ten thousand dollars and working one day a month can compete successfully with as good a picture costing two thousand and working thirty days a month.

Again, this business has a small retail price. You can gamble with some percentage on stage productions where the retail—or admission—price is two dollars. But you can’t gamble wildly with nickels and dimes in a field where over-production already rules.

QUALITY production—that is the first big essential—and here you have the artistic element that distinguishes the business from most other manufacturing lines. But here the artistic ends.

Elimination of studio and factory waste, elimination of distribution waste—these are just as essential to pictures as to crackers.

The far-sighted producers—naturally they are the leaders—know this.

They are agreed on one point: that this industry will be, must be, regulated along the same old and inviolable laws of economy that rule all industries. They have forgotten the past.

And they are agreed on another point: that co-operation and understanding with the exhibitor is a necessity. Again, the old days are gone.

THIS isn’t a dream—I can hear some exhibitors laughing—it is plain horse sense.

The exhibitor who thinks the manufacturer his enemy is as far off the track as the producer who jumps into this field without a clear knowledge of exhibitor wants and needs—or is unequipped to supply them.

The progressive manufacturer wants you to succeed, in order that he may. He isn’t a philanthropist, but he is too good a business man to destroy his own market.

His success is absolutely dependent upon your success. If the market is demoralized, he is decidedly anxious to find out what and where the trouble is and to correct it. And the only way to accomplish this is for both of you to get together and understand each other.

Suppose you make a trip to see him, like the Southern banker did. It paid the latter.

WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON.
DETOIT EXCHANGES WAGE WAR ON PRICE-CUTTING PIRATES

In Detroit it becomes at times difficult for certain exhibitors to find bookings. It is noticeable that these exhibitors are the ones who will run five to seven reels for a nickel, eight reels for a dime. It should be remarked that few members of the exhibitors' League are pledged to give but three reels for a nickel, five for a dime, and to discourage in every way possible the giving of more.

Also the exhibitors' League has the backing of the film exchanges in this stand. Now what do some of the pirates do, but buy job lots of old film here and there, secure a regular service of three to five reels from a film exchange, add to this program as many of their job lot films as their generosity will permit, and advertise anything up until the limit of the patience of their audiences for a dime. And they seem to have it over the exhibitor who would protect the business. Probably some of these pirates got the films recently stolen from the office of the Progressive Film Company by the Manager Ward, who would like to know who got them.

COSMOS NEW RELEASE NEARLY READY

Following "Hearts and Flowers," the Cosmos Feature Film Corporation will release "The Little Girl That He Forgot." This will be a photoplay in five parts.

Beulah Poynter will appear in the title role of this, her own play. Incidentally it may be mentioned that Miss Poynter has written a novel along the same lines, which will shortly be published.

"Lena Rivers," with Miss Poynter in the title role, is going big wherever shown.

The exact release date for "Hearts and Flowers" will be announced shortly.

ASHLEY WITH THANHouser

Arthur Ashley, former Vitagraph leading man, has joined the New Rochelle forces of the Thanhouser Film Corporation. Mr. Ashley comes to his new field of activities with a splendid record of screen performances to his credit. The first release presented by Mr. Ashley will be a two-reel racing picture with plenty of seat-gripping thrills.

EDISON WILL RELEASE THREE CHRISTMAS

"On Christmas Eve," "The Birth of Our Saviour" and "Twas the Night Before Christmas" are the three films of good cheer the Edison company will release as forerunners of "Merry Christmas."

Laemmle Visits New Universal City

President, Accompanied by General Manager Bernstein, Makes Tour of Inspection of West Coast Studios and Expresses Satisfaction with Work Accomplished

Los Angeles, Nov. 22.

PRESIDENT CARL LAEMMLE, of the Universal company, and Mrs. Laemmle recently arrived in Los Angeles for a stay of ten days or two weeks. Already there are stories of big things that are to be done at the New Universal City, to be heard on every hand.

From an authoritative source, the office of General Manager Bernstein, emanates the report that four or five new companies will soon be formed for production, which will take up the making of three, four and five reel feature pictures from copyrighted novels and plays for the Universal program. The first of these features will be released early in January.

President Laemmle, in company with Mr. Bernstein, T. D. Cochrane, and other Universal officials, made a visit to New Universal City, a tract comprising more than four hundred acres, where seventeen buildings are now completed together with a private water and sewerage system, a zoo, hospital, cafeteria, and a number of California bungalows for employees.

Mr. Laemmle had not been to the west coast since the work of building the first and only city in the world given over exclusively to the manufacture of motion picture was commenced, and every turn of the auto wheel brought new causes for ejaculations of surprise to his view.

After a few hours among the wonders of the new home of Universal pictures, and as the car rolled along the smooth boulevard toward Hollywood, the Presxy of the great motion picture company was heard to remark something about someone having used their brains.

Mr. Laemmle, in company with Mr. Bernstein—who, by the way, was taking his first vacation of two days since taking charge of the Universal studios here eighteen months ago—then went to San Francisco to see the exhibition grounds, and visited the California Film Exchange, distributor of the Universal program.

Council Bluffs Ministers Want Sunday Closing

Clergymen Meet at Y. M. C. A. and Plan Campaign, But Exhibitors, Conscious of Their Own Rights, Calmly Wait First Move

Omaha, Neb., Nov. 17.

NEARLY 100 ministers and church laymen of Council Bluffs, Ia., met at the Young Men's Christian Association building in that city Sunday, November 1, and made the preliminary arrangements for a campaign against motion picture theatres remaining open on Sunday afternoons. The Y. M. C. A. Sunday afternoon meetings have not been a success, it was declared, because the motion picture theatres drew the crowds.

The plan of campaign was merely talked over and a strong committee was appointed to begin the fight at once. The Council Bluffs exhibitors comprise a class of progressive citizens, it was admitted at the meeting, and nothing whatever was said about their being at fault. One minister eulogized the motion picture industry, telling of its wonderful possibilities for education, but deplored the continuance of the Sunday afternoon shows.

That the Council Bluffs exhibitors can take care of themselves there is little doubt. They have a successful organization, which boosted the admission price scale last winter and made it continue, to their mutual prosperity. That they can again exert their cooperation to "stick up" for their business cannot be doubted. Although they have taken no steps yet, the various exhibitors said they were ready to maintain their rights whenever called upon to do so.

Los Angeles League Wants All Exhibitors

Organization Making Strong Efforts to Bring Theatre Owners and Managers Into the Fold as Active Members

Los Angeles, Nov. 16.

AN active campaign has been taken up by all members of the local Exhibitors League, and an effort will be made to induce all theatre owners and managers to become active members of the organization.

With the view of beginning this work a special meeting was called by Judge A. P. Tugwell, the president, and every member in good standing was present.

A report of the state convention was first made by Mr. Tugwell, and in conclusion he paid particular attention to the action taken by the state League with the view of increasing the membership. A motion was made and carried that all officers and members of the executive committee act as a committee on membership, and they are now actively at work.

At the special meeting five names were presented for membership: Mike Gore, owner of the Metropolitan, Casino, Plaza and Sunbeam theatres; Manager Hawn of the Academy; William Burns, owner of the Butterfly; H. L. Lewis, owner of the Hollywood; and the manager of the Royal on South Main street. All are of Los Angeles.

It is the hope of the membership committee to be able to present the names of practically two-thirds of the local exhibitors, and following this a council will be taken up to induce exhibitors of small cities to unite with the League.
Harrington Plans to Unite Pennsylvania

Harrisburg Organizer Sends Out Call for a Get-Together Convention to Be Held January 4-5-6, with the Intention of Affiliating All Factions of the State with the National Association—Predicts Bright Outlook for Co-Operation of Various Bodies

HARRISBURG, Pa., Nov. 17.

Pennsylvania is to have an aggressive state-wide organization of motion picture exhibitors which will be affiliated with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. It is the purpose of the new organization to bring into line all exhibitors in the state, and to aid them in the many difficulties which they are encountering.

Mr. Harrington, one of the founders of this organization, has laid plans for the get-together convention of men of all local organizations, as well as unattached exhibitors, to be held in this city January 4, 5 and 6, meets with the success that is predicted for it by its promoter.

A significant feature of the proposed gathering is that the convention plan originated with a Pittsburgh local association formerly affiliated with the international organization formed by the bolters from the National League in the New York Convention of July, 1913. This organization is Pitt Local No. 1, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania, which, however, now declares itself independent of any national body.

Representatives of Pitt Local assert they are now perfectly willing to come back into the national fold. Indeed it is their openly expressed desire that the newly proposed state organization shall be a branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

Fred J. Harrington, of Pittsburgh, organizer of Pitt Local, who was president of that body when it was a part of the bolting International Association, is here, making preliminary arrangements for the convention. He places particular emphasis on the assertion that the co-operation of exhibitors, no matter with what organization they hereafter have been affiliated, as well as men who have been in no organization, is earnestly desired.

Mr. Harrington is understood to be especially eager to have a full representation of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania at the convention. This body, whose membership is confined chiefly to Philadelphia and vicinity, is understood to hold a charter in the national league, but, it is intimated, has not recently entered with very great enthusiasm into organization work of any kind. Samuel F. Wheeler, of Philadelphia, is president of the League of Pennsylvania, and it is understood to be the wish of the prime movers in the convention plans to gain the benefit of his advice and experience in organizing the state-wide branch of the national league. They are hoping he will attend the convention and lend his influence to promote its success.

Mr. Harrington told the representative of Motion Picture News here that he has received encouraging reports from Philadelphia, and that P. J. Crepper, of that city, business manager of the Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania, has written him a letter expressing his approval of the state-wide movement and promising to be present at the Harrisburg convention. This assurance that Philadelphia is becoming interested in the project lends great encouragement to the Pittsburgh promoters, who say they have had absolute assurance of the cooperation of exhibitors in all other populous parts of the state.

If the professed aim of the promoters is carried out, the convention will be a wide-open affair, and no slate of officers and no ready-made steam-roller program of any kind will be prepared in advance, it being the desire that the delegates shall elect whom they please and map out their own working campaign.

Mr. Harrington, who is getting around among the exhibitors in all parts of the state, was a conspicuous bolter from the national organization in the convention in New York in 1913, but declares he is now in absolute sympathy with the officers and with the purposes of the present national body.

"Knowing some of the good things that the national organization has done in the past and appreciating the work of the new president, Marion S. Pearce, of Baltimore, and the Washington (D. C.) executive board member, Fulton Brylawski, I feel that it not only is my duty, but the duty of all who bolted in 1913, to come back into the fold. It also is the duty of all other exhibitors to get together in the national organization and show those men I have mentioned, who did such noble work on the question of the war tax in Washington, that we are with them for one organization."

A circular letter has been sent out to about 1,000 exhibitors from the headquarters of Pitt Local, 115 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, which briefly sets forth these advantages. Thousands more will be sent. This circular, after emphasizing the fact that the gathering is to be held under the auspices of both the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, as well as the independent exhibitors of the state, for the purpose of having one compact organization, adds that the selection of the place and date of the meeting are considered most appropriate.

Harrisburg is the capital of the state, and it is remarked that at the time of the convention here the state legislature will be convening. A number of measures of vital importance to the exhibitors will come before that body. In refusing to pass any measures that will receive the attention of the Pennsylvania law makers, the circular says:

"First, the new building code, if passed in its present form, would work a hardship on all exhibitors and would close not less than 60 per cent. of the picture theatres now in operation in the state.

"Second, the new state laws conferring the power on the boroughs to levy certain taxes on all probability work a hardship on our business if we are not there to express our ideas.

"Third, the repeal of the censorship law affecting motion pictures and our advertising paper."

Ohio Censor Law Before Highest Federal Court

Mutual Attorneys Will Present on December 7 Arguments in Case Testing Constitutionality of Censorship in All Forms

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.

ARGUMENTS in the case of the Mutual Film Corporation against the Industrial Commission of the State of Ohio will be begun in the Supreme Court of the United States on Monday, December 7, the motion to advance this case from its regular place on the calendar having been granted last week.

This case is brought to test the constitutionality, both under the constitution of the United States and of the State of Ohio, of the act passed by the legislature of the State of Ohio creating a board of motion picture censors in that state. It was pointed out to the court that this case is of the greatest importance to all concerned in the motion picture industry, and that the millions of people of this country who daily go to the motion picture houses, and that the Supreme Court of the United States should decide the question as to whether any government authority can rightfully impose a censorship of motion picture films.

An early decision is earnestly desired.
FAMOUS PLAYERS PRODUCE
"THE LOVE ROUTE"

The Famous Players Film Company will shortly begin the production of "The Love Route," by Edward Peple, author of "The Spitfire" and the recent success, "A Pair of Sixes." The film version of this noted modern romance will be produced in the West with Marguerite Clark, the dainty star of "Wildflower," who left last week for Los Angeles, to appear in a forthcoming production for the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Photoplay Company, to which company the Famous Players loaned the services of their star for a limited time. Allan Dwan, of the producing staff of the Famous Players, will leave this week for the coast, where he will join Marguerite Clark and begin work on the production.

WHERE IS JULIUS WRIGHT, FORMERLY OF BERMUDA?

A request has come to the office of Motion Picture News for information concerning the whereabouts of Julius Wright, formerly in the motion picture business in Bermuda. He left there in July, intending to settle in the United States, probably in one of the smaller cities.

A telegram addressed to his present location will be gratefully received by A. I. Keeler, 3105 Midvale avenue, Germantown, Pa., who is particularly anxious to communicate with Mr. Wright. If any of our readers knows where the missing man can be found, they are requested to get in touch with Mr. Keeler at once.

CENSORS O. K. TWO ALLIANCE FILMS

The National Board of Censorship, after reviewing the five reels of the new Excelsior Feature Film Company, release "When Fate Leads Trump," from the book of John B. Hymer, made the curt remark "nothing to cut." "That is the way we like to have things," said William H. Wright. "We ourselves carefully consider every detail of a story before we actually produce it, and do not submit it for approval until we are certain that it warrants that approval."

The National Board also reviewed the Favorite Players Film Company's new release, "The Man Who Could Not Lose," taken from Richard Harding Davis' story of the same name, and passed the entire play exactly as it stands. Both are released through Alliance.

MINOR IN "HOME SWEET HOME"

Frank Minor is a comedian who has earned quite a reputation in various musical comedy and vaudeville successes, principally as the lead in "September Morn," which enjoyed quite a run in Chicago theatres this year.

Mr. Minor was given Dave Lewis' part in the production and was acknowledged by the press to be better than the original. Like many other stars, Mr. Minor is giving some of his attention to motion picture work, having arranged with the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation of Chicago, to appear in a series of one-reel comedies. His first production, which is to be released early in November, is called "Home Sweet Home."

Milwaukee's Commission Seeks Screen Aid
Civic Body Requests Members of Local Association to Help Promulgate "Safety First" Campaign Through Use of Slides

SPECIAL TO MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Milwaukee, Nov. 16.

ONE of Milwaukee's biggest and most influential organizations has formally recognized motion pictures as one of the most powerful agencies for educating the people available. The Milwaukee Public Safety Commission, through one of its members, Charles Lamb, appealed to the local exhibitors, at the regular meeting of the Milwaukee Exhibitors' Association, held in the Plankington House club room, to assist that organization in their "Safety First" work.

Mr. Lamb asked that the Milwaukee exhibitor run in his house a "Safety First" slide, and stated that the exhibitor, reaching as he does thousands of people every day, could assist materially in the "Safety First" campaign. The local exhibitors agreed. They were also asked to appoint a representative to the commission, and they bestowed this honor upon Manager George Fischer, of the Alhambra Theatre.

Great interest is being taken in the annual election of the Exhibitors' association, which takes place December 4. The election promises to be a hotly contested one, as a number of aspirants are in the field for each office.

Cosmos the Latest to Join the Alliance Program
Company's First Release Under New Arrangement Will Be "Hearts and Flowers," With Mrs. Thomas Whiffen as Central Figure

FOR a week there has been considerable speculation as to what concern the Cosmos Feature Film Corporation intended to release through, having re-entered the producing field. Word now comes from authoritative sources that the Cosmos productions will reach the public and exhibitor exclusively under the banner of the Alliance Program. It is expected that negotiations will be closed within a few days.

The Cosmos company are to produce and deliver to the Alliance Program one production in five parts every six weeks. Arrangements have just been concluded whereby the latter concern will release on November 30 "Hearts and Flowers," in which Mrs. Thomas Whiffen makes her debut as a screen star.

Mrs. Whiffen, who now enjoys the distinction of being the "Grand Old Lady of the American Stage," needs no introduction to theatre-goers in any part of the country, which ought to come from the son. But no matter how badly her boy has acted, he is still her boy and his happiness is her happiness. She brings up the two young people together and bids them be happy.

Cashing in on Europe’s War

By Arthur J. Lang

(Export Manager, Nicholas Power Company)

There Always Have Been Foreign Markets, but They Have Been Neglected—The War Has Forced American Manufacturers to Pay Attention to Them, and Made It Easier Than Ever Before to Sell American Goods There—Aggressiveness, Intelligence and Patience All That Are Necessary

BUSINESS is always conducted for the profit there is in it, whether you are selling goods in Bangkok, Siam, or Bangor, Me. There is only one excuse for American film producers going after foreign trade, and that is the profits involved. A good start on the road to the highest good or greatest economic benefit to this country, but no manufacturer is so patriotic—or so foolish—as to attempt to contribute to that volume of export trade at a loss to himself.

It is because the money and effort invested will pay dividends that the film manufacturers of this country in increasingly large number are seeking foreign markets.

The people that inhabit this world are human beings first and citizens of any particular country next. That is why motion pictures have taken a hold on them in every quarter of the globe and why they will pay to see American photo plays. Tastes may differ in various countries, but only on the surface.

Motion pictures are enjoyed in every civilized country, and by that I do not mean—as some of our citizens might think—the United States and some of the European countries. I refer to countries such as China and Japan, which have a civilization older than that of Europe, and the countries in South America, which have, for instance, a literature older than that of the United States, where they do not measure art or pleasure or any other of life’s most desirable features merely by the cost but by inherent worth and yet where they are always willing to pay the price if they can get the value.

The Opportunity Has Always Existed

Actually speaking, no opportunity for American producers to sell films abroad has ever been created by the war, for the very good reason that the opportunity has always existed.

There have always been foreign markets, though practically neglected ones. The war has, however, done two things. It has forced the attention of our manufacturers on these markets, and has made it a far easier than it ever was before to introduce their goods into these markets.

Audiences in Asia, Oceania, Africa and Latin-America have always appreciated American films when they have had the opportunity to see them, which has not been very often. The theatre owners and managers in those parts of the world are just like their brethren of this country—anxious to please their patrons—and for that reason have always been possible customers.

But American producers until very recently have not gone after them, have not attempted to show them that American films were at least as good as those obtained from Europe.

In spite of that fact, foreign exchanges and theatre owners have occasionally come to us for films, and usually they have come in the only way they knew how—through the medium of the American export commission houses—because they were not in touch with any of the producers themselves.

The results of the latter business obtained in this way will be referred to further on in this article, but it might be mentioned here that commission houses as a rule have been charging the highest prices for the cheapest, poorest and oldest films they could obtain.

The American Producer’s Great Chance

The great chance for the American film producer lies in the fact that the neutral markets have been cut off from their usual sources of supply, or that these sources are now greatly hampered in meeting the demand. The extent to which European manufacturers of all lines have been in some cases retarded, and in many cases reduced to nothing, is too well known by this time to require more than passing comment here.

The purpose of this article is the application of these well-known conditions to American film producers. The opportunity that has always existed has been magnified a hundred fold. The markets that were always there are now easier to approach.

Foreign buyers of films have been in the habit of buying from Europe, and it would take particularly strong and convincing arguments to make them change to American films under ordinary conditions.

That this would be quite possible for aggressive and enterprising film producers is just as true as it is of manufacturers of many other lines that have been successfully introduced in foreign markets in spite of the keenest kind of competition from European manufacturers who had long occupied a monopoly in the field and in spite, than the fact that aside from such questions as quality, price or excellent treatment by European manufacturers, tradition itself has been strengthened by the latter by buyers who, as a rule, are steadfast in their business relations as they are in their friendships. But all this has been changed.

You do not have to argue now with foreign film buyers that American films are easily the equal of those of European make or that you will be found fully as intelligent and as fair in your dealings as are the European producers.

The neutral markets are looking to us to supply their needs, and they are ready to buy our films just as they are ready to buy all other lines with which we are in a position to supply them.

Your principal competitors now are not the European film producers, but your fellow American producers.

Any concern that is willing to devote a reasonable proportion of intelligent effort can market its films, not only for the present, but can put its foreign business on a basis from which European competition will find it impossible to shake it after the war.

Two Methods of Seeking Foreign Trade

In general way there are two methods of seeking foreign trade.

One is to go after it direct and the other is to sell through—or, more correctly speaking, to—export commission merchants.

The latter is probably the easiest way in ordinary circumstances and the hardest way at present, as commission houses have been seriously affected financially as a result of the war. It is also the most unsatisfactory method at any time.

To illustrate—suppose a large producer sold all his films for use in the United States to a distributor over whom he had no control, that there was no connection between the two beyond that of buyer and seller, and that the producer did not know and had no means of learning to whom the distributor was selling.

This would be considered a most unsatisfactory situation from the standpoint of the producer. If at any time, because of a disagreement over even some minor detail or because the distributor could obtain another line of films at a lower cost, the distributor decided not to handle the first producer’s films any longer, the latter would have to start in absolutely fresh in building up a clientele.

This is exactly the position any producer is in who sells to a commission house and imagines he is doing an export business. American manufacturers of many lines have discovered this fact to their sorrow. The most successful exporting manufacturers, regardless of the nature of their product, are those who seek direct trade relations with buyers of their goods in other lands.
To say that it is easy to get foreign trade means that it is easy for the man of intelligence, because there are many things to learn, and while much export knowledge may be bought in one form or another, much of it must be learned by experience. Moreover, sound judgment must invariably be used.

There are three essentials to building up an export business. In the order of what I consider their importance, they are aggressiveness, intelligence, and patience.

I have known manufacturers who have started an export campaign by advertising and because in reply to inquiries they have not returned intelligent letters telling the prospective purchaser just what he wanted to know, they have declared it was impossible to sell their goods in other countries.

Yet other manufacturers making the same kind of goods have made tremendous successes by following up their opportunities carefully and systematically.

Only Surface Details Differ

It is only in surface details that there is any difference in trying to sell to John Gordon in Boston or to Juan Gonzalez in Buenos Aires.

You make your appeal to the latter in Spanish instead of in English; it takes longer for an exchange of letters consummating a sale of your films to him and longer for your films to reach him after they are shipped. But the sale should be just as profitable to you, and his money, after being translated into United States gold, is just as good as that of John Gordon.

On the other hand, your films are just as valuable to him and just as fresh and interesting to the theatre patrons of Buenos Aires as if they had been projected down there within a few days of their production.

In dealing with Latin-American business men I have found them as enterprising and at least as honest as the business men of this country. They are exceedingly appreciative of anything you do for them and they never fail to show their appreciation by buying from you to the limit of their needs.

Back of the three essentials for developing export business—aggressiveness, intelligence and patience—film manufacturers must obtain knowledge of the markets and make use of that knowledge in a systematic sales campaign. In export trade, as in the domestic field, this requires publicity.

Fortunately for the producers, both publicity and detail information concerning all the world's markets may be obtained from the same source at a minimum expense.

The greatest institution for the development of American exports is the National Association of Manufacturers, which has a well organized foreign trade department, while "Export American Industries," the official organ of the association, is a handsome and well edited publication that reaches all the leading buyers throughout the world.

Value of the Association to Exporters

Mr. Steven De Czesnak, of the association, who is publisher of "Export American Industries" (30 Church street), is an authority on export trade and has been devoting much of his time to the opportunities of the export of American films.

The association has more than 1,500 correspondents in various parts of the world who keep the foreign trade department and "Export American Industries" fully informed at all times as to local conditions. The association has a foreign trade library and records that have been accumulating for the last twenty years and which are kept up to date in every particular. This organization also has a translation bureau that is without any qualification the best in the United States.

With publicity and service of this character there is no reason why our film producers cannot start after foreign trade in the right way and conduct it properly at every step of the journey toward export profits.

There are many other moves to be made in the game that space does not permit telling here, such as correspondence campaigns supplementing your advertising plans, etc. But each move can be learned when the time comes to make it, and can be learned in such a way that there is no possibility of mistake.

American producers have foreign markets to sell to; they have an unparalleled opportunity to introduce their goods into these markets; they have unsurpassed advantages for formulating and developing sound methods for the sales attack.

All that they need supply is aggressiveness and intelligence, seasoned with just a little patience, to be rewarded by the merry tune of export profits jingling in their pockets.

PHOTOPLAY AUTHORS START WAR ON SCENARIO SCHOOLS

Los Angeles, Nov. 16.

MEMBERS of the Photoplay Authors' League have taken up an aggressive fight on the schools pretending to teach scenario writing. Besides devoting considerable space in the national publication, The Script, issued from the office of the secretary monthly, a committee has been appointed to try and stop the schools from advertising. Russell Smith, of the Majestic-Reliance scenario department, is chairman of this committee, and has written to publishers, after investigating the schools, condemning every one. The advertisements appear in all classes of publications except the journals of the motion picture trade.

Another matter being taken up by the Pacific Coast branch is that of campaigning for the Willis Bill which will make possible the application of the copyright laws to scenarios.

KANSAS STATE LEAGUE ELECTS OFFICERS

Kansas City, Mo., Nov. 18.

At the annual meeting of the Kansas branch of the Moving Picture Exhibitors League of America, held in Kansas City, it was decided to hold the next annual at Emporia, which is more centrally located for the benefit of all the members. It was decided that the dues should be 50 cents per month, and among the usual routine of resolutions and suggestions, the conclusion of this branch of the League is that too much melodrama is now being produced.

The following officers were elected: National vice-president, Fred Savage, Hutchinson, Kan., president of the Kansas Branch; W. B. Moore, Galena; first vice-president, E. E. Frazier, Pittsburgh; second vice-president, Howard Dull, Augusta; secretary, P. J. Concannon, Emporia; treasurer, W. H. Willey, Mullberry; sergeant-at-arms, Roy Bingham, Lindsborg.
The Evils of the Coupon System

By George E. Carpenter

There have been considerable discussion in Motion Picture News pro and con (mostly con) on the pass problem. Consequently, as a horrible object lesson, permit the writer to present
Salt Lake City.

In Denver and the Nickle city of the West,
Salt Lake certainly has the dubious distin-cution of being the Deadhead city of America.

The scheme is being tried elsewhere, consequently the advice to those about to succumb to the sirens tones of the circulation manager's argument, is the immortal one given to those about to marry by the London "Punch"—"Don't!"

Two years ago Salt Lake was the best show town for its size anywhere. Today everybody is losing money because the "showmen" are giving away 40,000 free tickets every week!

And this in a city of 100,000 population!

In the meantime the newspapers advertised the fact that their subscribers could see six new shows each week, provided they brought their coupons to the office and exchanged them for seats.

The writer has demonstrated that it is possible to secure free seats without the coupons, provided there is a coupon on the top of the stack.

Just as an example, he received a ticket on the strength of one coupon and two dentist's ads clipped from the same edition, such was the rush for tickets that the young man dispensing the favors did not have time to check up!

Early in the spring when conditions became intolerable, those managers who declined to enter the coupon scheme withdrew their advertising from the offfending newspapers—with the usual result, you can't buck the newspapers.

Of course, the theory is that if you give a man a free ticket to your show he will go and become a recruit in the army of boosters.

However, Salt Lake managers have overplayed their hand, and have created a Frankenstein, who will take his amusements solely via the coupon route.

Originally the idea was to issue free tickets for matinées only so that the children could go and then talk over the great show at home across the dinner table, thereby enthuising father and mother, who would promptly go in the evening.

But the man whose business was suffering came in and threw down the bars, and now coupons at the majority of houses are good any old time.

The writer has no interest in any Salt Lake theatre, and has no axe to grind; he simply has set forth the facts as they appear to the man on the side lines.

To provide amusement for this 100,000 people there are one legitimate, one combination, three vaudeville, one stock and eight motion picture houses, three of which seat over 1,000, one nearly 3,000.

To outline events that brought about this remarkable state of affairs would require considerable space.

In brief, however, a bright circulation manger on one of the daily papers conceived the idea of making an arrangement with a prominent vaudeville house, and the largest motion picture theatre, whereby coupons were inserted in the paper. Coupons clipped on three consecutive days entitled the holder to a seat in the theatre.

In exchange for this privilege, the newspaper gave 500 inches of advertising every 30 days to the party of the second part on the contract.

Naturally the opposition, both in newspaper and amusement circles, got busy, with the result that the list of theatres indulging in the coupon system soon included
Pantages, the Utah, the American, the Rex and the Liberty, two vaudeville, one stock and three of the

The theatres standing pat became the target, until they yielded for mercy. They all came back into the advertising columns, but their ads against the full-page displays, special stories and cuts exploiting the wares of the coupon crowd made a very feeble display.

Marcus Loew's Empress, upon the inauguration of the new policy of continuous photoplays and vaudeville, started out in a fashion calculated to bring the cruel war toward a showdown.

Tickets racked for the entire week were placed in the most prominent dry goods store, and all one had to do was to walk into the store and ask for tickets and they were forthcoming, free. Entire families visited the Empress as guests of the dry goods store, and the police had to regulate the mob outside the theatre every night.

The managers who went so gaily into this scheme are now in the unenviable position of the man who had the bull by the tail—they are afraid to let go.

In the meantime the show business in Salt Lake is a horrible object lesson in frenzied advertising and weekly losses.

He herewith has set forth conditions in Salt Lake City as a warning to any exhibitor who may be approached by his local newspaper on a similar scheme.

If he gets in on any such scheme, his opposition will in all probability tie up with a rival newspaper. Then the rest will follow and chaos will result until only the man with the longest purse will eventually weather the storm.

The coupon system has been operated in Salt Lake for nearly a year past, and has resulted in more bad blood, financial loss and general disorderization in the show business than can ever be repaired.

Wheeler Resigns as Head of Philadelphia League

Special to Motion Picture News

Philadelphia, Nov. 18.
Mr. Wheeler, owing to press of duties as state president, has resigned as president of the Philadelphia League. As yet no successor has been elected.

There is talk of an Exhibitors' hall early in December, but plans are as yet in abeyance. A decision will be probably reached at the next meeting of the League.
California Organizer Increases Membership

Cory, State Secretary, Makes Five Hundred Mile Auto Trip and Brings Into the Fold Four-fifths of Managers Canvassed

San Francisco, Nov. 16.

STATE censorship of the same order as that now effective in Ohio, Sunday closing of all theatres and places of amusement, and prohibition of children under sixteen years of age from attending motion picture theatres unless accompanied by their parents or legally appointed guardians are provided in bills now prepared which will be introduced at the next session of the California Assembly meeting within the next few months.

In fact, the bills have been printed and placed on file for public perusal as required by a California law.

With this fact known exhibitors generally are waking up to the need of a perfect organization, composed of all the motion picture theatre owners in the state, and the campaign now being conducted by W. A. Cory, state secretary and organizer, it is believed fully 80 per cent. of the exhibitors will be induced to become either members of the League at large or affiliate with one of the five locals.

The campaign has been in progress now three weeks. Mr. Cory recently left San Francisco for an over-state auto trip, to take in practically every city or town in which there is a motion picture theatre. The first week was spent along the Pacific coast, between San Francisco and Los Angeles, during which time he visited every exhibitor in towns along the Southern Pacific Railroad, covering a distance of more than five hundred miles, and securing initiation fees and advance dues from four-fifths of the men he saw.

Arriving in Los Angeles, Mr. Cory, in company with Judge A. P. Tugwell, president of the Los Angeles local, visited cities outside of Los Angeles and in Los Angeles county, and secured applications for membership from practically all the exhibitors.

At the regular monthly meeting of the local League preliminary plans were made for work here in this city. As all arrangements could not be made at this meeting, another was held later at the office of President Tugwell, when it was decided to call a meeting of all exhibitors, by explaining in detail just what legislation is known to be pending, and at this meeting to unite all factions and theatre men in the one organization, the League.

All members of the Theatrical Managers' Association, affiliated with the national organization perfected by the Box Office Attraction Company, and all downtown exhibitors who have recently formed an organization for the purpose of keeping all from paying extra charges demanded by one exchange for two-reel comedies, will be invited to attend this meeting and unite with the League.

Every member of the League as the present time is serving on a committee for new members, and within the next few days it is expected that a majority of the local theatre men will become members.

"As Motion Picture News has said editorially, time after time," President Tugwell told the members of the League, "organization is the only means for us to save our business. In other sections just such conditions as confront us now have caused exhibitors to see the need. The time is ripe and we are going to have the greatest League of any state in the union by the time the Assembly of California is called to order."

FAMOUS PLAYERS WILL RE-OPEN COAST STUDIO

The Famous Players Film Company have effected plans to re-establish their studio in Los Angeles, where they operated all last winter and Spring, and where were produced such Pickford classic as "Hearts Adrift" and "Tess of the Storm Country."

Albert A. Kaufman, studio manager of the Famous Players, has left for Los Angeles, where he will take command of the producing force and manage the studio. En route to the coast Mr. Kaufman will stop off in most of the principal cities to study film conditions as they apply to the Famous Players program.

Marguerite Clark will be the first Famous Players star to appear in a subject produced at the Western studio, plans for her presentation in "The Pretty Sister of Jose" having already been consummated. Allen Belasco and others. He counts among his successes the many leads in "Within the Law," "Divorcee," and "The Vanishing Bride." Mr. Estabrook has been identified with many other Broadway productions, including William Collier in "The Dictator," Blanche Walsh in "The Straight Road," Arnold Daly in "The Boys of Company B," Joe Weber in "Hip Hip Hurray," Holbrook Blinn in "The Boss," Grace George in "Jim's Marriage," and Cyril Scott in "The Fatted Calf."

SAN DIEGO FIRM IS MAKING LOCALS AND INDUSTRIALS

Stineman and Farr, San Diego, Cal., have been making local event, industrial and educational films for the Chamber of Commerce of that city and also for the Panama-California Exposition, to be held in 1915, celebrating the completion of the Panama Canal.

The Maya Film Company has just been incorporated to absorb the interests of the two men, who were engaged as commercial photographers, with offices in the Timken Building, San Diego.

In fulfillment of the intenion of the new company to do commercial work, including industrial films. In addition to this the company will produce travel and animal pictures, taken in the tropics. The firm has in preparation a picture of a spectacular nature.

BELMORE WILL REMAIN WITH VITAGRAPH

In denial of the reports that he had arranged to direct for another company, Lionel Belmore states most emphatically that he will resume his directorship with the Vitagraph Company as soon as his present theatrical contract expires.

ESTABROOK JOINS FILM RANKS

Howard Estabrook is the latest of the Broadway stars to join the ranks of the photo-players. Mr. Estabrook plays the lead of Travers Gladwin in George Kleine's film version of the Cohan and Harris success, "Officer 666."

Mr. Estabrook has appeared under the management of William A. Brady, David

ALBERT KAUFMAN

Dwan, of the producing staff of the Famous Players, will accompany Mr. Kaufman to the coast studio, where he will be stationed.

ECLAIR IN MARKET FOR SCENARIOS

The Eclair Film Company, Inc., whose producing forces are located in Tucson, Ariz., is in the market for good one-reel Western comedies, and one and two-reel Western dramas.

The company is not in a position to film scenes calling for bodies of water or elaborate costuming.

All scenarios should be addressed with stamped envelope for return, to the scenario department of the Eclair Film Company, Inc., 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York City.

HOWARD ESTABROOK

EDITOR'S NOTE.—It is the desire of "Motion Picture News" to include under this heading novel advertising ideas, successful schemes in the management, decoration and equipment of the theatre—everything, in fact, done by the exhibitor to stimulate his trade. We invite every exhibitor to write us about any new enterprise he has; also to come to us for advice or information along any line. Address: Editor, "Motion Picture News," 220 West Forty-second Street, New York City.

THE GLAMOUR OF A FIVE DOLLAR GOLD PIECE

THE Crystal, on State street, New Haven, Conn., believes that there is no better way of drawing patronage than by offering inducements in the form of cash.

Accordingly, each week sees in that house a drawing for a five-dollar gold piece. The day afternoon is set aside regularly for this drawing, and as a rule the theatre is well filled. Mr. Mongillo, proprietor and manager of the house, has shown himself to be an enterprising business man and again, and is finding that his various boosting schemes are bringing results.

PLAIN BUT EFFECTIVE FOLDERS FOR COMING PICTURES

THE Orpheum Theatre, Canton, Ohio, has worked out the individual problem of local advertising by the use of plain but effective announcements for distribution among the audience.

The management has tried with great success a four leaf folder of buff colored paper containing brief descriptions of coming films. Care has been taken to avoid anything gaudy in its make up. Simple type telling in a few words the main points of each picture, and insures the attention of the public.

THREE SHEETS LARGE ENOUGH FOR THIS EXHIBITOR

DESPITE the fact that every other motion picture house in the downtown district of Washington, D. C., is flying or displaying huge posters, the Leader favors the small 3-sheet displays.

"It is only quite recently that I have used the 6-sheet poster, and then I only use one such display against the inner wall of the theatre. I don't care for it myself, but the public seems to wish it. I have no desire to hide the artistic lines of my theatre front with posters," said Nat Glaser, manager of the Leader.

USES VACANT STORES FOR LOBBY DISPLAYS

THE West End Lyric theatre, Kingshighway and Euclid avenue, St. Louis, which is in the extreme west end of the city, calls the attention of the crowds in the downtown shopping district to its program by a display of photographs of the screen players in its daily bill, which are mounted in lobby frames and set up in the windows of vacant stores.

THE Lobby DISPLAY FOR "SALOMY JANE" USED BY THE BROADWAY THEATRE, OAKLAND, CAL.

AN EXHIBITOR’S MANIFESTO TO HIS PATRONS

CHARLES M. A. SMITH, managing the Adele Theatre, which opened at Eatonton, Ga., on November 2, starts his house off with a printed program that would do justice to most any concern. Mr. Smith presents a sixteen-page program, bulging with advertisements that must more than pay for the expense of getting it out.

In announcing the policy of his theatre Mr. Smith says: "We will endeavor to create always—to offer at all times—only such entertainment as will be consistent with the dignity of American manhood. Our house is a theatre for mothers, daughters, sisters and wives, where the purity of their thought will be conserved above all things."

An enterprising feature of the program is the following warning, conspicuously displayed:

"WARNING.—Always bear in mind that in all of the accidents that have happened in opera houses, halls, etc., more people have been injured because they lost their heads and attempted to rush out of the building instead of walking out of the exits than have been otherwise burned or injured. In case of accident or anything else in a public building—WALK, don’t run or rush to get out.

"This building has exits on three sides, and the entire house CAN BE VACATED IN LESS THAN TWO MINUTES if you follow this advice—WALK—as we have, in the construction, the world-wide slogan of 'safety first' worked out to the limit."

AN EXPERIMENT IN HIGHER PRICES

THE management of the Mary Anderson theatre, Louisville, is experimenting to determine how higher-priced motion pictures will appeal to the public.
Philadelphia Ball Set For December 8

Exhibitors at Special Meeting Decide on This Date for Their Second Annual Function, to Be Held in Horticultural Hall

Philadelphia, Nov. 18.

A special meeting of the Exhibitors' League was held to give the second ball of the league on Tuesday, December 8. Jay Emanuel, manager of Ridge Avenue Theatre, in spite of his protests, was made chairman of the ball committee.

Mr. Emanuel is determined to make this ball even more successful than the one held last year.

The affair will be given in Horticultural Hall, one of the largest and most attractive ballrooms in the city.

The committee appointed to assist the chairman is as follows: Nat Fisher, Michael J. Walsh, David Sablosky, J. Pollon, M. Spears and Jack Delmar.

Already several pages of the program have been taken by advertisers, and a great many of the ardent motion picture patrons have signified their intention of being present at the ball in order to meet their film favorites.

A large delegation from the Lubin company will attend, and it is expected that many other photo-players working in the east will be present on this occasion.

The Reel Fellows' Club had a very enjoyable time on Wednesday evening. As the guests of C. L. Perry, their president, and general manager of The Stanley Company's theatres, they were tendered a box party at the Globe Theatre, a recent addition to the vaudeville and motion picture field.

After the performance the club adjourned to its rooms on Arch street, where the evening was rounded off with song and story and other refreshment. The announcement that Mr. Perry would give these parties every few weeks was received with satisfaction by all.

"Little Lord Fauntleroy" a Juvenile Classic

All Traditions of the Various Roles in the Drama So Well Established Its Screen Reproduction Was Easy for Producers.

H. Agar Lyons as the Earl of Dorincourt, the fiery old grandfather, has produced as fine a type as any of his predecessors in the legitimate. The "Dearest" of Miss Jane Wells is thought by those who have seen the picture to be a sweet and wholesome characterization, well in keeping with tradition. It has a tenderness of its own.

Silas Hobbs, Mary Thomas and all the rest appear as old friends.

In the regular theatres sometimes a boy played Fauntleroy and sometimes a girl. About young Royston's characterization there is a certain suggestion of the freshness of youth which the girls of the legitimate were not able to give. Little Royston's work is said by film men to be quite as delightful as that of any in the park.

MARY PICKFORD TO LEAD GRAND MARCH

It is practically decided that Mary Pickford will lead the grand march of the annual ball of the Screen Club scheduled to take place at the Hotel Astor on Thanksgiving Eve.

Numerous applications for tickets have been received by the entertainment committee, and the affair this year will in all probability have a larger attendance than ever before.

NEW BOOK ON SCENARIO WRITING

A book of interest to the film trade, especially to those who write scripts, has just been issued. It is by Catherine Carr, chief scenario editor of the Kinetophone, and is published by the Harris-Jordon Publishing Company. The publishers predict a ready sale for the volume, which is called "The Art of Photoplay Writing," and look for a big edition.

and stage directors, and the public has been called upon to put its seal of approval or disapproval upon their efforts. Dorincourt, Mr. Hobbs the grocer, Thomas the butcher, Higgins the tenant farmer, and "Dearest" are all well established types in the legitimate theatre.
"Mrs. Wiggs" Soon Ready for the Public

The Alco Film Corporation announces November 30 as the date for the release of Beatriz Michelena in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," the second production of the California Motion Picture Corporation. The films have just been received and were shown privately in the projection room of the releasing corporation.

Those who have seen this second production say that the great success of the first California production, "Salomy Jane," will be duplicated. The star is the same, the photography is just as effective and the same artistic supervision is responsible for "Mrs. Wiggs."

The photoplay was founded upon Anne Crawford Flexner's dramatization of Alice Hegan Rice's novels, "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" and "Lovey Mary." By special arrangement with the Liebler Company, the California Motion Picture Corporation is enabled to present this picturization.

A strong cast supports Beatriz Michelena, Blanche Chapman, who played Mrs. Wiggs in the Liebler production, is in the title role in the photoplay. She was sent to the California Motion Picture Corporation by the Liebler Company. Andrew Robson, who was Yuba Bill in "Salomy Jane," is Hiram Wiggs, while House Peters, who was "the man" in "Salomy Jane," is Bob Stuart.

The circus scenes are barely mentioned in the legitimate drama, but in the photoplay they are shown in detail. They furnish, in fact, the beginning of a series of absorbing adventures. These concern Lovey Mary and her small charge, Little Tommy. Lovey Mary is detained by King, the owner of the circus, who is her uncle by marriage.

One of the strongest scenes in "Mrs. Wiggs" is that in which the girl creeps into the wagon in which King and his wife are asleep. A locket in King's possession establishes the identity of Lovey Mary as the heiress. It is necessary above all else for her to obtain this locket without arousing King.

The strong dramatic element is continued in the capture by King of Lovey Mary, after Stuart is out of the way. She is hidden in the cellar of a resort, a prisoner behind steel doors. Stuart is on the trail, however, and finds that she is a prisoner. He disguises himself, gains admittance to the resort. Then follows a series of fights in which Peter's work is as effective as in "Salomy Jane." He forces his way through the doors and then encounters King and his aides. These he dispatches one by one.

The producers have made this fight as realistic as possible. They leave nothing to chance, and have worked the details out carefully. The result is that the fight appears very natural. These scenes were not in the play when it was shown in the legitimate theatres.

They are shown with a rapid change of scene and quick movement possible only in a photoplay.

Pickford Will Play "Dawn of a Tomorrow"

The Famous Players Film Company have just secured the film rights of another important dramatic success, "The Dawn of a Tomorrow," the great drama of an oppressed girl's splendid faith and triumph, by Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett, which will be utilized as a vehicle for Mary Pickford.

"The Dawn of a Tomorrow" created a distinct sensation on the stage, and is bound to extend its wholesome influence in a much further direction as a photoplay. Mary Pickford may well be expected to make the beautiful characterization of Glad an artistic and powerful conception.

"Satan Sanderson" to be Screened by Rolfe

The well-known novel "Satan Sanderson," by Hallie Erminie Rives, has been decided upon as the next photoplay production of B. A. Rolfe Photo Plays, Inc., to be released by Alco after Mabel Taliaferro in "The Three of Us." The chief feminine role, Jessica, will be played by a well-known star, whose name will be made known later.

First Frohman Famous Players Film Announced

The first release of the Famous Players Film Company in association with Charles Frohman, following the affiliation effected between this company and the celebrated producer last summer, will be John Emerson in the recent theatrical success, "The Conspiracy," a detective comedy-drama.

John Emerson will portray the role of Winthrop Clavering, the eccentric author-detective, originally created by him in the stage presentation of the play. Included in the unusually important supporting cast will be Lois Meredith, an important drawing card in her own right, having been the star of the recent dramatic success, "Help Wanted."
GRANDEE DESCENDANT IN NEXT CALIFORNIA FILM
Don Nicholas Covarrubias, descendant of the old Spanish grandees who ruled California in the romantic early days, and the man who successfully impersonated Don Gaspar de Portola, the reputed discoverer of San Francisco Bay, in the famous Portola festival in San Francisco in 1909, has just been signed by the California Motion Picture Corporation as a film actor. He will appear in the Corporation’s next play off of early California.

"Don Nick," as his many friends in California call him, is a type. Tall, straight, dignified, a commanding eye, a bear cut in the fashion of the old conquistadores, a skilled horseman, he hardly needs a costume to recall pictures of California’s proud rulers "before the Gringo came."

In the Portola celebration five years ago, Don Nick, clad in leather doublet, tall boots, slashed jacket and ostrich-plumed hat, rode a charger through the streets of San Francisco at the head of one of the gayest processions that ever marched through that city. His horse wore a saddle studded with silver dollars.

DON NICHOLAS COVARARRUBIAS

Ever since he impersonated Don Gaspar de Portola, Don Nick has desired to repeat the adventurous career of the gallant Spanish explorer before the motion picture camera. Plans are not perfected, but there is more than a possibility that the California Motion Picture Corporation will gratify this ambition. But, at all events, Covarrubias will be shown in the next big film dealing with a western subject.

LOS ANGELES THEATRE OWNER WEDS
Abe Gore, a member of the firm of Gore Brothers, owners of four theatres in Los Angeles, and Miss Ruth Ringer, were united in marriage Monday evening, November 2. The wedding was witnessed by about 50 guests, among them many of the Coast film men.

Lasky Company Releases “The Circus Man”

In addition to Mr. Roberts, the cast includes Florence Dagmar, Jode Mullally, Monroe Salisbury, James Neill and Mabel Van Buren.

“Cabiria” Rights in Twenty States Closed

Entire Country Soon to Be Disposed of—Werba & Luescher, Lesser, Greene and Fichtenberg Among the Buyers and Bookers

TWENTY states have either been sold outright or the booking rights granted on “Cabiria,” the Itala multiple, and active negotiations now in progress promise that two or three weeks will see the whole country contracted for.

Werba & Luescher, Inc., will take care of the bookings in New York and New Jersey. Their office is in the New York Theatre Building. Sol Lesser of San Francisco, will place the super-feature in that territory. W. E. Greene, the New England exchange man, has been entrusted with the New England bookings, to be directed from Greene’s office, at 162 Tremont street, Boston.

Frank Samuels has just gone to Chicago to begin operations in Illinois, Wisconsin and Indiana. Mr. Samuels will be particularly remembered for his association with both the first and second Motion Picture Expositions in Grand Central Palace in a managerial capacity.

Harry Bryan will take care of eastern Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland and the District of Columbia, from offices at 1316 Vine street, Philadelphia. Mr. Bryan has gained experience as manager of rental offices for W. H. Swanson, George Kleine, All Star Film Rental Company of New York and others.

DAVID DEFIES BRADDOCK, THE CIRCUS MAN

"Circus Man," with Theodore Roberts, was released November 19, and will probably be seen for the first time in New York at the Strand Theatre.

The picture was staged by Oscar Apfel, and in order to get the proper circus atmosphere and the exact locale, Mr. Apfel and the Lasky players journeyed for two weeks with Barnum & Bailey’s circus, using the circus equipment each morning for the making of the production. Readers will remember the scene outside the circus tent.

SCENE FROM "THE MAKING OF HIM"
(Lubin—November 25)
MINNEAPOLIS EXCHANGE NOTES

C. GRAHAM, general manager of the Universal, spent a day in town last week. He stopped off on route to Chicago and reported business satisfactory in all the states he visited.

Julius Bernheim, of the Laemmle Film Service, Minneapolis, nephew of Carl Laemmle, returned from Europe last week. He left with the Laemmle party last spring and was held ever since the war broke out. Julius sure has a good many things of interest to tell these days, and he isn’t a bit singy about them, either.

The Annette Kellermann “Neptune’s Daughter” Company closed a very successful week’s engagement at the Metropolitan Opera House in Minneapolis, November 7.

The receipts, according to best obtainable information, ran way above those on “Ca-biria.” The Universal Booking Offices, looking after the Kellermann Company, surely must be very anxious to make a clean-up in a hurry. During the last few weeks not less than five men have arrived from New York to look after the different Kellermann companies and territories all over the Northwest.

E. H. Hoyt and Johnnie Shean are looking after Minnesota and Iowa. Charlie Ringsdorf is in Montana and North Dakota. Armstrong, the latest addition, is here as a sort of special representative. They all agree that business with the Kellermann pictures is excellent.

W. S. Preller, now manager of the World’s Film Corporation, has returned after a week’s trip to New York, and is now located in his new office.

FOX FILM COMPANY FORMED IN MILWAUKEE

PAPERS of incorporation have been filed by the Fox Film Attraction Company. The company is to be capitalized at $5,000, and R. C. Fox is named as general manager. According to Mr. Fox, the company will establish offices in this city and Minneapolis. Four of the Box Office Attraction Company’s features, “Children of the Ghetto,” “St. Elmo,” “Life’s Shop Window” and “Walls of Jericho,” will be handled by the new company for all of that territory.

ALLIANCE ADDS TO ITS EXCHANGES

THE Celebrated Film Players Company, of Chicago, which handles the Alliance Programme in Illinois, has added Indiana to its territory.

The Zenith Feature Film Company, of Duluth, one of the largest film concerns in the Northwest, has just signed contracts to exclusively control the Alliance output in Minnesota, Wisconsin and North and South Dakota.

KANE NOW WITH WORLD FILM CORPORATION

ONE of the “old heads” of the film business is Arthur S. Kane. His experience has been long, varied and successful. Exhibitor, exchange man and manufacturer, all three branches have been embraced in the activities of Mr. Kane, spanning the past eight years. Mr. Kane has just become assistant general manager of the World Film Corporation and will assume his new duties on November 30.

“The amounts theatres are willing to pay for films have increased enormously,” said Mr. Kane recently. “It merely is a question of how much the pictures will draw into the houses. It was not always that way. Seven years ago a firm I was associated with in St. Louis served a house with three reels of first run changed twice weekly at ten dollars per reel, or sixty dollars for the weekly service. There were periods as long as seventeen straight weeks when the proprietors divided one thousand dollars weekly from that theatre.

“Pretty good results from a sixty dollar film service. Furthermore, this house had been opened on a cash investment of one hundred and forty-five dollars; everything else was paid for out of the box office, that is, from the receipts after it got going.

“What a contrast today. An exhibitor has large sums of money tied up in his plant, fixed charges are going on at a tremendous rate and he no longer scruples at allotting more than ten or fifteen per cent of his total expenses to film.

“What it will pull into the house and what the after effect will be are now the determining factors, in what the theatre manager will expend. Everywhere houses clamor for attractions of merit and price has become the secondary consideration. One small concrete case will serve for illustration. A friend of mine who up to three or four months ago ran a fifty dollar service now pays more than one hundred and twenty-five dollars each and every week for films. This is typical of numberless theatres.”

During the past four years Mr. Kane has held the positions of branch manager, special representative and an assistant to the president with the General Film Company; district manager with the Mutual Film Corporation; and general manager of branches with the Eclectic Film Company.

K. C. BOOKING OPENS CHICAGO OFFICE

THE K. C. Booking Company, Inc., which is handling all of the productions of the Kinetophone, as well as several outside features, has opened an office in Chicago in the Mailers Building, at the southeast corner of Wabash and Madison.

The Chicago office will be under the direct supervision of K. C. Headquarters at 126-132 West Forty-sixth Street, New York, and will look after Kinetophone and K. C. business in Illinois and Wisconsin.

HUNTER SELLS OUT TO GOLD, SEATTLE

HARRY HUNTER, who went to Los Angeles in July and opened the Independent Film Exchange, which was later merged with the Union, owned by O. V. Traggardh, has sold his interest to Glen Speck, who has been with the exchange, and has gone to Seattle, where he expects to open an exchange.

Mr. Hunter also owned half interest in the Garden Grove theatre at Garden Grove, Cal., and one at Norwalk, Cal. He disposed of his interests there to his partner, Max Alpert.

LOUISVILLE MUTUAL IN NEW OFFICES

MANAGER FRANK E. HAMMER, of the Louisville office of the Mutual Film Corporation, is now located in his new quarters in the Alamo Theatre building. The Mutual has built up its business considerably in this territory since opening an office here about three months ago.
Balboa Offers $1,000 Prizes in Gold

Company Will Pay Screen Patrons a Tidy Sum for Correct Guess to Questions Illustrated in Twelve Feature Pictures

Long Beach, Cal., Nov. 16.

THE serial photoplay is magnetic because curious Americans, once their interest has been aroused in a story, like to know what becomes of the characters who have commanded their attention. If the first episode excites them, and the action is suspended at a point where the machinations of the villain have dangerously enmeshed the hero and the heroine, no audience will rest content until the rescue is complete. It is a simple matter then to create a continuity of thrilling incidents that will keep thousands in a state of nervous expectation.

The human problem that requires solution—the undecided question that cries for an answer—is doubtless even more attractive than the impersonal regard for the principals in a dramatic cast. This being true, it is beyond dispute that a combination of the two would possess irresistible charm and fascination.

Long before the most celebrated of these serial photoplays were launched, H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer, the principals in the Balboa Amusement Producing Company of Long Beach, Cal., were preparing a group of twelve human interest features, each to embrace a vital question of life. The first two of these have been produced and the staging of the others will follow immediately. Their length will vary from two to three thousand feet, and when completed one will be issued every month through a chain of trustworthy exchanges. The first, for instance, will involve a question everybody is familiar with in one form or another. It is an old, old story—as old as love, romance or marriage, but the world has been disagreeing about it ever since the days of Adam and Eve.

ALLIANCE EXCHANGE IN BROOKLYN

For the convenience of exhibitors on Long Island the Alliance has opened a fully equipped exchange at 1482 Broadway, Brooklyn. H. Grossman will be in charge, and it is expected that he will create to drop in and give him the “once over.”

This exchange will take care of Brooklyn, the entire of Long Island and will also be at the service of the exhibitors on Staten Island.

With thanks to Norman and Duffield theatres have signed yearly contracts for the Alliance Programme. In Manhattan the Odeon, New Law, and Palace theatres have joined the Alliance ranks. Last minute reports from out of town add to this list the Venice of Flushing, Proctor’s Troy, Park in Glen Falls, and the Central Park of Buffalo.

WORTHINGTON WITH BOX OFFICE IN QUAKER CITY

The Greater New York Film Rental Company, Philadelphia, of which Jack Levy is manager, has taken on the standard releases. Beginning November 10, the Lubin serial, “The Beloved Adventurer,” will be handled by this company.

Now it must be settled by the motion picture patrons of the United States—settled for once and for all time. It will be propounded in a strong two-reel drama by an all-star cast. The treatment will be a revelation to those who admire superb photography, brilliant scenes and masterful direction, and while ranking the very best and most absorbing features of the day, this photoplay will at the same time elucidate a mighty question that is begging the world for an answer. A trailer at the end of this poten picture will ask “Who Pays?”

Motion picture patrons of the country must say and to stimulate their active participation the Balboa Company will give one thousand dollars in gold for the nearest correct answers to the simple questions that the twelve pictures will illustrate. More than one year has been spent in assembling the manuscripts which have been contributed by a dozen of the best writers on this side of the Atlantic.

Deep and continuous thought has been devoted to making these plays, each rife with humanity, and to making sure that the Balboa Company has so far turned out. Twelve separate and distinct plots embodying twelve unrelated themes, are not easy to obtain, but they were secured by reading fully two thousand scenarios sent in from all over the country.

After the selections were made came the work of building and painting special scenery, hunting suitable locations and carrying the many important details connected with such a vast undertaking. The Balboa Company is now producing the ten remaining plays of this series and the public may look forward to a novel motion picture treat in the very near future. The company will not disappoint them.

C. L. Worthington will succeed J. A. Levy as manager of the Box Office Attractions. Mr. Worthington comes from Washington, where he successfully conducted the Washington branch of the Electric Film Company.

Previous to that, Mr. Worthington was the first manager of the special feature department of the General Film Company, in New York City.

ALCO WITH GOLDEN GATE IN FRISCO

The Alco Film Company has decided not to occupy the new quarters recently selected on Eddy street, but will establish headquarters with the Golden Gate Film Exchange, 234 Eddy street, San Francisco, Calif. The offices at this location are being remodeled, and additional space has been secured for the reception of film and poster stock.

VINE STILL AT BOSTON OFFICE

Contrary to the statement recently published, F. H. Vine, manager of the Eclectic Feature Film Exchange at Boston, has not resigned and is still on the job for Eclectic.
GRETCHEN LEDERER, who will play leads for the Frank Lloyd Rex Universal brand, is a graduate of the Cologne Conservatorio, where she studied for grand opera. After finishing the course she made a season's tour in America. It is the belief of the picture company proved to be too strong. She has since placed with Selig, Imp, German Kinematocolor and the New York Motion Picture Company producing companies. Her first appearance in the revolving globe pictures is that of Delphine, Duchess of Lutzburg, in the Terrance O'Rourke picture, "In the Winged Gods."

With the mercury playing up about the one hundred mark the Otis Turner Special Feature Company members during the past week frolicked in a Siberian snow storm at the Universal studio, in the making of "Called Back," a three reel picture from the Hugh Conway story.

The greatest difficulty the players had in presenting realism was to prevent the perspiration from showing while being bundled up in heavy cloaks, fur caps, robes, etc., during their ride into a specially built Siberian village in a sleigh drawn by four horses. Several tons of salt and five woolbags of confetti were used for the storm. The picture has been shipped East.

Sidney Ayers is a new member of the Universal directing company, with Tom Walsh as assistant director and Edna Maison playing leads. The first picture will be "On Desert Sands," with decidedly Western atmosphere.

Last Custer Survivor in Films

Alfred L. Chaplin, who has federal war department proofs that he is the only survivor of the Custer Massacre and who personally made a report to General Grant of the famous battle, has been engaged to play a featured part in a two-reel Western picture to be produced by Henry McRea at the new Universal City ranch.

Calder Johnstone, of the Universal scenario department, is spending a week with the Robert Leonard "Master Key" company now filming dock and marine scenes near San Francisco for the fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh installments of the serial by John Fleming Wilson.

Leigh Smith, formerly in charge of the Cleveland National Forest Reserve in Southern Ohio, has been employed to supervise Universal City. Only native plants and trees will be used. Arrangements have been made for two thousand trees of pine and red wood. The California lily, poppy and violet are to be used in the flower beds.

Marie Walsamp, of the 101 Bison U Company, was painfully clawed by King, the big lion at Universal zoo, last week, when the beast struck her shoulder with his hind foot while jumping over her body during the making of a picture. Five stitches were required.

The newly organized Rex company, directed by Frank Lloyd, began the production of its first picture, "The Gambler," last week. In this Lloyd played the name role, supported by George Larkin, of "Trey o' Hearts" fame, Gretchen Lederer, Helen Holmes and William Robbins. The scenario is by Ruth Ann Baldwin and the picture will consist of two reels. In this is shown that the better side of a man's nature, no matter what his vocation or environment predominate. It is a pretty story of good and evil playing against each other.

Director Lloyd Ingraham, of the U studio, has been trying a comedy for diversion, producing "Fatty's Infatuation" with Willard Gardner, Gertrude Short and George Court playing the leading parts in the love frolic. This picture will be released under the Joker brand.

The other Joker comedy made during the week was "A Mixed-up Honeymoon," under the direction of Allen Curtis.

Charles Ray and Enid Markey are playing the leads in "The Fortunes of War," a picture of the Mexican revolution being filmed at Inceville by Jay Hunt. The plot pertains to the efforts of an American to win the hand of a senorita whose father is opposed to the match. The picture will have a number of thrilling rides and hand-to-hand combats with swords and guns.

Scott Sidney has just put over "A Confidence Game" at the New York Motion Picture studio, in which a fortune teller and a detective are framed on a wealthy merchant who breaks with his son because of the latter's marriage. But the frame-up proves to be a weak one, and instead of being lucrative for the crooks, brings about a reconciliation of the family.

Inceville Superintendent Weds

E. H. Allen, general superintendent of the New York Motion Picture Company studio, and Miss Margaret Thompson, leading woman at the studio, culminated a pretty romance that began early this year, when Mr. Allen saved Miss Thompson from drowning, by marriage, November 16. The actress was swimming in the ocean in front of the studio when she was seized with cramps in her right arm. Allen, in his office near the beach, heard her cries for help.

The superintendent did not hesitate to remove his shoes, but plunged into the water and succeeded in swimming to the shore with the unconscious girl. Mr. and Mrs. Allen have been presented with a handsome silver service by the members of the Inceville producing company. Charles Swickard, formerly connected with several big Eastern theatrical organizations, has been added to the Inceville force of directors, increasing the total number now working there to eight. Mr. Swickard is now filming a story of the Kentucky hills.

"The Panther" and "In the Land of the Otter" are two pictures of the north woods just completed for the New York Motion Picture Company's brands by Walter Edwards. The first to do with the crimes suffered by a young hunter at the hands of a despot of the wilderness, in which Frank Borzage, Walter Edwards and Louise Glasm play the principal parts. A pretty picture of the sacrifices of a man of the timber land and trapping country are featured in a romance "In the Land of the Otter."

Universal City Adds Three Policemen

Los Angeles has added three mounted police to its force for patrolling New Universal City, the new officers are under the jurisdiction of the city department and the only difference in the uniform is that "U. C. M. P." appears on their caps.

Ethel, thestenographer of the “Bill” series, of the Mutual program, in number twelve now being made, thinks she is getting wealthy for sure, when she receives checks of big denomination. But it is learned the sender is an escaped maniac and not one of her employer’s clients as the name indicates. The title of this Bill is “Mr. Hadley’s Uncle.” Eddie Dillon is directing with Fay Tincher, Tammany Young and Tod Browning in the cast.

“The Forest Thieves,” made by Arthur Mackley of Reliance release, mixes the love-making of a young ranger and the post-mistress with a plot of a wealthy lumberman to bride the forest supervisor to make dummy entries so that valuable timber can be stolen. Bob Burns, George Seigmant and Florence Crawford play the leading parts. The story is by Arthur Chapman. “Love and Business,” featuring Fay Tincher, made by the Eddie Dillon Komie company, portrays the sending of a love note intended for wife to an old maid, and the brief business letter meant for the spinster being received by the wife, and the complications that arise from it. The blame is finally placed upon the bosom messenger.

Based on Trowbridge Poem

The poem of John T. Trowbridge, “Dorothy of the Garret,” has suggested the idea for “Old Maid Dorothy,” a two-reeled picture made for Majestic by John B. O’Brien. Blanch Sweet plays the lead part, a sweet natured, lovable old maid who recalls the robber youth when she finds the old spinning wheel in the garret. The cast includes Jack Conway, Spottiswoode Atiken, Mary Alden and Billie West.

Some new ideas in visions and dissolves were introduced in the making of “The Seal of Time,” at the American studio, under the direction of Mr. O. D. Bally, the principal parts of which are taken by William Greenwood, Ed Coxen, and George Fields.

At E. Christie is home from his jaunt in the east and is the busiest man on the Universal lot. Next to comedy he has selected Billie Rhodes, Jack Dillon, Harry Rattenbury and Stella Adams, and retained all his old favorites Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Victoria Forde for the other company, which will be directed by Eddie Lyons under the supervision of Mr. Christie. Two comedies are to be made each week.

Manager Thomas Persons of the Selig studios is expected home this week from a vacation trip spent in the East. During his absence Colonel W. H. Selig, himself, took personal charge of the producing plants.

Makes Arrangements for Ball

Manager Charles Stillwell, of the Silver Palace Theatre, San Francisco, and vice-president of the newly organized Screen Club of that city, was in Los Angeles making arrangements with local photoplayer to attend the first annual Thanksgiving ball of the club at Frisco Saturday evening, November 28. Mr. Stillwell was very successful here and has the promise of a large number of the popular screen stars that they will attend the ball.

Max Figman has stepped into the duties of directing himself and players of the Masterpiece Film Company in future releases, owing to Marion De La Parelle filling his resignation. In this work Mr. Figman will be assisted by Elliott Clawson, who will also write the scenarios.

Seymour Hastings has been selected for the position of technical director for the company and Ray Hill manager of the office of the producing company. The second subject of the company, “The Truth Wagon,” a newspaper story, is well under way. For this picture local newspaper managers have granted the company use of any part of their offices for the making of scenes, and the managing editor of one paper has materially aided the players in making the picture true to life.

Elie Janis was busy every day last week in the making of his first picture, under the direction of Phillips Smalley, of Bosworth, Inc. Up to this time the name for the picture has not been decided upon. The scenario is from a story by Miss Janis and will consist of four reels of comedy, in which the daughter of a million-dollar mineaire falls in love with an artist (Courtney Foote) while attending a private school for girls.

The infatuation results in an engagement. When her guardian (Herbert Stand- ing) learns of this he calls her attention to the clause of her father’s will which provides that she shall not see or hear from her intended husband for six months prior to marriage, on pain of forfeiting the estate. The lovers comply with the clause.

Macklyn Arbuckle recently arrived at the Bosworth studio and work was begun on the preparation of the scenario for the first picture in which he will appear. The story is by Mr. Arbuckle and the scenario will be prepared by Lois Weber, who will have charge of the filming of the feature.

“The Whip” Star Opposite Arbuckle

In the film Mr. Arbuckle will play the role of such a type as “The County Chair- man,” in which the gentle side of the stern man of affairs will be brought out. Frank Elliott, the well known English actor, who starred in the London presentation of “The Whip,” has been selected to play the heavy leads opposite Mr. Arbuckle.

Hobart Bosworth has been confined to his home with nervous prostration brought on by an acute attack of neuralgia and weeks of over work at the studio. It will probably be some time before he can resume his work and finish the production of "Buckshot John," from the story of the same name by Charles Van Loon, exteriors for which were made at Manning, Cal., during the past few weeks.

Director Oscar Apley, Dustin Farnum, and company of twenty-five players spent the past week near San Francisco, where exterior river scenes for “Cameo Kirby,” the December 24 release of the Jesse L. Lasky Company, were made along the Sacramento River. At this point the river greatly resembles the Mississippi, and with semi-tropical vegetation and numerous river boats plying the stream at all times ideal scenes were secured.

The “Girl of the Golden West” Lasky Company, directed by Cecil de Mille, was at King’s Camp, near Hemet, Cal., in the snow clad mountain district, last week making exteriors in the snow. When the players were ordered to report for the trip all were instructed to bring overcoats and winter clothing, and from reports by letter they are all sorry they did not take more. The change in temperature between the Lasky studio and King’s Camp country at this season is seventy to ninety degrees.

President Samuel Long and Auditor C. F. Wilson, of the Kalem Company, of New York City, spent last week in Los Angeles, visiting at the three studios—Glendale, Hollywood and Santa Monica.

Harry Pollard, of the American at Santa Barbara, spent last week in Los Angeles, and Saturday was accompanied to the home of the Flying A by Joseph E. Singleton, Edward Alexander and William Carroll, who will play in the new multiple reel.

Eighth Kalem Serial Film Ready
Walter Newman, assistant general manager and producer of the U. S. Feature Film Company, Orovile, Cal., has spent the past three weeks in Los Angeles, supervising the developing, printing and cutting of the company’s picture, “Folly of a Life of Crime,” which portrays the life of the Sontag and Evans gang of desperados from the childhood of the men, through their lives of crime, years in prison, and final parole. George Sontag, the gang leader, plays the lead part in the picture, which will be released soon.

The eighth number of the Kalem, complete-in-its-self series, “The Hazards of Helen,” has been completed by P. McGowan at the Glendale studio. The producing title of this was “A Daring Deed,” in which Helen Holmes seizes a small child and jumps with it from a railroad bridge just as a train thunders past. For this picture a special train was chartered.

One of the one-reel pictures recently made by Hobart Bosworth will be released in the near future under the title of “The Beach Combers,” a feature of which is the rescue of Mr. Bosworth, playing the part of a sailor, by a Hawaiian, the Hawaiian who holds the world championship for short distance swimming.

The picture was made, and later it was found the champion might lose his right as an amateur if swimming for money. Rather than cause the young man such trouble, Mr. Bosworth held up the picture until a decision was rendered by the amateur athletic association officers.

J. A. Ramsey, camera man for the Faunt Photoplay Company, has returned from a six-weeks’ trip in the Yellow Stone country, where he shot photography for more than 4,000 feet of scenic, animal and ranch life pictures.

Newspaper Picture
Director De La Parelle, of the Masterpiece Film Company, in need of a scene of the shipping department of a newspaper office for the second production of the company, “The Truth Wagon,” a newspaper picture, was forced to have the picture made from a window of a room occupied by the switchboard of a local telephone company, as from there the desirable view could be secured.

He lived through the ordeal of being besieged by more than a hundred “numbers” girls who were forced to fill the lack of all the pages of the script with names of applicants.

The Lasky studio accommodations have just been increased in order that an additional company—making a total of four—may be maintained. Fifty more dressing rooms have been added, the stage increased, a new scenery storage room erected, and numerous other improvements made.

And while the mechanics were busy getting the studio ready, scenarios, casts and property lists were prepared for four five-reel pictures, and work was begun on three of these last week.

The productions now under way are “The Girl of the Golden West,” from the David Belasco play of that name, featuring Mabel Van Buren, with a supporting cast including Home Peters as the Road Agent and Theodore Roberts as Sheriff Jack Rance, the part made famous on the legitimate stage by Frank Keenan. Cecil De Mille is directing the production of the photoplay.

Director Oscar Apfel is in charge of filming “Cameo Kirby,” by Booth Tarkington and Harry Leon Wilson, in which Dustin Farnum will be featured with Winifred Kingston playing the feminine lead.

The fourth company began work the early part of last week, immediately following the arrival of Edith Taliaferro, from New York City, who will appear in “The Stowaway,” adapted from the Tracy Louis novel. George Melford, for more than five years managing director at the Kalem studio, in Glendale, finished his work there the latter part of last week and will be connected with the Lasky company as director.

The visit of Mr. Lasky is a very pleasing event to the members of the producing company. He is personally acquainted with several of the larger concerns, including the most obscure parts, stage carpenters, errand boys, and knows every cowboy by name. His reports from the East are all always a feature of his visits, highly appreciated by the players, and his criticisms are sought by all.

Roselli Finds Prosperity in Middle West
Cheerful Tone Prevails in All Lines of Business, and Demand for Good Pictures Is on Increase, Says Excelsior Sales Manager

“We in New York City are liable to believe that we thoroughly represent the conditions throughout the country, and this is usually the case,” said Arthur M. Rosenbach, of the Excelsior Feature Film Company. “Just now, however, the European War seriously affects New York far more than it does other parts of the country.

New York City with its enormous import, export and retail commerce, and allied interests, has always been the checkered flag of the war which the war has imposed upon these industries. Naturally, all business in New York City is affected to some degree by the serious curtailment in these lines.

Outside of New York I have found conditions very different. The Ohio and Mississippi valleys are enormously prosperous, and even such cities as St. Louis, dependent to a large degree on Southern trade, are optimistic. In fact, throughout the entire section that I traveled over recently, I have never noticed a more cheerful tone and more actual evidence of business success than at the present time.

“Felix Feist, of the Celebrated Feature Film Company, Chicago, was decidedly enthusiastic about trade conditions. His idea coincides so exactly with my own that I take this opportunity of expressing them. His idea was that the more substantial and really reliable exchanges throughout the country were daily strengthening their positions by aligning themselves with the stronger manufacturers, such as the Excelsior Feature Film Company, a combination that could only work for the benefit of the industry at large.

“I fully realize that the wasteful method formerly practiced by manufacturers in placing their pictures before the public, if not already a thing of the past, is rapidly becoming so, and the older method of State Righting a picture with all of its inherent disadvantages must yield to the more modern methods of marketing. I cannot think of anything that would better tend to strengthen and solidify the motion picture industry than the present movement to concentrate the higher class picture in the hands of the stronger booking organizations.

“A few producers of inferior pictures are to-day loudly wailing over their inability to find a market, but pictures of genuine quality are always in demand, and Mr. Goldberg, of the Casino Feature Film Company of Detroit, exactly expressed my ideas with the assertion that a strong story, good photography, and high grade acting must always have a recognized commercial value, and that each day increases the number of exhibitors, who appreciate quality even though it might mean a slight increase in the cost of their services.

“I had seldom a more satisfactory trip in every way than the one which I have just completed. The farming districts through which I passed were all prepared for bumper crops, and the manufacturing sections were all busy to capacity. When a man has had a satisfactory trip, such as I have had, he is naturally optimistic, but I do not believe that my hopeful views are merely a reflection of the success of the Excelsior Feature Film Company. I am confident as the result of my observations that this market girl at her best.

“UNDER FALSE COLORS” FEATURES FLORENCE LA BADIE

“Under False Colors,” a two-reel Thanhouser feature in which Florence La Badie will be presented, is the first release of a series of strong dramatic pictures in which this famous young woman will appear. In these forthcoming two-reel features, her admirers will have an opportunity to see this remarkable girl at her best.

CLAUDE PATIN SENDS NEWSY POST CARDS FROM PARIS

Claude Patin, secretary-general manager of the Eclair Company, who left New York last August for Paris to join the French colors, and is serving, with the rank of first lieutenant, as an aide de camp, attached to the staff of the Minister of War, has been heard from by his friends in New York City.

A number of picture post cards were sent by Mr. Patin to Motion Picture News office containing tabloid news items of interest to the trade.

Mr. Patin declares that the Eclair, Gaumont, Pathé and Eclipse companies are working with reduced forces, but have ceased all production for the present. Only a few motion picture theatres are open in France. Mr. Patin has been serving on a detail whose duties consist of watching German prisoners, but he expects to be sent to the front shortly, serving on the English general staff.

Mr. Patin has found time to keep track of the film industry in this country regardless of the demands made upon him by the duties of his position. He has received Motion Picture News with regularity and finds something of interest in every number.

The post cards mailed by Mr. Patin show scenes in and about Paris, a Creusot gun ready for firing and a troop of mountain artillery at manoeuvres.

GREAT NORTHERN HAS NEW SLEUTH PICTURE

The Great Northern Film Company's latest release is a three-reel feature, entitled "The Charlotte Street Mystery." As the names implies, it is a detective drama.

The story is replete with exciting episodes, dealing with the interesting adventures of an exceptionally clever woman, who seeks to elude the law, and succeeds in baffling a shrewd detective for some time, but is finally captured, after several thrilling escapes.

The role of the woman is in the hands of the capable Great Northern leading woman, Miss Elsie Frolich.

ORGAN AT ALLendale READY

On Monday, November 9, the management of the Allendale Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., changed, "P. J. Keel," of Hornell, N. Y., who was for the last few months road man for Joe Schuchert, who controls the State rights on "Neptune's Daughter," succeeded E. C. MacFadden.

The organ at the Allendale is about completed and a "try out" of the many applicants for organist will be held next Monday at the Elmwood Theatre.

HARRISH INGRAHAM WITH EACO FILM COMPANY

Harrish Ingraham is one of the latest players to enlist under the banner of the Edwin August Eaco Films Company. Mr. Ingraham before entering pictures held a number of good stock engagements throughout the west. Before joining Edwin August he was with Pathé for some time, and leading man and scenario editor for the Whitman Feature Film Company.

“Nightingale” Successful Wherever Shown

All-Star Alco Release Featuring Ethel Barrymore a Favorite as a Premiere Attraction for New Theatres—Return Engagements Sure

A LARGE number of new motion picture theatres over the country generally are using the Alco release Ethel Barrymore in "The Nightingale" as their attraction. The management and patrons of these theatres are making the occasions almost Broadway first nights. According to the local newspapers there are lines of automobiles outside of the theatres, and people seldom seen at motion picture gatherings are crowding the theather.

Manager Guy C. Smith, of the Oakland Theatre, California, proved unusually enterprising. He remodeled his whole house in honor of Miss Barrymore in "The Nightingale." Decorators transformed the theatre into a spring garden with white lattice work, and which vines climbed were in the lobbies and along the stairways and walls. Throughout the house there was a harmonious Barrymore color scheme.

Manager Smith, who by the way has signed with the Alco Film Corporation for five years' service, was so pleased with the success of "The Nightingale" and with the receipts that he has decided to "dress" his theatre for each engagement of the Alco program.

Miss Barrymore in "The Nightingale" was used in Tacoma, Washington, to open the new Colonial Theatre. According to the Tacoma Ledger "thousands of admiring Tacomans kept all available seats filled, and there was a long sidewalk line until late in the evening." This theatre, by the way, cost $110,000 to complete and equip.

“Shore Acres,” “The Education of Mr. Fipp,” Beatriz Michanela in “Salomy Jane,” “Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch” and “Little Lord Fauntleroy,” follow Miss Barrymore in this new western theatre.

This use of "The Nightingale" is by no means confined to the west. Columbus, Ohio, has a new and unusually complete and attractive motion picture theatre in The Hippodrome. Miss Barrymore in "The Nightingale" opened this house. Manager Swan, of The Hippodrome, took natural pride in the fact that he had been able to secure the Alco program. Hence before the theatre opened he gave a series of private views of the picture to friends and prominent citizens of the Ohio city.

The same picture opened the new Strand Theatre of Washington, Pennsylvania. This theatre, too, had been remodeled. The local newspapers united in the opinion expressed by The Washington Observer that "The Nightingale" was "a stirring drama of heart interest, and one that drew big houses."

And where Miss Barrymore in "The Nightingale" had been they are welcome visitors for a return engagement. In Philadelphia "The Nightingale" broke all house records at the Regent Theatre. There was immediate strong competition among the Philadelphia picture houses for a return engagement. The Locust Theatre was successful, and Augustus Thomas' photoplay of love, hatred and music, which he himself staged, played to crowded houses.

Detroit League Getting Results for Exhibitors

Organization, Inspired with Desire to Do Things of Real Benefit, Watches Dangerous Censor Legislation with Effective Results

Detroit, Nov. 17

A T the last meeting of the Detroit Motion Picture Exhibitors League plans were discussed for arousing exhibitors throughout the state to the necessity for united action to prevent legislation this winter imitative to the motion picture industry. The watchfulness of the exhibitors League has foretold some of the dangerous efforts of cranks, though it has not been able to entirely suppress them. They will make renewed efforts when the legislature convenes this winter to pass unwholesome censorship measures, unfair tax laws and other just bills.

All this President Peter Jeup set before the exhibitors, together with a recapitulation of some of the things the League has accomplished in checking the efforts of these hostile interests. It has prevented obnoxious censorship in the city of Detroit. It has kept state censorship out of Michigan so far, has fought every inch of ground in the matter of inspection fees, has done much to eliminate the film pirates who would give seven and eight reels for a nickel, and in more ways than one proven benefit to the exhibitors of Detroit and of the state.

Benjamin Converse, an Owosso exhibitor, who was present at the meeting, voiced the appreciation of the wide-awake state exhibitors of the work of the Detroit men and urged a canvass of the state to get every exhibitor into the Michigan organization. He promised himself to buttonhole every exhibitor in Shiawassee county with whom he could come in contact.

J. J. Fowser, formerly of Lansing, seconded the remarks of Mr. Converse, and told of conditions he had observed in Indiana, and particularly in Gary, where on certain nights pictures were being run to which persons only eighteen years of age or over were admitted, a condition which he said must not be allowed to enter Michigan.

Incidents showing the unfair manner in which inspection is made were related by various members, Mr. Fowser telling of one house in which the rheostat consisted of coils of wire around nails driven into a panel of the wall. There was a provision which would throw one the length of the panel if he touched it. Yet this house passed inspection, while other houses were condemned for technical offenses against the inspection law, harmless in themselves.

H. W. Kindig, of the National Automatic of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, arrived in town during the meeting and was escorted to the hall, where he met some of the exhibitors.
And the worst feature of them—the one that injures the business in general most—is that they are not extremely poor from any standpoint. You can't honestly roast them—they're passable, but they're not one-tenth of one degree better than they have to be to 'get by.'

Read the publicity that's put out on them, read the advertisements of them, note the name of the star and the name of the book or play from which they are taken, and you are justified in expecting a superlative production.

"You have every right to anticipate fine photography, sumptuous staging, splendid scenery as backgrounds, startling acting, a production that exhales quality at every foot.

Instead of which, what do you get, in eight cases out of ten?

"Photography that is—just fair; acting that is—just fair; settings that are—just fair; a picture, in a word, that is—just fair. The entire production has a cheap, false—I was about to say, fake—tone all the way through.

"It's like playing a fine march on a 10-cent tin cornet. Did you ever hear a German street band try to play 'The Fifth Nocturne?' Well, such productions as this are in the same class.

Tell the men who are making these pictures what I'm telling you, and they'll say, 'What are you kicking about? These films will satisfy the audiences that see them; that's all the exhibitor wants. They'll get by.'

"To which remark I'd simply like to retort that the men who believe that have either not been in the business long enough to know better or that they've been in it so long that they can't realize the change in the critical discrimination of motion picture audiences during the last year and a half.

If these were the best pictures being made, I would say that their speculation on 'putting one across' on the patrons of the theatres was a good sportman's gamble. But they're not, by a long chalk.

"In every town where these alleged 'quality features' are being shown, there is a theatre where real quality features are to be seen. The people have a chance to compare them—if they don't get wise sooner, they will later.

"What's the answer for the exhibitor? You know, and so do I. The theatre that runs real quality pictures will get the crowds in the long run.

"The other exhibitor will go down, clawing the air, and execrating the producers that sent him such 'mercerized,' 'just-as-good-as' stuff to meet the other fellow's competition with.

"Worse than that, these imitations will ultimately cause a reaction against all features, and the producer of good pictures will suffer with the producers of poor ones.

"Why don't you put the exhibitor and the rest of the business on guard against such productions?"

And we have.

 Business Revival **

The general revival of business conditions expected for months is now here. The New York Tribune showed by a thorough canvass made throughout the country only a few days ago a justification of the hopeful view maintained by keen observers of the nation's prosperity.

Business has unquestionably taken an upward trend, and with the widespread resumption of commercial progress in the United States motion pictures have received their meed of benefit. Recent reports from film manufacturers indicate a return of confidence.

Herrington Calls for United Action in Pennsylvania

Editor, Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Dear Sir: Let our slogan be on to Harrisburg, to attend the convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors, January 4 and 5, 1915. Let us use the power that invention and science has placed in our hands and get into a higher state as business men, and lay aside your little personal kickers and quit fighting your imaginary foe and get together in one organization and face the common enemy, the politician and the so-called reformer. It makes no difference if you have a house that seats one hundred or two thousand, your interests are the same, so let's get into one big organization before it's too late, or before they censor our business.

Let us look at this question of taxation and see where it started. First we had the mercantile tax, then the city, town or borough tax, then the state tax. Now comes the war tax, and we are asking each other where will it stop. We do not know what will be the next form of tax. It may be an emergency or some other form of tax, we cannot tell. We do not say that we should not pay any tax, but we are not satisfied to pay all the taxes.

All kinds of freak legislation is threatened and used on us. For example, let us name a few of them. There is the censorship of the film, censorship of posters, regulation of admission of children, the segregation of the sexes, and many others. Now the time has come for us to do something, so let the exhibitors get into action at the convention at Harrisburg.

Now let us know that you are with us, and let our motto be one for all and all for one. And don't forget to boost the competition.

Jeup Makes Strong Appeal for Membership

Jeter J. Jeup, president of State Branch No. 4, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, has issued a strong appeal to exhibitors for their support. He has sent out the following letter:

Mr. Exhibitor,

Dear Sir: Once more I appeal to you to join the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, giving you a few reasons. The legislature is about to convene at Lansing, and some of the laws already mentioned to be introduced are: Closing theatres on Sunday, State license fee of $100, prohibiting children from attending under sixteen years, unless accompanied by their parents, State and local taxes, and etc., all of which we must prevent if possible, and can, if we have a strong organization.

Here are some of the things the league has accomplished: The National League has had the war tax reduced from a flat tax of $100 to $25 and $50 which had passed Congress, but changed in the Senate through the efforts of Marion S. Pearce, national president M. P. E. L. of America. The State League prevented all of the above mentioned laws from being enacted two years ago; brought about the agreement making three reels the limit for a five-cent show and five reels for a ten-cent show; abolished the censor in Detroit; prevented unfavorable ordinances in reference to licensed operators; and recognition of the league by the film exchanges. We intend to fight to have the state inspection fee of $20 or more repealed or reduced. The admission fee to this league is $5 and dues fifty cents per month.

Now if there is any valid or good reason why you should not join and give us your moral and a little financial support I would like to know it as, I consider this as much a part of your business as your film supply, for it means your very existence.

The semi-annual meeting of the league will be held in room 255-259 Equity Building, Detroit, Tuesday, December 8, at 10 o'clock a.m. and I would be pleased to see you here at that time.

Fraternally yours,

PETER J. JEUP,
President M. P. E. L. of America, State Branch No. 4.

Aronowitz States Firm's Aim

Samuel E. Aronowitz, representing the Exhibitors All Feature Film Company, Inc., Albany, N. Y., issues a statement denying the announcement of the Cosmos company appearing under the heading, "Denies Rights to Cosmos Films."

Mr. Aronowitz says that in a prospectus published for the purpose of stating the aim of his company, certain parts of the document are responsible for the misunderstanding of the Cosmos company's position.

He makes the following statement:

"On page four of this prospectus there is the following sentence: 'Among the features already signed and under consideration are the following.' Then follows a list of films most of which has already been signed when this prospectus went to print, and the others of which were actually under consideration. Among those under consideration were 'The Key to Yesterday,' and 'Lena Rivers.' The only reason the company did not take these pictures was that an agreement could not be reached as to all the details. Neither the officers nor any of the agents of this company ever claimed that the company had signed the two films referred to, nor has this company ever sent out statements to the exhibitors already looked that they could have those plays."

Mr. Aronowitz also makes a statement concerning the offer of features at $15 per day, by his company, as follows: "The company has agreed to (and is not bound to) furnish those, owning at least ten shares of the stock of the company, features for a period of one year (at least one feature per week) for the price of $15 for each feature."

THE ROSE OF THE RANCHO
(Lasky—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON

THERE can be no division of opinion about the Lasky-Belasco production of "The Rose of the Rancho." It is not only a distinct triumph in itself, but also it marks as does no other production the triumph of the picture drama.

If the best stage plays can be picturized with such success that the picture even excels the play—and now we know that this is possible—then the horizon of the photo-play is practically illimitable.

The first exhibition of this remarkable picture was given on Sunday evening, November 15, to an audience that filled the Belasco theatre and sat spell-bound from the introduction of the characters to the last beautiful scene in the Padre's garden.

It is a fact that never for an instant did the action lag. Heart-interest and atmosphere were always and admirably sustained. The acting was as excellent as that of the well-balanced casts of our best stage productions.

David Belasco voiced the feelings of probably every one of the audience when, so it is reported, he said: "This is better than the play."

Great credit is due to everyone concerned in the production, from beginning to end. Richard Walton Tutty, co-author with David Belasco of the original play, assisted Cecil De Mille and Wilfred Buckland in the direction. These gentlemen have scored a remarkable success.

Bessie Barriscale as Juana made her first screen appearance and achieved for herself at the same time a fine reputation in filmdom. Her support by the Lasky Stock Company was excellent throughout—J. W. Johnston as Kearney, Jane Darwell as Senora Castro, James Neil as the Padre, Monroe Salisbury are especially deserving of mention but not without a measure of praise to every single member of the cast.

The cast follow:
Juana, daughter of Castro family; Bessie Barriscale; Senora Castro Kenton, her mother; Jane Darwell; Esra Kincaid, "Land Jumper,; Dick La Reno; Kearney of U. S. Government; J. W. Johnston; Don Luis del Torre, in love with Juana; Monroe Salisbury; Padre Antonio, of the Mission; James Neil; Espinoza; Ranch Owner, Sydney Deane; Half Breed, Billy Elmer, and Isabelita, Espinoza's daughter, Jeanie McPherson.

The story is set in 1850, when the government at Washington decreed that all ranch owners must register their properties, and the Spanish rancheros of California, already seemingly humiliated by coming under the rule of the hated "gringos," refused to comply and a system of land jumpers arose about.

The government learning of the land jumping, and that the "kit trade" was growing, sent Kearney, a secret agent, to California to investigate.

Kincaid, a worthless and conscienceless scoundrel, learns from one of his men that Senor Espinoza, a rich Spanish ranchero, has vowed that he will never register his land, and seizing the opportunity, Kincaid and his men ride down on the Espinoza family when they are at dinner.

Ignoring protests and refusing cash, Kincaid takes possession of the ranch and Isabelita, the eldest daughter, is captured by a half breed, who while fighting for possession of the girl, mortally wounds Espinoza, and Isabelita knowing her fate at the hands of the Indian, kills herself.

The picture will be shown at the Strand, New York City, Sunday, November 29.

ARISTOCRACY
(Famous Players-Paramount—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

SOCIETY dramas are not an uncommon variety of pictures.

They can be seen any day at any place. They are palmed off on the unsuspecting as true portrayals of modern life in the higher circles of society. Very often they are so untrue that the affectation production borders on the ridiculous, yet they keep on coming. If they didn't, the producers would be at a considerable drawback to find something to produce in their stead.

We won't go as far as to say that "aristocracy" is altogether true to life, but if real persons were placed in the same positions which confront the characters of this story, their actions would, in all probability, be very much like, if not exactly the same as those of the main persons of this picture. Their parts are sincere, none of them are forced and a cast of capable players performs in the leading roles, most obviously well trained in motion-picture technique.

Tyron Power is the latest legitimate actor added to the long list of Famous Players stars borrowed from the stage for a short time. His rendition of the part of Mr. Stockton, a self-made man of America is sincere, powerful and dramatic. Diana, his wife, is played by Marguerite Skirvin in a manner that leaves no room for improvement. Edna Mayo is sweet, pretty and pathetic as Virginia, the daughter of Stockton and the step-daughter of Diana. Arthur Hoops appears in his familiar role of heavy. He is a penniless foreign prince, utterly without honor, but possessing a magnetic attraction which he exercises over the unfortunate woman whom he happens to desire.

The picture is strong, powerful and gripping every moment of its length. From the time that the happy romance of Virginia and Stuyvesant is broken off, because of the objection of the latter's parents, until they are finally united again, after Virginia and her step-mother have gone through the terrible ordeal of becoming mixed up in the so-called aristocracy of Europe, the story holds one almost entranced.

Scenes which take place in the chamber of Diana, between her and the prince are rendered powerful, whereas they might appear repelling by sharp cuts or quick fadeouts. Just as a matter of form it might be mentioned that all the scenes of the picture are undeniably realistic, and the photography is as good as ever.

A little difficulty may be found in straightening out the characters in the first part of the play, accountable to their somewhat abbreviated introduction, but it is not long before we are thoroughly acquainted with all of them, and it is safe to say that none of us will be sorry for the acquaintance.
"THE MASTER KEY"
(Universal Special—First Episode)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AFTER the extensive amount of advertising that the Universal Company has given "The Master Key" it seems hardly necessary to announce the fact that it is their new serial. It and all the other following chapters are in two reels and are to be released at intervals of one week, beginning with the week of November 16.

It seems to be the policy of the Universal Company to secure the services of the best writers of the time for all their recurrent stories, and some of the others also. Louis Joseph Vance is responsible for "The Trey o' Hearts" and the "Terence O'Rourke" stories; George Bronson Howard was the creator of the "Francois Villon" pictures, and now we are introduced to the handwork of John Fleming Wilson, the author of "The Master Key" and numerous other stories and novels.

AN APPARITION APPEARS TO GALLON

Robert Leonard and Calder Johnstone trianized the story, and the former is also director and leading man. The other players are the not unfamiliar ones. They have long played under the direction of Mr. Leonard in Rex pictures. Ella Hall, one of the youngest actresses on the screen who interprets grown up parts, will appear throughout the series as the daughter of John Gallon, a mine owner. The part of Gallon, is played by Wilbur Higby. Wilkerson, Gallon's former partner, is impersonated by Harry Carter, who bids fair to develop into the leading villain of the story. Robert Leonard appears as John Dore, a young mining engineer.

The story opens with the spectacle of Gallon and Wilkerson searching for gold. Gallon finds a streak of the ore, and when making notes of it in his book refuses to tell his partner of the facts. His aloofness leads to a fight between the two men, in which Wilkerson is worsted. Gallon flees, believing he has killed him. He learns later that he is still alive, and of course, is in deadly fear of his return.

He opens his mine at the spot of their quarrel, which by virtue of keeping his secret concerning Wilkerson in an iron box locked with a key he calls the "Master Key Mine." Not being able to locate the gold, he sends for the services of a mining engineer and Dore puts in his appearance.

Realism predominates in the scenes about the mine, the cottages of the miners, the house of their employer—the shuttle trains, the bridges, and the heaps of blasted rock are all shown in panoramic views. One thrilling event occurs in this episode, the burning and sinking of a ship on which is Gallon. His plans go to the bottom with the sloop, and for this reason he is unable to locate the gold. The photography and scenes are excellent, and the tinting every bit as good.

At the start "The Master Key" looks like a winner, and bids fair to uphold the high mark set by the two other Universal big j serials.

"THE BLOOD-RED ROSE"
(Selig—Three Reel)
REVIEWED BY T. S. MEAD

CHARMINGLY beautiful fantasy is the story of the origin of the first blood red rose, written by James Oliver Curwood; and not one whit of the charm has been lost by its production upon the screen. In fact, after seeing all the magic of an enchanting fairy tale take place so realistically before your eyes, it is mighty hard to come down to cold earth and give up your recently acquired belief in fairies or rather witches, for it is a witch in this case, though a perfectly nice one.

Kathlyn Williams as Godiva does a lot to make this not merely a fairy tale, but a real drama, and a tragic one at that, of a fanciful kingdom in mediaval times. Supporting her with equally clever acting is Wheeler Oakman in the role of Paulo, her huntsman lover. Charles Clary, Eugenie Besserer, Frank Clark and Camille Astor are also included in the well selected cast.

The exteriors and interiors are well selected and in perfect keeping with the story, while the unusual scenic effects are excellently executed.

Paulo, the handsome young huntsman in the forest of the King of Urania, and his beautiful sweetheart Godiva are friends of the witch Hagar, who, to repay them for a kindness, gives Godiva a magic potion which will change her into a white rose. The two lovers are very happy until one day the King of Urania sees Godiva and, struck by her beauty, forces his attention upon her.

At the sight of this, Paulo in a burst of jealousy seizes the monarch by the throat, and as a result is put into a dungeon underneath the palace. The King, still enamored of the fair Godiva, kidnaps her and places her in a secret chamber of the castle.

The incident comes to the ears of the queen, and she plans to murder her dangerously beautiful rival. The king, angered by Godiva's repulses of his wooing, leads her down to the dungeon where Paulo is held captive, in order that he may exult in the misery the sight of her lover will cause.

While the King's attention is distracted for a moment, Godiva swallows the magic potion and at once is transformed into a white rose, which falls to the waiting hands of Paulo. Confusion follows and Paulo makes his escape. For a year he wanders about the forest, the fragrant white rose as his only companion.

STIRRING MOMENTS IN THE LATEST ALLIANCE-FAVORITE RELEASE, "THE MAN WHO COULD NOT LOSE"

"THE TOREADOR'S OATH"

(Pathé—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY CLIFFORD H. PANGBURN

THIS is a film which would convince the most cynical adherent of the legitimate stage that the production of motion pictures is an art. It presents a powerful, dramatic story in a series of beautiful scenes and by means of the finest sort of photography. "The Toreador's Oath" was made at Seville, Spain, with the happy result that the settings are at once realistic and attractive. It is a fine example of the results that can be attained by an almost complete avoidance of studio scenes.

Instead of the cold work of the stage carpenter, the greater part of the scenes in this film have as their backgrounds the streets, squares and terraces of Seville, the patio of Spanish houses, the bull ring, and the open country.

The beautiful effects thus obtained are further heightened by the fine toning of the whole film. It is typical of the production that the most unimportant of the scenes are as well done as the principal ones.

The cast is another fine feature. It is headed by Asta Nielsen, who is seen as the toreador's wife. This actress is a Dane, but she is a distinct Spanish type, and makes an alluring and charming Castillian. She handles her difficult part with great skill. The supporting players are well suited to their roles, and are effective.

Juanita, a poor girl who sells cakes in the streets, is noticed by two famous toreadors, Gayetano and Manuel. The former's affection is real, while the latter's is merely lustful. Juanita soon marries Gayetano. They swear on the crucifix to love each other until death. Manuel, with the aid of a poor half-wit who adores Juanita, kidnaps her while her husband is at a bull fight in a nearby town.

The girl escapes, but finds that Manuel has poisoned her husband's mind so that he turns her out of the house. She vows vengeance. At a bull fight she distracts Manuel's attention just as a bull is about to charge, with the result that he is killed.

Gayetano gets a divorce and marries Manuel's daughter. At the wedding Juanita appears and fascinates the bridegroom until he follows her to the spot where they had vowed life-long love. There Gayetano realizes too late his folly, and the pair die together.

"THE MAN WHO COULD NOT LOSE"

(Favorite Players-Alliance—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

If a picture is an adaptation from a well-known play of, as in this instance, a novel, it is practically sure of attracting a reasonable amount of attention. Whether it develops into a success or a failure depends upon the competency of the adapter and the suitableness of the work for the screen, but all motion pictures which have appeared before in another form call for more notice than those which are entirely new in the form of pictures.

Sometimes they are worthy of this attention, and sometimes they are not. Concerning this particular production, it is deserving of all the favorable criticism it will receive.

Excellently qualified workers have been behind the story, from its career as a novel until its entrance into the field of screen productions. Richard Harding Davis is the author of the book, and in its adaptation none of the charm of the story has been lost.

It has also been carefully directed by Carlyle Blackwell, who plays the leading role as well. Again, the picture attains a degree of photographic perfection that embraces the highest efforts of a far seeing director and cameraman.

Some exceptionally gorgeous scenes have been filmed, and the same may be said of the sets which demand that property. Those which do not call for elaborate magnificence are fitting and realistic.

Carlyle Blackwell carries the part of a young writer who, in compliance with an editor's wishes, rushes his story through for the next issue of the magazine. We see the story he labors at into the far hours of the night. The leading figure is Carlyle Blackwell again, and again as a novelist, Chapneys Carter, who is in love with the daughter of a man bent on marrying her to a bankrupt count.

Naturally, Carter marries her, and then proceeds to play the races, winning every time, finally showing up the count, breaking the bookmaker who ruined his father, and bringing the girl's parent around to the point where he is thankful he has such a lucky son-in-law.

The picture is a comedy-drama, of which class we have been honored with many of late. But however many, they are never tiresome, and are more restful and enjoyable than any other variety. Carter's quick, good natured and sharp personality as portrayed by Mr. Blackwell is ever so well done. The way he scatters one dollar bills around with alarming nonchalance, in fact his whole manner stamps him as the personification of a typical hero of a lively American novel.

Ruth Hartman is Dolly, the heroine, and a charming one she makes. Gipsie Abbott is her sister, who marries the Reverend Orlando Stone, a character played by James J. Sheehan, who has many chances to create laughter, and he fully utilizes them.

William Brunton plays the count, Thomas Delmar is the race track gambler, Harry Kernan the father of the two girls, and Hal Clements is the father of Carter.

The race track scenes, taken on a real course, are realistic. A few scenes of the horses starting, rounding a turn and finishing are employed more than once, but aside from this not a great deal in the picture is to be unfavorably criticised.

KALAMAZOO VOTES FOR SUNDAY SHOWS

Detroit, Nov. 18.

On Tuesday, November 3, Kalamazoo, Mich., voted in favor of Sunday shows, winning by a majority of 150 votes. At first it was announced that the proposed amendment to the city ordinance was lost, but on second count, it was found that a mistake had been made, votes had been placed in the wrong box and that instead of losing the amendment carried.

The amendment has received the stamp of approval from the members of the city council and the mayor, and the first Sunday entertainment in the Celery City will take place November 22.
"THE LAST EGYPTIAN" SHOWN TO 1,000 AT PRIVATE EXHIBITION IN LOS ANGELES

THE premier showing of the Oz company’s recent production, "The Last Egyptian," from the novel of the same name by L. Frank Baum, president of the company, was made Monday evening, November 2, in the presence of a thousand people in the gymnasium of the Los Angeles Athletic Association.

Like all previous productions of this company, the picture abounds in beautiful settings, both natural and artificial, and to judge from the hundreds of beautiful scenes, the producer must have spent a good-sized fortune in making this picture.

As the title indicates, it is a picture of Egyptian life, with visits to the unexplored crypts of the dead kings, queens, princes and princesses of the now decayed dynasties, into which is woven the characteristic trait of the Oriental for revenge. World travelers who have visited Egypt and who saw the first projection of the picture, marvel at the ingenuity of the producer in preparing exact duplications of Nile river scenes.

The cast is headed by J. Farrell MacDonald, supported by Charles Hayden, Jean Urban, Mac Wells, Vivian Reed and other well known photoplayer.

"THE BRAND OF HIS TRIBE"

(101 Bison—Universal—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

Films are very often artistically tinted and shaded to give the appearance that a scene takes place in the dead of night. Excellent imitations are the result of such processes, but it is always obvious that the scenes were really taken in daylight. In this picture, the director, Henry McRae, has introduced a series of scenes which cannot help bring forth the greatest praise and admiration.

Part of the film was actually exposed in the night time. This is the first time that we have seen such an innovation in American films. It has been attempted before, but with no great amount of success. Here it is a success, and the effect that it will produce will go a long way toward the success of the picture.

The event that is transpiring in these few scenes is a desperate battle waged between troops and Indians. They are at quite a distance from the camera, and engage in battle about the campfires of the redskins. The figures of the combatants are silhouetted against the glowing fires behind them and the resulting effect is most beautiful and effective.

Of course, one may not distinguish between the figures to such an extent that their identity may be determined, and in this respect the tinting and shading process has the advantage, but the fact remains, that is plainly obvious, that the film was exposed at night.

Besides this praiseworthy technicality of the film it may be said that taken as a whole the picture is a remarkable portrayal Western, full of action of the most daring sort. Fast riding, falling, snatching people from the saddle while at full speed and the soldiers defending the stockade from the warring Indians are only a few of the many thrilling events that unite to make the picture one of the most thrilling of its kind.

The story is somewhat complicated, although it has been made easy to follow by the concise interpretations rendered by the leading players. Val Pal plays Lieutenant Wilcox, who is captured by the Indians and forced to marry a squaw from their ranks. William Clifford is his son, who finally surmounts Captain Duncan’s opposition to his marrying his daughter. Sherman Bainbridge is the Indian chief. Marie Walcamp is the white girl, and Rex de Roselli her father.

"LOLA"

(World Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

When Owen Davis created the name part of this production, "Lola," he did not, of course, have in mind that Clara Kimball Young was to interpret it on the screen. But if he had been thinking of this star and had modelled the part after her especial qualifications it is doubtful if it would have been more suited to her. Again, if the part had been allotted to a less accomplished artiste than Clara Kimball Young it is more than likely that it would have appeared obtuse and loathsome. Due to her characterization of the role of "Lola," the obtuseness turns into pity for the character, and the loathsomeness into admiration for the player.

Regretably, the story is not over pleasant. It is the dominating personality of the star, the excellent manner in which she plays her part with all the sympathy and feeling which have gone to make her famous which is accountable for the success of the picture.

It is well that none of them have important roles except these three. Alec B. Francis plays the father of Lola with all his accustomed feeling and ability. James Young, who is the director and adaptor as well as the leading male character, has the part of Dick Fenway, a dissolution young man, unscrupulous, rich and possessed of a very weak personality.

Tragic though the story is, it is so unconventional that it is pleasant to see. The termination is hardly obvious until the last scene. The situations are excellently developed by players and director, the scenes are appropriate and the photography is of the best.

Lola is the daughter of a doctor who has struggled all his life to perfect an electrical contrivance for restoring life to a body that has been dead only a short time. The girl is happy in aiding the poor; kind, lovable and sweet.

One day she is knocked down by an automobile and brought home, dead. Her father puts his invention to good use and brings her back to life. But instead of being the same sweet girl that she was before, she is irresistible, tempestuous, even dishonest. Her good soul has left her, and instead she is the possessor of an exceptionally evil one.

She runs away with Fenway, a man she had before loathed. She becomes tired of him, flirts with a number of others and then finally lives with a man much older than herself.

Her doctor tells her that her heart is weak and that a sudden shock may bring death. She returns to her father to exact his promise to bring her back to life if she dies. They argue, she dies. And the miserable father in a rage destroys the machine.
"THE PERILS OF PAULINE"
(Eclectic—Eighteenth Episode)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"CAST as usual," reads the synopsis as distributed by the Eclectic Company. The statement is perfectly correct as far as it goes. Pearl White, Crane Wilbur and Paul Panzer are still greatly in evidence, but two new and not at all unknown persons are introduced in this chapter, namely Eleanor Woodruff and Jack Standing. They play important parts; in fact, this episode is woven about the characters which they impersonate, the other players for the time, being less in evidence.

THE CONSPIRATORS ARE THwartED

Miss Woodruff plays the part of an international spy bent on securing the plans of a new submarine invented by Ensign Summers of the U. S. Navy. She joins forces with Owen, and the two plan that the submarine shall be disabled while at the bottom of the sea, so that the villainous secretary of this story may be successful in his attempt to do away with Pauline, and that Mlle. de Longeon may render the new invention useless to Americans while she may sell the plans to another nation at her own figure.

Their plot, fiendish as it is, comes near working out in a manner altogether favorable with the machinations of the conspirators, but the gallant Ensign, conceives the brilliant plan of shooting Pauline out through the aperture through which torpedoes are projected in times of war. She reaches the surface where Harry is anxiously awaiting the reappearance of the submarine. They reach the shore, inform the wrecking crew of the submarine's predicament, and it is speedily raised. The spy is found out, and the Ensign's happy love affair is rudely terminated.

This peril of Perilous Pauline is truly exciting, yet it may hardly be ranked with the best of her adventures, for the simple reason that it is not real. Although the submarine lying at the bottom of the sea is a very cleverly executed piece of work, it is obvious that the situation is not real. Aside from this the other scenes are as realistic as ever. The submarine employed in the picture while on the surface of the water is very much the real thing. And the interior views of it are admirable imitations.

Pauline comes out triumphant as usual, yet even now she shows no outward signs of suspecting Owen as her worst enemy. We will, no doubt soon learn the fate of all the people concerned in the story as, it is said, "The Perils" only have two more episodes to run.

"THE TEST OF MANHOOD"
(Ralston—Box Office—Three Roles)
REVIEWED BY CLIFFORD H. FANGRUEH

A FIGHT between the captain of a sailing vessel and some of the members of his crew furnishes some excitement of a rather unusual sort in this film, and also gives an opportunity for some effective photographic work. Other stirring scenes and an interesting story combine to make the film one that should please picture audiences.

The scenes present a wide range of attractive backgrounds, including sea and farm views of interest and beauty. In the course of the fight on the ship one of the men, whose part is played by Bruce Randall, jumps into the sea from the yard arm after some daring climbing about the rigging.

The story tells of the son of a well-to-do farmer who is sent from home because of his reckless ways. He signs on as a sailor, and becomes more manly as a result of his hard work. He finally rebels against the brutality of the captain, and with two other sailors escapes and swims to shore.

He reaches home in time to spoil the plans of a lawyer who was about to obtain his father's farm by fraud. A reformed gambler had been the crook's unwilling partner. The farmer's son and his friends save her from the villain's hands, and she becomes the young man's bride. There are a number of good comedy touches.

The cast is headed by Dorothy Davenport and Henry King, who do good work. Others are Daniel Gilfeather, Archie Gibson, Bruce Randall, Charles Dudley and Fred Whitman.

MRS. WILCOX PREPARING PLAY FOR WARNER

ELLA WHEELER WILCOX will make her debut as a contributor to the literature of the screen by the release, shortly, of a five-reel play based on her famous poem, "The Price He Paid."

This film will be released by the United Film Service (Warner's Features, Inc.) through its 42 branches, and consequently will receive a simultaneous premiere in all the important centers of population throughout America.

The adaptation of "The Price He Paid" for film purposes was made by Louis Reeves Harrison in collaboration with Mrs. Wilcox. The work interested the author of "The Price He Paid" intensely—in fact, so much so that she has taken up the study of the construction of photoplays and will shortly turn to the task of independently converting many of her poems into photoplays.

It is likely that the estate of Mrs. Wilcox at Short Beach, Granite Bay, Connecticut, will figure as a background for the scenes of many of her future film productions. It is one of the most picturesque country places in America and abounds in unusual opportunities for the film photographer.

ELLA WHEELER WILCOX AND GERTRUDE SHIPMAN OF THE HUMANANOLOGY COMPANY

A bay, a rock-bound coast, woods and fields, a rustic bungalow and gardens are physical aspects of a spot peculiarly blessed with natural advantages.

Realization of this fact has caused Mrs. Wilcox to consider the erection of a studio, this to serve as an adjunct to the plant of the Humanology Film Producing Company, of Medford, Mass., which is manufacturing the adaptations of the Wilcox poems.

Lawrence McGill is the director of the Humanology company, which has only just been organized, with a capitalization of $250,000 and a directorate comprised of foremost Boston business men.

BOX OFFICE APPOINTS BRANCH MANAGERS
C. L. WORTHINGTON, well known in film circles in Pennsylvania, has been appointed manager of The Box Office Attraction Company's branch located at 1333 Vine street, Philadelphia.

F. W. Mead, has been appointed manager of The Box Office Attraction Company's branch in Boston.
"THE PRINCESS INTERRUPTS THE DUEL"

THE PRINCESS INTERRUPTS THE DUEL

THE adoption of the Terrence O'Rourke series gives promise of great things to follow, although the introduction of the characters leaves small room for any great formation of plot. However, there is enough action in it to afford ample entertainment.

Supporting Kerrigan is the usual cast with which he appears. Vera Sisson needs no introduction to patrons of the Universal program. She plays her part in her usual way; it is not clearly defined just yet who she really is, but we gather that she is married and unhappily at that, so one may expect great things soon, with a dashing young adventurer like Kerrigan flying around. M. B. Robbins is the husband, greedy and selfish, with never a thought for his wife. At the end of this story his mind is pre-occupied by devising some scheme by which he can do away with friend Terrence. George Periolot also appears.

Princess Beatrice is the role which Miss Sisson carries, and she being told who this wonderful adventurer is, sends him on a mission of great importance to help her brother, who is establishing an empire in the Soudan Desert. It is a thrilling mission, and something well suited to our hero's daring and reckless character.

"THE ADOPTED DAUGHTER"

THE reappearance of Ethel Grandin on the screen will not pass unnoticed by the large following the dainty little star obtained when with another company. That she is now appearing under the banner of Warner's Features is a credit to them. Miss Grandin, the most recent acquisition of this company, will go a long way to further establish its popularity.

As to the picture itself, it is a fitting vehicle for the engaging personality of its leading player. A dual role has been allotted Miss Grandin, that of the adopted daughter of a police captain, who has been taken care of as if she were the man's real daughter, believing all the time that she is.

On the other hand, she is a girl of the underworld, differing entirely in character and breeding from her double, who turns out later to be her twin sister. Very naturally the two parts offer a wide field over which Miss Grandin is called upon to exercise a considerable amount of dramatic ability.

She has so succeeded that the two parts are never confused, although there has been an unusual number of opportunities for so doing.

The situations into which the resemblance of the two girls draw the principal characters into are intricate and very cleverly conceived by the writer of the scenario. When the rebel, presumably the daughter of the police captain, is seen by her lover attempting to fathom the reason of the latter's coldness, by delving into the realms of the underworld, he very naturally is confirmed in his previous unfounded suspicions concerning the life she leads.

Likewise when Pearl, the child of the streets, is seen in conference with various members of the police force, the suspicions of her male companion are justly aroused. Each of the two girls are mistaken for the other time and again, but finally with the death of Pearl matters are cleared up and the story ends happily.

The double exposure process is not employed at all. Its absence is not regretted, for nowadays the dual role offers many an opportunity for a double exposure, which is oftentimes confusing as well as unnecessary. It only affords a chance for the director to prove that he is proficient in all the arts of technical photography, and very little opportunity is afforded the star to exercise his or her individual ability.

Some may be apt to criticize the anti-climax that follows the real termination of the story. It explains the connection of the two girls—how when scarcely a week old their mother died and one of them was adopted by the policeman. But it is fitting that the explanation should follow. It is a trifle long perhaps, but altogether proper and correct.

A good atmosphere is attained and held throughout the picture, the realism of the underworld contrasting strikingly with the faithful precision followed in obtaining the correct settings for a well-to-do police captain's home.

Thomas McEvoy and Hayward Mack are well cast in the respective roles of the lover and father. In its entirety the picture will be heartily appreciated. Success is sure to accompany it.

"THE FIREMAN AND THE GIRL"

THE fireman is a well-to-do lawyer, his client is a girl of the underworld, her suitor is a policeman. The story follows the development of each, their opportunity to be with each other, the scheme planned by the man to escape his difficulties without affecting the girl. Frank Brownlee makes a realistic farmer.

Lorry, the most popular member of a city fire company, goes to the country for a vacation. An accident to the carriage which is taking him from the station leads to his acquaintance with Sarah Lane, the adopted daughter of a farmer. They are soon in love, but the girl's foster father has planned to have her marry him and the two object strongly to the new attachment.

Learning that the girl is planning to elope they carry her to a cave under a waterfall. The fireman locates her and reaches her by a rope let down over the face of the fall.

Surprising the guard they reach the office of the local justice of the peace and sheriff. Taking him in their carriage they hurry to the railroad station. The justice finishes the marriage ceremony on the platform, and the young couple leave on the train just as the angry suitor and foster father arrive. Later they invite the country folks to the city and have a happy reunion. Incidentally the girl calls out the fire department for the benefit of the visitors.
“SCARS OF POSSESSION”
(ESSAY—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY T. S. MEAD

A PICTURE taken from a story in “Munsey’s Magazine” that is particularly well suited for production on the screen. The producer has spared no pains in making this a remarkably good piece from the start to the finish. The hospital scene in which the operation of transfusing blood from one person to another takes place, is so carefully worked out in every detail that not only a surgeon, and a sharp-eyed one at that, would suspect that a real life was not at stake.

The other scenes, laid principally in wealthy homes, require a skill which is not lacking on the part of the producer to keep the entire production up to the high standard set by the hospital scenes. These little attentions to detail, and the strict elimination of any incongruity of the settings certainly add much to the realism of the picture and are worthy of the highest praise.

The part of Payne Forsythe gives Francis X. Bushman a chance to display a lot of his ability, and Beverly Bayne will make a decided and perfectly deserved hit as Louise. Bryant Washburn, John Cossar and Harry Duncanson play respectively the devoted brother and the two physicians most convincingly.

The death of his father leaves young Payne Forsythe entirely alone in the world. The Forsythe money has gone; the Forsythe family had died. One desperate situation tumbles after the other. Tossing the last of his fortune into the “street,” Payne leaves town for a year. He returns penniless, with nothing in sight. A newspaper advertisement attracts his attention, and he is selected from among a dozen applicants, to give up some healthy blood to save a young woman’s life at a nearby hospital. The operation is successfully performed, and Payne is not allowed to see the girl’s face, or know her identity.

A week later he leaves the hospital, but with a gnawing desire to know who the girl was. The incident acts as a turning point. Payne meets an old friend and goes to work on the stock exchange. Two years later he is a partner in the business, with a tidy personal fortune.

He meets J. Dukes Cortwright, a young millionaire, and falls in love with Cortwright’s charming sister, Louise, at a bridge party. Time passes and Payne realizes his love is not returned. Heartbroken, he questions Louise one evening and is dubbledouned when she shows him a scar on her wrist and tells him she feels she belongs to an unknown young man, who gave his life blood to save her in an operation two years before. That’s why J. Dukes Cortwright, coming a moment later, beholds his dearest friend—kissing his dearest sister.

“THE CHOCOLATE SOLDIER”
(Daisy Feature Film—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY H. S. FULD

THIS feature, which is a revival of the musical comedy of the same name, was given a special showing at Weber’s theatre. The original comedy was one of the most popular and successful shows of its kind, that ever ran. The unusual hardships in filming a performance of this kind have been encountered, for the original was helped, to a large extent, by the catchy and tuneful airs as well as the spoken parts of the actors.

This means that most of the humor and wit that made the original so successful is not possible in the production. However, the action and situations as brought out by the actors are of such a kind as to make up in a large measure for these losses.

The cast for this film production was made up as far as possible of the original cast as played in the stage production. There’s no fault to be found in either the acting or the story itself as filmed. It is complete and all the principal scenes that went so far to make the comedy a success are shown.

The original story, the original cast and from the looks of things the original interior stage settings were resuscitated for this production. The latter is the only fault that stares one in the face through the entire production.

It is really too bad that such a production should be spoilt in this manner. It is really so obvious, these painted interior settings, that the painstaking care of the cast and directors should go for nought. The exterior settings leave nothing to be desired. They are well chosen and the scenes about the castle are wonderfully well taken. Some may think the war scenes in the first two reels a trifle too long and hardly enough soldiers used to make them seem realistic, but as it is a comedy these minor trifles might be overlooked.

The photography is, on the whole, fair; the double exposure is a little crude and rather indistinct in spots; but all this would be lost sight of if the interior settings had appeared more “real.”

The plot of the story, showing the fugitive soldier taking refuge in the house of the enemy’s commanding officer, and all the situations brought out where he is protected and shielded in every way by the wife and two daughters, brings out scenes which are really funny. His escape in borrowed clothes with the photograph of each of the three women stowed away in different pockets of his coat unknown to him brings out additional comedy, which is treated in the most humorous manner.

On the whole, if it were not for the interiors as previously mentioned, “The Chocolate Soldier” would make good.

“THE WITNESS INVISIBLE”
(Blinkhorn—Three Reels)
REVIEWED BY CLIFFORD H. PANGBURN

EVEN without the excellent story which is told in this picture it would be well worth seeing as an example of the best in the photographic art. Nearly every scene contains something unusual in the line of photography, while a large number of them are almost unique.

The story concerns the use of a camera to obtain evidence in a murder case. In this connection several scenes take place in a photographic dark room during the developing and printing of the pictures. These scenes are decidedly realistic, the actual appearance of the image on the photographic plates and paper being shown. Several incidents which take place in a chemical laboratory are also shown in a convincing manner. The manufacture of imitation diamonds would hardly deceive anyone familiar with chemistry, but to the ordinary audience will seem very striking.

The acting is in keeping with the photography, and all of the principal parts are handled in a skillful manner, particularly those of the hero and his father.

George Neville, son of a professor of medicine, has promised a vaudeville actress that he will make her some artificial diamonds by a process he has discovered, and thus win her great publicity. As he does not care at all about the woman and does not want to be seen in her company he wears a mask when he goes to the theatre for some preliminary experiments.

A jealous rival of the actress and her lover arrange a camera so as to take pictures in the dressing room which the chemist is visiting, and thus learn his identity. An accident results in the discharge of a pistol and the death of the actress. The young man’s father is compelled to hand him to the police, as he believes him the murderer.

The jealous couple produce the pictures which seem to establish the guilt of the chemist, but withhold others which prove his innocence. The police discover these, and thus learn that the woman’s death was an accident. The innocent man is discharged. Altogether a picture of much merit.

PRODUCTIONS FROM ALL PROGRAMS

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"The Prince Party." (Essanay, Two reels, Fri., Nov. 13.)—A story clever enough in itself to make the showing worthwhile. Leslie Fenton is a man who once romanced Betty Balfour at the London theater, but who now is more interested in making his fortune in the States. The real story is a very ordinary one, but the acting for the most part is effective. Balfour is well as usual, Fenton is her equal, and the other leading players are good enough. The story is adapted from a story by F. S. Hamby.

"The Old Flute Player." (Vitagraph, Two parts, Tues., Nov. 24.)—A flute player in a London theatre goes to America with his pretty daughter, and while there makes the acquaintance of a girl who is dancing on the steamer and gets her a place as a companion to his mother. That flinty person suspects that she is in love with the girl, and thinking she sees a chance to show that boy the true intentions of her, she actually discovers that he has been banished for two years only and can now resume his rank. Edith Storey appears as the count's daughter.

"Mother's Baby Boy." (Lubin, Tues., Nov. 24.)—A slapstick comedy of an effeminate young fellow whose wife has just had a son, and on whom the world is centered. He is discovered to be the lost prince, who disguised himself, sent six of his relations into some town and incidentally found his queen in the daughter of the delighted parents.

"The Serpent Comes to Eden." (Lubin, Mon., Nov. 24.)—The eleventh of the "Beloved Adventure" series. Betty's enemies make her believe that her husband is dead, but in love with another woman. They induce her to leave her happy and faithful husband and to return to the man she loved and with no idea as to the reason for his wife's act. The usual carelessness.

"The Lilies." (Vitagraph, Mon., Nov. 24.)—A young mother marries a man who has been brought up in the wilds, among rough men. She mistakes his hardness for a beautiful character, and when she discovers that he is a beast, she goes away with her baby and is loved by a handsome, kind-hearted man who is also a poor farmer.

"Out of Petticoat Lane." (Selig. Two reels. Mon., Nov. 24.)—A melodrama featuring Addie Groul and Louise Fazenda. A girl is befriended by a wealthy engaged couple, and later married to the landlord by the same woman who brought her together. He is a true lover and she is always kind and grateful. The story is interesting, the acting is good, and the picture is well produced.

"The Girl and the Explorer." (Kalem. Two reels. Wed., Nov. 25.)—Tomb Moore directed and played the lead in this offering, and managed to make it quite an interesting story. In its class of comedy-dramas, the picture is one of the best. It is set in a country with a girl in the case with all her usual charm, and Richard Padovano as the villain is perfect. The romance that follows is very pretty and delightful.

"The Making of Him." (Lubin. Two reels. Wed., Nov. 25.)—A society girl realizes that her husband's father is a thief, and then she is told that he must take her to four months' course in a naval training station. When she arrives, she finds that the course, while two naval officers industriously court her. She has no intention of accepting him, and when she finds that her lover has been made a man by her, she is in no position to help in her father's business, she has no choice but to resign her engagement.

"The Fable of Aggie and the Aggravated Attacker." (Essanay. Wed., Nov. 25.)—A very well produced one, and it makes a very clever comedy. Aggie, having survived all the childhood ailments, is hard hit by one after another. Photography, physical culture, the stage, art and woman's suffrage of these two girls. This is the story of a little white microbe striker her, her long suffering parents receive her suitor as a fine deliverer, and in the struggle through life before the victim has time to change his mind.

"The Butterfly's Wings." (Selig, Wed., Nov. 25.)—A spotted scar is left on the side of some house while the host of admirers. Here a flouting with one of his followers has his revenge in a real way. The story is a very pretty one, and the production is well done.

"Nettie or Letty." (Vitagraph. Wed., Nov. 25.)—A young man at a summer resort is much interested in a young lady until he learns that she is richer than he is. The story is well told, the acting is good, and the picture is well produced.

Some friends arrange things so that the young man is to be given to the lady he loves with laughable results. Dorothy Kelly and James Morrison are featured.

"Snakeville's Reform Wave." (Essanay. Thurs., Nov. 26.)—An old man, who is the head of the Suffragettes, succeeds in voting Snakeville dry. His townsmen are much to his disgust, are forced by their wives to aid them in the dry campaign. The various situations are well played up by the regular Snakeville cast.

"Cause for Thanksgiving." (Vitagraph. Thurs., Nov. 26.)—One of the best small comedies to come out this year.

"Was His Decision Right?" (Lubin. Two reels. Thurs., Nov. 26.)—The familiar melodrama, situation with a young man returned through his love for a woman, who, unknown to him has been a woman of the streets. The lover is the engineer and the clergymen is the lover's past as a man. He is about to tell the man, but is suddenly called away, and the picture which will get a laugh anywhere.

"A Surprise Party." (Selig. Fri., Nov. 27.)—A farce containing many humorous situations, which arise from Mrs. Brown appearing with a hat that Mrs. White had seen on Mr. White's office desk. The cast includes Edith Greenson, John Lancaster, Lyall Leighton and Sefo.

"He Waits Forever." (Vitagraph. Fri., Nov. 27.)—A poor Mexican is in love with a girl and goes away to make his fortune, the girl promises to marry him when he returns. He returns with his army and meets the girl at the head of a rebel army, and sees vengeance for what he has suffered. He returns home and in the absence of his wife he marries her. The picture which will get a laugh anywhere.

"The Musical Barber." (Vitagraph, Fri., Nov. 27.)—A story of the early stages of opera, and the discovery of his discomfort that music does not always charm, at least his style of convivial, Costumes and Confusion." (Vitagraph. Two reels. Sat., Nov. 28.)—A convict escapes and arrives at a hall where a costume ball is being held. An old sport is there with a girl. He learns that his wife is coming and gives the convicts a costume which matches hers. The convict is glad to do it, but when the angry wife arrives he is in a fix. He escapes from her but is eventually caught. Billy Quick appears as the convict.

"The Girl at the Throttle." (Kalem. Sat. Nov. 28.)—The third in the "Hazards of Helen" series. Like the others it is a railroad story, and the present one makes the moves of trains and engines. When a hunter accidentally wounds the enginer of a light engine, the conductor and engineer decide to run from the railroad engine after the express, keeps it and tells him the game is over. When the passenger engine meets the one that is running wild, and the hero of the story takes his place on the last coach, Helen Holmes and the regular cast are seen.

"The Servant Girl's Legacy." (Selig. Sat. Nov. 28.)—The well known situation of a servant girl who becomes the most sought after spinster in the town on receiving a letter. It is explained in the story that her estate is found to be twenty-five dollars, the citizens are more interested in the one on the same reel with "You Can't Beat Them."

"The Fates and Ryan." (Selig, Sat., Nov. 28.)—An interesting and exciting drama built around an automobile accident and the miraculous escape of a clever-voiced police horse, who aids his master in the single-handed capture of a band of counterfeitors. A love story is interwoven, in which the abused niece of one of the counterfeitters marries the unmasked Fate.

"Broncho Billy's Double Escape." (Essanay, Sat., Nov. 28.)—Broncho Billy, an outlaw, is captured by the deputy sheriff. That night he makes another attempt to escape, and, at which the deputy sheriff has lost heavily.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"The Moccasin Print." (Fremier, Sat., Nov. 14.)—A five-reeler which shows how it comes ionously jealous of the woman who replaced her in the cowboy's heart. She repents finally and the other two are allowed unmolested happiness. Joe Frank is the lead player. This picture takes the place of The School Teacher at Angel Camp.

"A Relic of Olden Days." (Frontier, Sat., Nov. 21.)—A man and his daughter unmask an interesting photograph of the old pioneer days. Fred Church is the lead player. This picture takes the place of Man's Treasure.

"The Groom's Doom." (L. K., Sat., Nov. 21.)—A picture is made up entirely of old scenes, until the finale, when all the actors end up wallowing in melodrama. The musical score finally meets his superior when he forces that gentleman into a boxing match. The photography is poor in places.

"Black Hands." (Sterling, Mon., Nov. 23.)—Felix wanders to the cellar and invades a jar of jam; he then wanders up through the house to the attic leaving marks of his presence behind him. His father, who was threatened by an Italian organ grinder, is in deadly fear that the black hand is after him and consequently calls out a detective. The police are the funniest part of the picture; they are led by a comedian who gives promise of a bright future.

"Noodle's Return." (Sterling, Not to be released.)

"As We Journey Through Life." (Nestor, Tues., Nov. 24.)—Murdoch MacQuarrie in a chaste role as the faithful husband. An old man MacQuarrie looks through the family album and sees his wife and26.)—Early Belmont, "Tammany Bill," Young Logan, "Tough-To-Tammy," are two amusing comedy of errors. Henpeck plans to pretend to be a crook, and take him out to enjoy a quiet poker game. Mrs. Henpeck discovers the plan, and then they are caught. The two bachelors, however, also beat them up. The burlager causes additional complications. Henpeck is finally arrested in jail. Mrs. Henpeck at last consents to get her husband out, and the two men are left behind the bars to meditate on their sins.

"The Odalisque." (Majestic. Two reels. Sun., Nov. 15.)—In this case the odalisque is a slave of fashion. A simple shop girl, through her longings, is able to get a position as a dance girl, and furnish her with money. He attempts to make her his mistress, but she turns to the rescue. Excellently played by Blanch Lewis and R. A. Walsh.

"Redbird Wins." (American. Two reels. Mon., Nov. 16.)—Two professional crooks make the acquaintance of a southern colonel, who has a warm heart but little discretion. They win money by crooked gambling and plan to get the rest by dopying his horse which is the favorite in a big race. The suitor of the colonel's daughter discovers the plot, and frustrates it without the crooks knowing of his action. Redbird wins the race in a clever manner because the jockey is thrown. Everyone is happy.

"Our Mutual Girl, No. 44." (Reliance. Mon., Nov. 16.)—Margaret visits Mr. Tappe's millinery shop, with the idea of buying clothes for women's hats. Later Margaret and her aunt, Charlotte, journey to Chicago and see a love story from its aged inmate. Norma Phillips impersonates the woman in her story. This reel should not be sought out. It is a picture that will please.

"The Little Country Mouse." (Majestic. Tues., Nov. 17.)—This is a story of a simple country girl who takes a much desired gift at society life, and finds it greatly disappointing. The plot is simple but very well constructed. It is played with force and humor by R. A. Walsh, and his mother, as a detective, is rescued.

"Pawns of Fate." (Tinanouche.)—Two reels. This is a story that will be considered by a very interesting tale, but unfortunately it is produced poorly. A crook who desires to secure the pardon of his brother kinsman the governor's step daughters, and refuses to give them up until a promise is made by the governor to earn his release by the detection they are rescued.

"The Hidden Message." (Reliance. Wed., Nov. 18.)—Directed by Arthur MacWher, who is an expert in this line. It is the story of that of two tramps, who, after receiving a valuable letter, decide to kidnap his daughter. She is rescued by the sheriff, who is materially helped to make the arrest by the detective and his horse.

"Nipped." (Domino. Two reels. Thurs., Nov. 19.)—A story laid in Mexico concerning a plot of some Japanese who are attempting to further their power there. The story takes some time to develop, but is very entertaining. It is full of action and will surely be well received.

"The Noise of Bombs." (Keystone. Thurs., Nov. 19.)—In this dramatic picture, a trapper has rented his apartment to a man who quarters his bride in the same room. The trapper forgets he has rented his apartment and goes home. His wife, however, goes to the man, and goes to sleep on the mantel. In the morning the trapper finds the girl has rented his apartment and tries force her to marry him, fearing that the escape has compromised her. He is thwarted, and finally his wife is made the laughing stock of the town. Louis Simon is featured. A comedy of semi-slapstick type.

"Fatty's Wine Party." (Keystone. Sat., Nov. 21.)—This comedy is another one that starts off in a fine beginning to end. Syd Chaplin makes his first appearance for others, and he does not survive the test; say, a waiter. Rosece Arbuckle and Mabel Normand also appear. Fatty takes his girl into his favorite cafe, and proceeds to break the ice with a lady. A number of his rivals enter and proceed to order characters, and are served with Osaka wine, and other expensive cates. Then they leave. Fatty, being unused to the beverage, is served with a waiter. He leaves the place minus a few of his clothes, but Mabel stays by him.

"In the Candle Light." (American. Two reels. Thu., Nov. 26.)—A comedy of intrigue, but the introduction of such a large number of characters makes it hard to follow. The photography, scenes and sets are excellent. A tramp has deserted his wife, taking with him his young daughter. Many years later he marries a rich old lady, but on the return of the tramp, the old man discovers that he had grossly misunderstood his first marriage. Josephine Ditt, Jack Richardson, Harry Van Meter and Ernest Wood are a group of very funny and highly absorbing. Richard Cummings is cast as the leader of a band of tramps, who take a terrible revenge on the district manager of a railroad, who has caused them to be thrown off the train whenever caught. They dress him as a hobo and let him have a taste of his own medicine, and he does not survive the test. The sad story is told in the bargain which fits well with the more prominent plot.

"The Mills of the Gods." (Domino. Two reels. Fri., Nov. 27.)—This picture is about a mill in Holland, a gentleman who has just returned from there told us that the atmosphere is very rich for love stories. At any rate, the whole atmosphere; the principals are dressed in Dutch costumes. The story, besides being quite unusual, is entertaining. An old mill owner is led to feel that he is a miser, who lost his wife through the mill. Finally his son kills him in a quarrel. A love story also appears, and makes the film doubly entertaining.

"A Crook's sweetheart." (Kaye-Bee. Two reels. Fri., Nov. 27.)—The crook's sweetheart becomes jealous, because he is paying too much attention to another woman. She betrays him into the hands of the police, but he manages to save him, but is too late. The crook escapes from the police and betrays his former sweetheart and attempts to take her life, but a policeman intervenes in the nick of time. The jump from the roof is the real thrill. Leona Hutton is cast for the role of the girl.

"Before and After." (Royal. Sat., Nov. 28.)—A burlesque of the most extreme type depicting the effects of a large dose of a certain medicine. The infusion of blood, Louis Simon plays the leading part.

ECLECTIC-PATHE

"Help! Murder! Police!"—A slapstick comedy of the rapid-fire type. There is a number of laughable events, and, though this may be one of the variety that is all the go this season, it is laughable, and is a good novelty. "Different" to make a good 10c. A grotesque police department, same to same department, and some really funny rural chaff make the fun and altogether are good 10c-reels.
WEEKLIES

"Mutual Weekly, No. 99." (Tues., Nov. 17.)

Some of the interesting events in this number are:
- The ride of the lodging house fire in New York is one of the most interesting.
- The destruction of the menacing chimneys left standing.
- The $25,000,000 turkeys for the White House table; the illustration shows a few other domestic happenings and several views from the war zone.

"Heart-Seig, News Pictorial, No. 74." (Siegel, Thursday, Nov. 21.)

A book of home events complete the reel.

ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Who wrote the famous poem on which is based the powerful five-part drama

The Price He Paid

UNITED FILM SERVICE (WARNER’S FEATURES, INC.) N.Y.
THE PRICE HE PAID
The most gripping drama ever written, based on the famous poem by
Ella Wheeler Wilcox

The story this remarkable picture tells is one that touches the heart and stirs the blood. Powerful in its appeal, absorbing in its interest and tremendous in the lesson it teaches, "The Price He Paid" is a fitting tribute to the genius of Ella Wheeler Wilcox and an emphatic credit to the Humanology Film Company, which produced it. The biggest 5-part feature of the year.

UNITED FILM SERVICE (WARNER'S FEATURES, INC.,) N.Y.
The first film production of the most dramatic masterpiece of the operatic stage. "Pagliacci" has brought tears and laughter to millions in every corner of the world. A beautiful, intensely interesting photoplay, with Arthur Maude and Constance Crawley as the leads.
United Film Service
Releasing the weekly United program of single-reel comedies and dramas

This single-reel program feature of the complete United Film Service touches the high-water mark of quality. Comedies that are comedies. Splendid pictures of love and adventure.

The United Program is released every week.

Be A Big Man

DON'T confine the limits of your vision to the length of your nose. Don't hug the false idea that you know all there is to know about the motion picture business. Don't be one of those short-sighted nickel-squeezers who condemns everything that doesn't bear his trade-mark. Show yourself to be a man of breadth. Give credit where credit is due.

Great Game of Brains

The motion picture game requires brains—not brains in the crude state that God gave them to you, but brains that sparkle with intelligence, that show signs of training and development. Get down to brass tacks. Be frank, honest and truthful with yourself. Admit that—

Balboa Feature Films

Have invaded the field and forced a lot of old fogies to slip a mournful note into their boastful tune. Balboas have stepped right to the front and on the strength of their merit alone—have carved out permanent places for themselves in the estimation of exhibitors and the hearts of the people.

SURE-FIRE MONEY-GETTERS

Balboas have passed the experimental stage. Their standard of excellence is established and will be maintained. They grow better all the time. So it's up to you—Mr. Exchange Man—to install Balboa guns in your fortifications. Make arrangements to include them in your program. The Balboa Company has a producing capacity of twenty thousand feet of finished negative every six days and is ready to supply you with one or more features each week. Remember St. Elmo, Will O' The Wisp, The Criminal Code, Sacrificial Fires, The Square Triangle, Rose of the Alley and the scores of other Balboas that are making motion picture fans sit up and take notice all over the United States. Get Busy. Write or Wire today.

"THE EDUCATION OF MR. PIPP"
(All Star-Alco-Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY H. S. FULD

It would seem rather more visionary than practical, on first thought to produce a thoroughly logical and complete story from a set of drawings in such a form as to make a film production. And yet the producers of "The Education of Mr. Pipp" have not only produced such a story, but have pictured it in such a manner as to make it a "better-than-the-average" comedy release.

A picturization by Augustus Thomas of his own play, and based on Charles Dana Gibson's drawings, the film is so complete in its plot and story that one's interest never flags for a moment. With the good clean comedy, catchy and humorous sub-titles, there is a laugh every minute.

The actors of the cast are so good in their respective parts that it would not be fair to single out one or two for special mention. Digby Bell plays the part of Mr. Pipp in so realistic a manner that one is apt to be thinking of "poor John" and "Mr. Henpeck" all through the story.

Kate Jopson is Mrs. Pipp, Ida and Julia Pipp are characterized by Bella Duque and Edna Brun, respectively. Count Charnomous, Harry Driscoll, John Willing is played by George Irving, Duc De LaTouraine by Stanley Dark, Baron Haussling by H. D. Blakemore, Lady Fitzmaurice and her son Lord Herbert are played by Mona Ryan and Frank Patten; and all are good.

The Pipp family upon the receipt of four million dollars paid by the Steel Trust moves from Pittsburgh to New York and endeavors to break into society.

The mother to further her ambitious designs, engages a bogus French nobleman who proves to be one of a group of three clever crooks. A trip to Europe is decided on and a check for $75 is given the Frenchman before their departure.

With the aid of his two partners in crime the check is raised to $75,000 and cashed. Willing, the cashier becomes suspicious and succeeds in getting in communication by cable with Pipp and the check is pronounced a forgery.

The rogues are finally located in Paris, and Pipp and Willing and a detective named Pinkerton brings about their capture with the aid of the French secret police.

Mrs. Pipp, realizing the mistake she has made, begs her husband to take her back to Pittsburgh.

The love affairs of the two daughters and Willing and Lord Herbert are brought to a successful conclusion and everything ends happily.

The photography throughout is clear, and there is no lack of sub-titles. The picture taken altogether should add to the producer's reputation.

HORSLEY BUYS BOSTOCK'S WILD ANIMALS

By the largest deal of its sort ever recorded in the motion picture business Frank C. Bostock's trained wild animals are coming back to America to appear in motion pictures for David Horsley. The animals are due to arrive November 18 on the Atlantic Trans-port liner "Minnewaska." While the exact purchase price is not known it may be definitely stated to be in excess of $100,000.

On arriving in New York the animals will be reshipped to Los Angeles accompanied by M. Tudor and the trainers and handlers. In Los Angeles the animals will be installed in new, large and pretentious quarters now being erected on the lot occupied by Mr. Horsley's studios where the producing forces of the new Mina comedies will also be located for the winter.

"CALLED BACK"
(Cosmofotofilm—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY CLIFFORD H. PANGBURN

This is an adaptation of Hugh Conway's novel of the same name, and is an extremely satisfactory example of the putting a book on the screen. One important feature which adds much to the realism and general effectiveness of the picture is the fact that the producers have kept to the period in which the author of the novel laid the story.

This is during the time when Garibaldi was able to find support only from hands of secret plotters. The costumes are all correct, while the furniture and the general interior arrangements are all in keeping with the period supposed to be represented.

The excellence of the costumes and setting is sufficient to give the story a good portrayal, but there are other points of importance, which have been well handled. The acting is of an unusually finished nature.

Jane Gall, as Pauline, is effective and convincing, although she has to appear as a partly insane person during a portion of the film. Henry Ainley, as her husband, is equally good, while Charles Rock is an impressive Macari, leader of anarchists.

The exteriors have been selected with a care which results in a number of harmonious effects, and also brings out the strong points of the photography.

The story of "Called Back" is one which is rather involved for a condensed telling, but which is full of interest, and which is brought off with personal clarity by this version.

Pauline is the niece of Macari, an old Italian, who is well meaning but is interested in what he believes to be the cause of the people in his native land. He uses up the fortune of his niece and nephew for the cause. Fearing that their band will be betrayed to the police if the theft is known one of the men kills the nephew.

His sister sees the crime, and the shock causes her to lose her memory. A blind man who has gotten into the wrong house also walks in while the crime is being committed, but is allowed to go after being drugged because of his blindness. Two years later the blind man is cured, and meets the partly demented girl.

He marries her, and tries to learn of her past. After many complications he gets on the right track, and goes to Siberia, where the girl's uncle is a political prisoner. He gets the whole story from him. On his return his wife has regained her memory, and the murderer meets a just punishment. The young wife and her husband find real happiness.

PIERCE PROPAGANDA BEARS FRUIT

At least one new motion picture department in a Boston daily newspaper will be the result, it is believed, of a luncheon attended by Bosworth, Inc., through its special representative, Carl H. Pierce, at the German room of the Hotel Touraine, Boston, Mass., last week, to prominent newspaper, motion picture and theatrical interests.

Mr. McIsaac, of the Boston "American," stated that he was willing to give the industry a motion picture page in his paper, provided he could receive the cooperation of the Boston exchanges. Whereupon Mr. Abrams, president of the Famous Players Film Company of New England, who was present, promised his entire cooperation at once.

Other newspapers, it is believed, will soon follow suit. Among the guests who were invited to be present were: Daniel Froshman, W. E. Green, vice-president Park Theatre Company; Hiram Abrams, president Famous Players Film Company; J. McIsaac, Boston "American;" John K. Allen, advertising manager "The Christian Science Monitor"; Charles S. Howard, Boston "Globe;" E. H. Crofsh, Boston "Post;" Philip Hale, Boston "Herald;" E. F. Harkins, Boston "Journal;" H. T. Parker, "Transcript;" F. H. Cushman, Boston "Advertiser;" Harry L. Asher and A. McConville, of the Famous Players of New England.

A photoplay production must now be above the average to succeed. Many an excellent picture has failed because it did not have the proper distinction.

Add to a more than average play the drawing power of a big stage star and it will begin to draw where it should - at the start.

Add to this, proper handling and classy advertising matter for the busy exhibitor and you have some idea what Alco is doing.

"IN THE DAYS OF THE THUNDERING HERD" (Selig—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY T. S. MEAD

CALLIN CAMPBELL has spared no pains nor expense in attempting to produce a wild west drama that will hold the audience's attention through five reels of film. Several quite remarkable features help to make this an interesting and truthful presentation of frontier life in '49.

The largest of the few remaining wild buffalo herds is featured throughout the picture. You see them sleeping, grazing, stampeding, hunted, and killed by both rifle and bow and arrow. There is a regular Indian village with its hundreds of redskins in their original dress, and still maintaining their savage customs. They fight the plainsmen and hunt the buffalo with their bows and arrows, showing a skill with these instruments which has not been dulled by the years of civilization.

Scores of prairie schooners of the kind used in old frontier days and an unlimited supply of horses are unstintingly used in this enormous production. The wild scenery of Pawnee Bill's ranch at Pawnee, Oklahoma, furnishes a particularly good setting for the drama.

There are many realistic fights between the plainsmen and the Indians, and of course, with Tom Mix in the leading role, there is no lack of wonderful horsemanship and breakneck riding. Bessie Byton makes an attractive heroine, and both Wheeler Oakman and Red Wing play their Indian parts convincingly.

The story is simply a series of the thrilling adventures of Tom Mingle and Sally Madison, who with a band of immigrants attempt a hazardous trip across the plains to the Californian gold fields where Sally's father is awaiting her.

The band is waylaid and wiped out by a strong tribe of Indians. Sally and Tom, the only survivors, are taken prisoner and their lives are spared, because the Indian chief and his sister take a fancy to them. After many adventures they finally manage to escape, and fall in with a band of buffalo hunters, who in turn are almost wiped out by Indians. Help arrives in the nick of time and Sally and Tom at last reach their destination in safety.

STEINER MAY LOCATE ON PACIFIC COAST

"BILL" STEINER, the general manager of the Photo Drama Company, in Denver, Col., headed for the coast, reports that "After the Ball," featuring Kelcey and Shannen, is being grabbed up all along the line. He has sold several Western States, and opened new offices in many cities, so that bookings will be made more convenient for all exhibitors and save time on deliveries.

The Photo Drama Company have a big surprise in store to be sprung on the trade in the near future. California capitalists are awaiting "Bill's" arrival, and, incidentally, have made arrangements for a large modern studio there.

"Bill" may locate there, while "Jim" Maher will manage the affairs of the company in New York. Pierce Kingsley has been commissioned to look after the selection of the best known stars and film subjects available.

REICHENBACH LEAVES LASKY

HARRY REICHENBACH, advertising and publicity manager of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company since its beginning last winter, leaves that firm Saturday, November 21, for work in other fields. His plans have not yet been announced.

Novel and effective ideas in advertising and publicity were continually emanating from the Lasky offices during Mr. Reichenbach's tenure of office, as were to be expected from a man of his long experience in both fields. He did much to establish that company's prestige throughout the trade.

H. Whitman Bennett, lately associated with the Mutual and the Shuberts, will be Mr. Reichenbach's successor.

PATHE CAMERAMAN HONORED

General Baumgarten, commander of the French troops in Morocco, in a letter to Pathe Freres has highly praised the conduct of their cameraman, who was present during the attack of Taza.

With remarkable coolness the cameraman, M. Pierre Chavarous, while directly in the line of fire, continued to take his pictures with apparently no thought of his own safety. The pictures secured are said to be remarkable.

Yet of all forms of photoplay the short comedy is the most difficult to produce.

MinA Films are the result of careful study and long preparation for this especial work, backed up by years of successful experience in the production of every style of picture.

Not a word was said about the time and money and effort being spent in the perfecting of MinA Films until they had reached the heart-breaking standard set by their producer.

Early in September that high mark had been surpassed and as proof of their extraordinary merit, MinA Films were added to the regular licensed program and, commencing on Thursday, December 17th, the first weekly release will be made through the

"LITTLE JACK"
(Malibu-Box Office—Three Reels)
REVIEWED BY CLIFFORD H. PANGBURN
A NOTHER picture in which Jackie Saunders gives proof of her versatility. The story is one which calls for a wide range of acting. At its opening Miss Saunders is seen as a little country girl, who has been brought up as a boy. She plays the part with great realism, and incidentally runs about barefoot over some country that many actresses would not care to tackle even if fully shod. The unfavorable nature of country does not appear to bother her in the least.
Later Miss Saunders is seen as a young girl living in comfortable surroundings, and still later as a young woman of fashion. She carries off all the parts satisfactorily. Her various impersonations are at all times interesting to watch.
The supporting cast is a strong one. P. E. Peters, who appears opposite Miss Saunders, makes an interesting hero, although it is really the girl who does most of the heroic work.
There is a large number of attractive scenes, among which the closing one is deserving of special mention. It shows the lovers seated on some great boulders at the edge of the sea. The interior scenes are well handled, particularly those showing the offices of the partners in the lumber business.
Little Jack was brought up by her uncle, the leader of a gang of outlaws, and in order to protect her he dresses her as a boy. When Moran, a wealthy lumber dealer, comes to the place for the night she warns him that he will be robbed. Then in fear she runs away.
In the city she falls in with another bunch of thieves who force her to join in robbing an office. She is wounded by the watchman and taken to the hospital. There the lumber dealer discovers that she is the same person who warned him of his danger a few days earlier. He takes her home and her mother cares for her. Her partner is cheating him by falsifying the books. Two years later the firm is nearly bankrupt. Little Jack, now an attractive young woman, discovers the partner's crookedness and proves it by a clever ruse. Then she and the honest partner find happiness together.
The picture deserves and will probably attain success.

Count Your Blessings!

(No. 57. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talks by Carl Laemmle, President Universal Film Mfg. Co.)

We make so many pictures every week that it is simply impossible to do justice to them in our advertising. Week after week we are shoving veritable masterpieces into our regular program WITH A BARE ANNOUNCEMENT AS TO THEIR TITLE AND RELEASE DATE.

If any so-called “feature concern” could get its hands on film of such supreme merit it would pack the trade journals with advertising until their covers fairly bulged. It would rent the films out at $25 to $50 per day, and plaster the front of the theatres with posters that would cry sensationalism to the high heavens.

But we put them IN THE REGULAR PROGRAM AND THEY DON'T COST YOU A SINGLE EXTRA CENT! We save you the $25 to $50 that you would have to pay the outside “feature man.” This happens not just once in a while, but every week AND SEVERAL TIMES EVERY WEEK!

In this way WE ACTUALLY SAVE YOU MORE THAN YOUR WHOLE FILM SERVICE COSTS.

Read the last sentence again and let it percolate and percolate and percolate.

Like the old woman who lived in a shoe and had so many children she didn’t know what to do, we simply don’t know how to tell the story about each great film each and every week. We would be accused of exaggeration. The bare truth about our pictures would sound too good to be true. And we can't find time or space to tell even a tenth part of all the truth about our master productions.

But, as the Scotch writer, McLaury, puts it, there is “nothing covered that shall not be revealed.” The truth about our pictures is revealed to the thousands of exhibitors who use them and to the millions of people who see them. Exhibitors often write to tell us what a wonderful subject this or that was, and they express surprise that we have not advertised it more liberally.

In other words, no matter how much they expect of us WE GIVE THEM MORE THAN THEY EXPECT. This is a mighty healthy basis of operations. Exhibitors who do not use the Universal Program and who, therefore, do not see it regularly have said they thought we drew a long bow in our advertising. But that is merely because they DO NOT SEE THE UNIVERSAL PROGRAM REGULARLY. If they did, they would realize that we don't boast half enough about the good things which we crowd into every week’s program.

TO UNIVERSAL EXHIBITORS! I SAY THIS:—No matter what you are paying for your Universal service you are getting it dirt cheap. You are getting several pictures every week which would cost you $25 to $50 a day if we took them off of our regular program and released them as specials or marketed them through some fake syndicate. You have often paid great big prices for pictures not to be compared with those on our regular weekly program.

The Universal PUTS ITS OWN NAME ON EVERY PICTURE IT RELEASES. It has never organized subsidiary companies in order to release pictures at higher prices than our regular customers are paying. We have ALWAYS PROTECTED UNIVERSAL EXHIBITORS IN THIS AND EVERY OTHER RESPECT. And we intend to protect them always.

We could have sold state rights on dozens of our two and three-reel features, and we could have made a lot of quick money doing it. But these pictures would have gone into direct competition with the exhibitors who are giving us their REGULAR SUPPORT. So, in every instance, we have given Universal exhibitors first crack at all of our masterpieces.

Even now, when we intend to release our next serial, “The Master Key,” as a special we are doing it THROUGH THE REGULAR UNIVERSAL EXCHANGES, and they in turn are going to give Universal exhibitors the preference in booking it. The exchanges will charge extra money for “The Master Key.” They will have to. We are charging them the highest record price for it, and they’ll have to make you share the extra cost. That’s one of the many reasons why I have been urging you to INCREASE YOUR PRICE OF ADMISSION so you can shift part of the burden on to your patrons.

So, when your exchange man breaks the news to you, remember the dozens of features you’ve had without paying a cent extra. COUNT YOUR BLESSINGS.

CARL LAEMMLE,
President.

“Master Key” Opens Door of Success
With the Help of Robert Leonard, a Popular Leading Man, and Ella Hall, Known as "the Little Doll of the Films"

T HE Universal Film Manufacturing Company is bending every effort to have its newest serial photoplay, “The Master Key," surpass any previous serial ever attempted by the company. John Fleming Wilson has furnished a story of unusual dramatic qualities; those who have already read this script, say that it outdoes the best of his previous works.

STARS OF UNIVERSAL'S SERIAL “THE MASTER KEY” AND ITS AUTHOR

ROBERT LEONARD  ELLA HALL  J. FLEMING WILSON

John Fleming Wilson is one of the best writers of fiction of our present day and that Robert Leonard and Ella Hall, the stars who will play the leading roles in the “Master Key,” are two of the most popular young stars in screenland is admitted.

Mr. Wilson is too well known for comment on his work. He is noted as a writer of fiction which is unsurpassed for realism. Some of his better known works are: “The Land Claimers Across the Latitude,” “The Man Who Came Back” and “Princess of Sorry Valley.” In the “Master Key,” however, he claims he has accomplished the height of his ambition. By special arrangements, this story will run in serial form in newspapers in the United States and Canada while weekly episodes of two reel lengths will be shown in the leading theatres.

In selecting Robert Leonard to play John Dore, the young mining engineer and the hero of the play, the Universal has indeed made a happy choice. A six-footer, broad-shouldered, with a strong, expressive face, he is ideally fitted to play this role.

Mr. Leonard is vitally interested in his work and realizing what a tremendous opportunity the Universal Company has given him in offering the stellar role in “The Master Key," he has devoted all his spare time to study of his part. He has familiarized himself with every scene, every line of action, every detail of the great story so that he has, at his finger tips, everything necessary for the assured scenes of the play. For weeks, his spare moments were devoted to unearthing secrets of the mining engineering clan.

Starting as a chorus man eight years ago in Los Angeles, Mr. Leonard has managed to work his way to the top. It is a little more than three years ago that the call of the films made itself known to him and soon the Universal Company in California engaged him to play juvenile leads. Then he became leading man for the Otis Turner Company, and assisted Mr. Turner in producing “Swede Larson,” “The Little Sister,” “The Decision,” and many others. Little Ella Hall, Mr. Leonard's leading lady is sometimes called “The Little Doll of the Films.” She is a clever little actress and one of the most ambitious players on the screen. Her remarkable versatility is being shown in this serial. Here she is called upon to express every emotion and she attains a height which astounds one. That such a young actress — she is barely eighteen — can play the part of a woman torn between conflicting emotions such as are portrayed in “The Master Key” is remarkable.

“CLANSMAN” IS COMPLETE

M ANY have been the photoplays of six, seven, or eight reels for which it has been claimed that three or four or five thousand persons acted in their various scenes. So perfect has been the eye of the camera that its bold omnipotence has been able to show all these people at once, moving in a long column, or weaving to and fro across the stage, or in the full retreat of a defeated army.

It has remained for two men — already upsetters of photoplay tradition and creators of new methods — to pass beyond this stage and to leap into prominence with the — one almost might say effrontery, but perhaps it would be more descriptive to say daring, to put 15,000 human beings in one mob into numerous scenes in a brand new film drama.

As soldiers of the United States Army, as members of the famous Ku Klux Klan, as natives of the city in which the dramatic action takes place, and as the objects of the wrath of all these people, are 12,000 of these actors shown. Three thousand more are negroes, fleeing from the wrath to come as from a scourge. The negroes, hunted by the white rescuers of the Southern states from political domination by the blacks, are seen fleeing before the Ku Klux Klan, and saved only by the regiments of Federal troops sent to their aid.

It is in a film dramatization of “The Clansman,” Dr. Dixon's famous story of Reconstruction days, that these huge mobs are seen. And the two men who dared to employ so many people, weld them into a homogenous mass, and then train them to be capable actors, are D. W. Griffith, the $100,000-a-year director of the Mutual Film Corporation, and Harry E. Aitken, its president.

Mae Marsh, Blanche Sweet, Dorothy and Lillian Gish carry the burden in “The Clansman” of the women leads. Henry Walthall, Spottiswoode Aitken, and other actors of equal renown, take the leading male roles. Always Griffith did the directing, whether one actor was in a scene or ten thousand, and George Bitter, one of the best known of motion picture camera men, took the pictures.

It has not been definitely announced just when “The Clansman” will be released. Probably it will be within the next two or three weeks. “The Clansman,” according to President Aitken's plans, will be seen first on Broadway.

ELEANOR WOODRUFF A RED CROSS NURSE

If Eleanor Woodruff, Pathé leading lady, holds to her decision to go to the European war as a nurse, the world of the screen will suffer a severe loss. There are too few actresses of Miss Woodruff's type at present in films not to give her exit more than passing notice.

Though Miss Woodruff did not get her name in the bright lights on Broadway before her advent into the screen world, she played important parts in "The Gamblers," "Beverly of Graustark," "The Spendthrift," "The Five Frankliners," and in stock.

At the suggestion of some of her friends she tried film drama and became an instantaneous success. Wonderfully versatile, her chief charm lay in her portrayal of emotional parts. Some of her best known film parts have been Katrina in "The Last Volunteer," as Beth in "All Love Excelling," as Mrs. Stevens in "The Stain," as Helen in "The Ticket of Leave Man," and others. She has just finished a part in another large production staged and produced for Pathé by George Fitzmaurice, which will be released soon.

After the outbreak of the war in Europe she became actively engaged in the work of the American Red Cross Society. Learning that the French house of Pathé had organized a number of Red Cross corps from their large staff which they had equipped and are maintaining at the front at their own expense, and feeling deeply the shortage of hospital help to care for the large number of wounded and sick, she volunteered for this work. Her offer was accepted as the work of the Pathé studios had been largely suspended, and she leaves in a week or two to take charge of one of the Pathe field hospitals.

War on White Plague Taught In New Feature

"For the Good o' Humanity," by Exhibitors Producing and Exchange Syndicate, Reveals Valuable Lessons on Tuberculosis—Stoermer the Producer

Exhibitors' Producing and Exchange Syndicate of Los Angeles has completed its first feature production, "For the Good o' Humanity," a six reel subject with a heart interest story that demonstrates the method used successfully by a well known sanitarium for the cure of tuberculosis if treatment is applied in the early stages of the disease.

The picture was produced by William Stoermer, who also wrote the scenario using an idea from a thesis prepared by a local physician and surgeon for the health department of the federal government.

"We will see the entire picture projected within the next few days," Mr. Stoermer said in the cutting room of the studio the other day, "when prominent members of the medical profession will be asked to see it and find a single scene that is not absolutely technically correct, and at the same time so depicted that it will make a very strong appeal to the laymen, and teach a great lesson with regard to health and happiness."

The company was organized by Mr. Stoermer, a well-known theatrical producer, one of whose greatest successes was the staging of the Oberammergau Passion Play at the Auditorium Theatre in Los Angeles two years ago, in which more than a thousand took part. The producer, who owns the American rights for this, played the part of Christ. Mr. Stoermer is president; Warren Gellilen, retired Los Angeles banker, vice-president; Lute Gellilen, treasurer and business manager; and E. K. Oswalt, secretary. The company has purchased what is known as the "Old Majestic studio," 619 Fairview avenue, Los Angeles.

Durango, Latest Addition to Alliance Ranks

New Company Locates Studio in Section of Colorado Noted for Wide Variety of Scenery—Will Release Eight Features a Year

One of the latest additions to the growing ranks of feature concerns is the Durango Film Producing Company. The organizer is G. V. Garrison, formerly a member of the firm of Middleton and Garrison. The studio has been located at Durango, Colo., thus offering an opportunity to produce pictures in a part of the country which has never been used for that purpose. The wide variety of landscapes which can be found within a short radius of the studio will make it a comparatively easy matter to take pictures calling for every type of scenery.

From Durango to the mines is a matter of only three hours. All kinds of backgrounds for Western and other scenes calling for mining and quarrying locations can be found in this district. Even nearer at hand is an Indian reservation on which about 20,000 Navajos and 3,000 Utes are permanent residents.

As many of these Indians as are needed can be obtained for pictures calling for the appearance of redskins. Another advantage is a large lake and a river on which are motorboats and other craft of many types. This will make it possible to obtain all sorts of water effects. Besides this there is plenty of mountain and prairie scenery, the former being particularly beautiful and for the most part of a type never seen on the screen.

The present plans call for the production of eight five-reel features a year. It is planned to make these first-class productions in every way, and to take full advantage of the exceptional scenic opportunities afforded by the location of the studio. The films produced will be released through the Alliance program.

"HEART OF THE NIGHT WIND"
(Victor-Universal—Three Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

WHILE with the Edison company Mary Fuller acquired a reputation as the embodiment of all that was poetic in a dramatic sense. The parts that were built for her especial personality would have been failures if given to a less accomplished actress than Miss Fuller. It was she who created them, and in creating them, her name was established.

From her performances witnessed up to the present time under the brand of Victor, she seems to have advanced considerably along these lines. This, of course, is natural, but would have presented greater difficulties if in the present pictures that she is appearing in, she was not directed by the same director, Walter Edwin, who formerly directed her. And then again, the other lead of the picture is Charles Ogle, whose name has long been associated with that of Mary Fuller.

The rest of the cast is new but fit into the general atmosphere of the picture in a way that calls for praise. Edmund Mortimer plays the hero of this picture, while Mr. Ogle is shifted to the role of heavy. William Morris and H. R. Barker assist the principals and the supers that appear well trained.

The scenes of this picture are laid in a lumber camp and are very pretty. They seem to possess individuality, accountable in all probability to the fact that they have never appeared in other pictures. They are not familiar at least; are very well chosen, and are backed by photography only slightly below the regular Universal standard.

In plot the picture is simple yet always absorbing; practically two separate stories make their appearance, but they are connected by a well built series of events, and even though the second one neglects the former to a large extent, it will hardly be noticed by anyone.

By helping the lumber camp owner out of a great difficulty, "Heart of the Night Wind," as she is termed by the Indians, wins his everlasting gratitude. Later when she has grown to love him she is led to believe that he is false through a woman who loves the same man.

But he quickly puts matters aright and the story ends happily for the two lovers.

BOX OFFICE HAS STRONG ARRAY OF FEATURES

TWENTY-TWO features dealing with a diversity of problems and staged amidst varying surroundings are being released at stated intervals by The William Fox Box Office Attraction Company under the brand names of Balboa, Nemo and White Star. The players are known to all film fans.

Edwin August, with a Biograph and Universal reputation, Dorothy Davenport and Jackie Saunders, featured in Mutual and Universal films, Henry King, Nuella Gerber, Henry Strother and Daniel Gilfeather, all players who at one time or another have starred in films made by Vitagraph, Biograph, Lubin and other manufacturers, are known wherever pictures are shown throughout the world.

Edwin August is seen to advantage in "The Awakening" and "The Great Secret." Jackie Saunders ascends remarkable heights of histrionic effort characterizations of juveniles in "Little Jack" and "Little Sunbeam," "Rose of the Alley" and "Through Night to Light." Her clever performances are not only certain to attract attention but also bring her close to the heart of every movie fan. The others scintillate in "Storms of Life," "Seeds of Jealousy," "The End of the Bridge," "The Vow" and "Through Fire and Water".

There and a few more as just as powerful are being booked through the Box Office exchanges located in New York, Boston, Syracuse, Washington, D. C., Pittsburgh, Kansas City, Cleveland, St. Louis, Dallas, Minneapolis, Denver, Seattle and San Francisco.

TAKING WRECK SCENES OFF MARBLEHEAD

O. C. LUND and six of the principals of the cast that is at present working on the production of "The Marked Woman," a five-reel feature that the Peerless Feature Film Company is to release shortly, are at Marblehead, Mass., taking a number of shipwreck scenes. The company will remain at the Massachusetts seacoast resort for about a fortnight. Those who traveled with Mr. Lund are Miss Barbara Tennant, William C. Bailey, George Cowl, William Edmondson, Joseph Baker, Mary Nevarro and Fred "Daredevi" Probst.

EDISON AND "MIRROR" START PRIZE CONTEST

FOLLOWERS of motion pictures will be interested in a prize contest about to be started by the New York "Dramatic Mirror" in collaboration with Thomas A. Edison, Inc.

Mark Swan, author of the "Andy Series" and a score of other Edison photoplays, as well as successful plays for the legitimate stage, has written two-thirds of a one-reel photoplay, and "The Mirror" is offering a prize of fifty dollars for the best completion of the story submitted by a reader, four prizes of ten dollars each, for the next best endings, and a prize of ten dollars for the most suitable title.

The completed photoplay will be produced by Thomas A. Edison, Inc., with full credit on the screen to the contestant who supplies the prize winning ending.

THE Photoplay Productions Releasing Company, 37 South Wabash avenue, Chicago, is preparing to place upon the market "Forgiven" or the Jack o' Diamonds," featuring Edwin Forsberg, who played the part of the Jack o' Diamonds in the stage play of "Forgiven." This picture is in six parts. The owners of the picture are resorting to an unusual method of advertising it by means of four-hundred twenty-four sheet billboards, distributed over Chicago, supplemented by newspaper advertising. They think well of the picture, and they would not be inclined to enter into such an enormous expense if this will entail the picture will be shown in November 27.

HANDLES "NORTHERN LIGHTS" AND "CAPTAIN SWIFT"

NED MALLOUF, up to this time office manager of the Life Photo Film Corporation, has resigned as manager of the Life Photo Corporation, and has been constituted by them their booking agent and representative on the two prior feature releases of that company, "Northern Lights" and "Captain Swift."

Mr. Mallouf will maintain his offices in the suite now occupied by the Life Photo Film Corporation at 220 West Forty-second street.

His successor as office manager of the company is William Tobias, formerly the northern New York State representative for that company.

Putting New Life Into the Balcony

One of the most remarkable moves in the recent development of the motion picture theatre is the growing tendency toward convenience for the patrons and installation of machinery which insures greater business efficiency.

The motion picture houses, which are being built in the larger cities of the country particularly, are works of art. They contain the very best of everything and in many cases are far superior to the "legitimate" houses. This is natural, for more people see pictures than go to the theatres.

How Shall I Bring Them Back?

In order to bring these patrons back day after day, courteous attendants, comfortable chairs and the like must be supplied, not to mention the showing of the best obtainable films with carefully studied projection. All these things and more must be looked into and supplied to insure increasing attendance.

While all this is being done by the builder or exhibitor who is remodeling, there is a question of self-protection which must be worked out. "How can I get the most out of my balcony? How can it be made the most attractive part of the house?"

This is a question of vital importance to every manager of a large house.

Present day admission prices to the up-to-date picture houses are far too low. Consider the cost of producing the pictures, the rental price and all the incidental expenses, and then stop to think what you are giving your patrons. When all this has been considered, how can you blame the man who says, "How can I fill every corner of my house?"

Present Prices Too Low

Two shows in the afternoon and two in the evening with but a short intermission in which to empty the house and fill it again means that speed must be employed or money lost. This speed must be effected without the patrons realizing it.

Houses without balconies usually are equipped with large exit doors which solve the question of allowing the audience rapid exit. The balcony type theatre which is the one with the largest seating capacity must be studied more carefully. The main things to be considered are:

First—The saving of time in filling and emptying the balcony.

SECTION K-H

SIDE ELEVATION OF CLEAT TYPE, SINGLE FILE DESCENDING OR REVERSIBLE ESCALATOR (TYPE "RPC-B")
Second—The ability to charge higher prices for balcony seats.
Third—Added comfort to the patrons.
Fourth—The economy in room, for every foot is worth its price of admission at every show.

These troubles have been solved by many theatre owners by the installation of the Otis "cleat type" escalator system. This does away absolutely with one flight of stairs to the balcony and enables the actual saving of space because the remaining flight need not be as wide as it otherwise would be.

Teach Public to Use Escalator
There would be no real need for a flight of stairs at all, were it not that some people are not educated up to the use of the escalator. The majority, however, prefer this quick and easy method of transportation and without their knowledge they are helping the theatre manager to overcome his greatest problem—the saving of time.

The capacity of the two-foot escalator is 3,600 per hour, while that of the four-foot is 11,000 per hour. This gives an idea of the efficiency of the installation from the time-saving point of view. In addition, it is absolutely noiseless, thus avoiding the usual confusion of stairs.

The escalator also makes the balcony a far more profitable part of the house, for together with its ease of access it also means that the admission price can be raised. One of the progressive houses has gone so far as to charge the same price for balcony seats as those in the orchestra. Not satisfied with this it keeps the doors to the orchestra closed till the balcony is filled.

When the prices are not the same it allows the inform to attend the show without having to climb stairs or pay the orchestra prices.

The actual working of the escalator is very simple, for it takes but the turning of a switch to change the direction in which it is running. Figuring that the necessary current for running the escalator is but about thirty minutes each day, it is easy to see that the actual cost is light, whereas the saving in time and space makes its installation a decided advantage as well as good investment.

Comfortable for Passengers
The illustration shows the construction of the tread for the "cleat type" escalator which has proven itself to be very practical and safe in operation.

The step treads are so nearly horizontal, the angle being only twelve and a half degrees, that the foot of the passenger is in a very comfortable position while riding either up or down. They are made of hard maple bolted to a steel bushed chain which passes over sprocket wheels at the upper and lower ends of the machine. Attached to the treads at intervals of one foot

Fire Panic Prevention Devices a Feature of Delft Theatre
Upon completion of his inspection of the new Delft Theatre building in Marquette, Mich., Deputy State Fire Marshal Dewey made the statement that he never inspected a more complete and better protected structure of its kind.

"It is as near perfect in this regard as a theatre could be built. It is the best equipped and most thoroughly protected theatre of its size in the State today." The exits of the new playhouse and their locking arrangements were said to be exceptionally good. They open very easily and it would be almost impossible for a crowd to jam in the door ways; the slightest shove against them causes the portals to swing wide open to the outside.

LARGEST HOUSE IN BUFFALO NEAR COMPLETION
Mrs. Lillian M. Hastings, manager of the Victoria Theatre, Buffalo, and who will manage the New Victoria, announces that she has contracted for the Box Office, Alco and Shubert-Brady features, which means that the New Victoria will be the home of all the big productions in Buffalo.

The New Victoria will be the largest house in Buffalo devoted exclusively to photoplays. It will have a seating capacity of 2,500. A fifteen-piece orchestra under the direction of Herman E. Schultz has been engaged. There will be no balcony in the New Victoria.

Most luxurious fittings will be in evidence everywhere. The house is owned by the Mitchell H. Mark Realty Company, owners of the Strand, New York.
Fort Wayne AC Compensarcs Make Proper Voltage Reduction

The Fort Wayne Compensarc is a static transformer device, designed to reduce the voltage of the incoming alternating current to that which is proper for the operation of the motion picture projection arc.

The device is complete in itself, there being no auxiliary device external to it. It is designed to be installed in the operating booth and at a position convenient to the operator, so that without moving from his place, he can, by adjustment of the control switch, vary the current flow through his projection arc.

The standard device is designed to give 30, 40 and 60 amperes, but may be furnished for any other three values of current, 60 amperes and below. The AC Compensarcs are furnished for either 60 or 133 cycle circuits, and for service, either 110 or 220 volts alternating current circuit.

In mechanical and electrical construction, the AC Compensarcs have the same excellence characteristic of power and lighting transformers, the same high grade sheet steel being used in the core, and the highest grade of copper wire and insulation being present in the coils.

Core on Cast Iron Base

The assembled core and coils are supported by a cast iron base having four legs which hold the device at a convenient height from the floor. The case proper, also made of cast iron, rests on top of the core in such manner as to protect the connections to the coils. A plate top resting on this case acts as a terminal board for the connections and support for the adjusting switch, the handle of which projects through the cast iron cover.

The handle of the adjusting switch is heavily insulated, so that there is no danger of the operator receiving electrical shocks, and the cover prevents any contact with live wires at this point. This adjusting switch is so arranged that the change from one value of current to another is made without breaking the circuit so that there is no need of the operator restriking an arc when adjustment is made.

The AC Compensarcs will not overheat. They are constructed electrically so that if the carbons of the arc lamp be left in contact with the circuits closed, the compensarcs will automatically protect themselves from burning out or blowing the fuses.

The control switch of the compensarcs has besides the three operating positions, a fourth position at which the circuit to the lamp is open; therefore, when the operator wishes to change carbons, it is not necessary for him to open the line switch; all that is necessary being that he set the switch of the compensarc at position marked "off."

Fort Wayne DC and AC to DC Compensarcs

The valuable features of the AC Compensarcs are that they are perfectly safe to handle, that they do not generate excessive heat and are absolutely free from danger of burn-out; that they occupy small space and can be placed in the operating room convenient to the operator, and withal, effect big savings of current from the line over that which would be consumed if a rheostat were used to secure the voltage reduction.

The AC Compensarc is simple to connect in circuit. Two leads coming from the top of the device and marked "Line" are for connection to the power circuit, while two other leads labeled "Lamp" must simply be connected to the projection arc lamp.

The AC Compensarcs are designed to reduce the voltage of the incoming supply of electrical energy to an amount proper for the operation of the motion picture projection arcs.

motor-generator sets, inasmuch as each machine has two separate armatures and two separate frames, but both compensars are different from the ordinary motor-generator sets in regard to the electrical windings.

In the DC Compensarc, both armatures are mounted on the same shaft supported by two bearings, which are built into the outer end flanges of the magnet frames. A special intermediate flange holds the two magnet frames rigidly in position so that no sub-base is required to maintain them in perfect alignment.

The windings of the DC Compensarc are similar to that in the ordinary direct current balancer sets but are varied so as to give a peculiar volt-ampere characteristic curve, such that when the current at the arc reduces, the voltage automatically increases in such a manner that a stable arc results, without using any lamp steadying resistance.

This winding absolutely protects the machine from the blowing of the fuses, over-heating, or other damage, when the arc is left in contact. This is especially valuable to the operator in that it allows him to try the carbons together when burning the crater into proper shape.

Motor End Has Three Heads

The motor end of the direct current compensarc has three leads, so that it may be connected to a standard direct current motor starting box equipped with no voltage release, so that in case the supply voltage fails, the machine will be automatically protected.

The generator end of the outfit has two main leads which go to the motion picture arc lamp, and a smaller lead which goes to the small generator field rheostat by means of which the operator controls the machine, easily increasing or decreasing the current in the picture machine arc lamp.

In mechanical and electrical construction the machines have the same excellence that is characteristic of larger power motors and generators. They are so small that they can usually be installed directly in the operating booth, as they require no special foundations and are practically noiseless in operation. They economy in the use of electrical energy from the line and practically eliminate fire risk.

The AC to DC Compensarc besides making the necessary reduction in the voltage of the incoming supply of electrical energy, also converts the alternating current into direct current for use at the projection machine arc lamp. The motor end of the AC to DC Compensarc is a standard induction motor of single-phase, two-phase, or three-phase, depending upon the kind of current supplied to the theatre.

The generator end of the set is mechanically and electrically quite similar to the generator end of the DC Compensarc, but the inner bearing in the motor supports the armature of the generator at the one end through the rigid shaft coupling which joins the shaft of motor and generator.

Peculiar Volt-Ampere Traits

Similar to the DC Compensarc, the generator end of the AC to DC Compensarc has a peculiar volt-ampere characteristic which automatically causes an increase in voltage when the current in the arc is reduced so that the same steady arc results without the use of lamp steadying resistance.

The machine is automatically protected from the blowing of the fuses, over-heating, and other damages, when the arc carbons are left in contact, so that the operator can fry his carbons together when burning the crater into proper shape.

The motor of the AC to DC Compensarc is connected to the line in the manner regularly employed in connecting induction motors. The generator has the leads necessary for the connecting of the lamp and field controlling rheostat.

The same quality of materials and grade of workmanship used in the construction of large power motors and generators enters into the construction of these sets. They are small and practically noiseless in operation and, since they require no special foundation, they can usually be installed directly in the operating booth. They are economical in the use of electrical energy from the line and practically eliminate fire risk.

Both the AC and AC to DC Compensarc are built in different sizes so as to be especially suited for the operation of a single arc, or two projection arc systems alternately.

They are supplied for service on all standard commercial supply circuit voltages, so that there is a machine, particularly adapted, for practically every motion picture projection.

The Value of a Carbon Economizer

When the European war was a certainty many of the exhibitors and exchange managers made an effort to secure all the available imported carbons that they could purchase at the regular price. Many were satisfied to pay more than the normal price because it was evident that there would be a shortage in this necessary commodity and that the article in a short time would be selling at a premium.

This has come true and at the present time imported carbons are 300 per cent. higher than they were three months ago, and those made in this country have also taken a jump in price.

With an article so necessary selling at such an increase, it brought to the minds of many the waste that exhibitors have shown previously and some way in which this unnecessary waste of 40 or 50 per cent. of a carbon could be eliminated.

This waste has been overcome by the Carbon Economizer which was invented by Claude Talley, former manager of the Regent Theatre, New York City, and president of the Regent Theatre Company. Mr. Talley conceived the idea of the Carbon Economizer when trouble first started among the European powers and at that time applied for a patent on the device.

The Carbon Economizer is made of brass composition. This is a good conductor, will stand excessive heat and will not increase resistance. They are 3½ inches in length; 1½ inches long and 2½ inches wide. The other 2½ inches is used to hold the carbon. The device is made in ½ inch, ¾ inch, and 1½ inch sizes, is round to give perfect contact, and will burn a carbon from 6 inches to ½ inch.

The section that holds the carbon is split in the center on both sides to allow for tension on the carbon and will spring back when the tension is released to remove the carbon. As the carbon burns the tension can be released, the carbon moved up until it is held by one-quarter of an inch and then burned until it is from one-half to three-quarters of an inch from the end of the economizer.

In order that the tension screw will not come in contact with the carbon and consequently weld to the body of the device, a collar fits around the top of the economizer, which is pinned to the body; the screw passes through this collar to the outer portion of the body. When the screw is turned it presses the walls of the economizer together and holds the carbon firmly in the container until the screw is loosened. The tension screw is made to allow for expansion of the metal under heat and can be turned without injury when red hot.

The Life Limit of a Motion Picture Machine

The question has been asked "How long will a motion picture machine last and give good service under present day requirements?"

At a dinner party a couple of years ago, one of the prominent manufacturers expressed the opinion that the average life of a motion picture machine is about two years, but it seems that all manufacturers do not agree on this point.

In December, 1917, the Colonial theatre, of Kalama-zoo, Mich., then under the management of W. H. Johnson, purchased the first Motograph machine that was turned out by the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company. After having been in continuous use during the seven years, the factory has the following letter from the present owner of the machine:

"Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company.

"I would advise that the machine in question is in very good condition and the results obtained with it are very satisfactory."

"Yours truly,"

"H. H. B."

Some time later the manufacturers offered within $75 of the original cost of the machine to be allowed as a credit on a new machine, but the offer was rejected. The incident is, to say the least, a significant one in projection history.

Beautiful Theatre Adorns Kansas City

A MOTION picture house comparing with anything in the East for architectural beauty is the Willis Wood of Kansas City. It has all the imposing grandeur of an Italian palace, and is a lit structure for the exhibition of the best in film drama. The accompanying illustrations testify to the magnificence of the Willis Wood.

Exterior of the Willis Wood, Kansas City

It was formerly a Klaw and Erlanger "legitimate" house, and cost $300,000. The Lappe and Tigh Amusement Company, the new lessee, spent $50,000 in remodeling and furnishing. The theatre seats 1,600.

One of the features of the house is a subterranean passage to the Baltimore Hotel, permitting the guests to patronize the theatre on rainy nights without exposing themselves to the weather.

A $20,000 pipe organ has been installed, and a seventeen piece orchestra will be a drawing card of the entertainment.

Features will be used exclusively—General, Alco and the World Film companies supplying the pictures.

The prices are ten and twenty cents. The theatre opened with Annette Kellermann in "Neptune's Daughter."

There are elaborate waiting rooms, in charge of maids, for women patrons, and smoking and lounging rooms for the men.

The theatre will probably have full houses continually, drawing from the best patronage of the city.

Escanaba Theatre Installs Wurlitzer

MANAGER HINES of the Bijou Theatre, Escanaba, Mich., has installed a new Wurlitzer organ, and daily recitals will be given in connection with photo-plays.

Ellen Terry, Buffalo, Will Soon Open

THE new Ellen Terry at the corner of Potomac and Grant streets, Buffalo, N. Y., will open soon under the management of Charles Johnston, formerly manager of the International Theatre at Niagara Falls, N. Y.

The Ellen Terry will be one of Buffalo's highest class theatres devoted exclusively to motion pictures. It is located in the heart of the residential district of the west side and will draw upon the best patronage in the city.

"Better" features and "best" music will soon make the Ellen Terry a popular photo-play house.

Mikado Theatre, S. Louis, Changes Owners

THE Mikado Theatre, at 5900 Easton avenue, St. Louis, has been acquired by Scherer Brothers, who also operate the Palace Theatre, 1310 Franklin avenue. The new management have arranged for an all-pictures program for the Mikado, featuring Paramount pictures. The Mikado, one of the largest houses in the city, was built by the O. T. Crawford Company three years ago, and formerly ran a mixed bill of vaudeville and pictures.

Regent on the Coast Starts in Spite of Friday

THE New Regent Theatre at Riverside, Cal., owned and managed by Messrs. Howe & Merrill, was opened Friday, November 13, with no sign of a hoodoo in sight. The program consisted of "My Official Wife," and the prices were ten and twenty cents. The theatre has accommodations for about 900, and is spoken of as one of the handsomest small city theatres.

Kunsy's Alhambra Opens in Detroit

JOHN H. KUNSKEY'S newest enterprise, the Alhambra Theatre, at 2124 Woodward avenue, corner of Kenilworth, Detroit, Mich., was formally opened Tuesday evening, November 10, or one week previous to his expectations of thirty days ago.

As for the theatre itself, Mr. Kunskey can well be proud. It fully lives up to the caption used in the program which reads “The most beautiful and perfectly appointed photoplay theatre in Detroit.” Mr. Kunskey has had the advantage of building other theatres (he now controls eight) and naturally he collaborated with the architect in bringing about as fine a theatre for pictures as it was possible to obtain. No detail was overlooked. Photographs and a more detailed story will appear in a later issue of the Morrox Picture News.

Sufficient to say that it seats 1,350 people and will cater to the high-class trade. The opening attraction was Mary Pickford in “Behind the Scenes.” That is the standard of photoplays which will be given as the permanent policy. The program announces the fact that matinees will be given daily, with an extra one on Saturdays, and that in the evening performances will be continuous from 6:45 to 11. On Sundays and holidays performances will start at 1:45 in the afternoon and run until eleven at night.

Prices are 10 cents for the matinees and 10, 15 and 20 cents at night, 10 being for the first 20 rows, 15 for the balance and 20 cents for the box seats.

T. D. Motle, formerly manager of the Liberty Theatre (also owned by John H. Kunskey), is in charge of the Alhambra. For a while he managed the Garden Theatre, and previous to his coming to Detroit he was connected with one of the big picture producing companies in New York. The orchestra at the Alhambra is conducted by Fred L. Neddermeyer, and the organist is Charles L. Wuerth.

The theatre was designed by C. Howard Crane, architect, who has planned all of the Kunskey theatres, and was built by Frank Farrington & Co., contractors. The total cost of the theatre, with furnishings and equipment, was $100,000. The Alhambra is four miles away from the downtown section of Detroit, but is in a residential district that is populated with successful business people, and is on the main business thoroughfare of the city, Woodward avenue. Pictures will be changed daily at the Alhambra.

Alamo Opens in Louisville

THE new Alamo theatre, Louisville, claimed to be the most modernly appointed and prettiest motion picture theatre in Kentucky, was opened for the first time to the public on Saturday afternoon, November 14.

Several union men at work on the building were called out on strike a few days ago, when it was found that non-union men were installing seats, but the matter was adjusted.

The interior of the Alamo is most artistic, the walls and ceilings being designed after the style of the Italian renaissance. All of the illuminations are overhead in ivory bowls suspended from copper chains so that the soft rays of the yellow sun globes will be reflected from the ceiling. Outside the theatre, the renaissance front will be bathed in electric lights from twelve showers.

The ventilating system incorporates the very latest ideas to insure an atmosphere conducive to health and pleasure. A large draught fan draws fresh air into the house from the outside and the air passes through porcelain tubes and is thoroughly washed before released.

The Alamo has seven spacious exits, two of which lead to the rear of the stage. A large fountain with vari-colored lights reflecting through the spray has been installed on the stage. A twelve-piece orchestra will have a place on the stage directly beneath the picture screen.

Another music feature will be a Wurlitzer orchestra.

The Alamo opened with the Mutual program, the latter has contracted with this corporation for the first and second run of this service in Louisville. One of the features of the opening day was the two-reel Keystone comedy, “Dough and Dynamite,” featuring Charles Chaplin.

St. Louis Has Theatre Building Boom

Six new theatres have been completed in St. Louis during the last three months. The list includes the Strand, at Sixth and St. Charles streets, a continuous house from 10 a. m. to 11 p.m., that seats 500. The Lindell, Grand avenue and Hebert street, with seats for 2,000 patrons. The beautiful West End Lyric, at Delmar and Euclid avenues, with 1,100 seats. The Olympia Theatre, 1420 Market street, a new continuous house, with a capacity of 750.

The Duchess, Grand and Washington avenues, which seats the same number, and the Powhatan, at 7200 Manchester avenue, a 1,000-seat house. The above named houses are all of the highest class throughout, and cater to the better class of audiences, and all but one charge ten cents admission.

In addition to this a new theatre is being built at Grand and Florissant avenues; another is projected for North Sixth street, near Pine; one for the block on Delmar avenue, between Hamilton and Goodfellow avenues, and a 600-seat house for 1700 South Broadway.

Milwaukee Will Have First Chinese Film Theatre in America

By next year Milwaukee, Wis., will have the first Chinese motion picture theatre in the country. Charley Toy, 174 Second street, a rich Chinaman, has announced that within the next year he will open a feature photoplay house in the Toy building, playing week stands of the biggest features available.

The theatre, according to Mr. Toy, will be 40 x 100 feet, and a Chinese scheme of decorations will be followed throughout. Chinese artists are to be imported to do the work. According to Mr. Toy, the cost of the decorations alone will go well into the thousands.

He also announces that one of the features of the house may be a Chinese orchestra.

Theatres Here and There

RAV MARVIN and Harry Travis opened a new motion picture theatre in Hoopeston, Ill., Saturday, November 14. The theatre is known as the Lyric and is located in the new Dyer building, corner Main and Bank streets. Everything is to be modern throughout and the interior and exterior are to be beautifully decorated.

The Lyric theatre, Upland, Cal., owned by M. Whitmore, is being remodeled to accommodate twice as many people as formerly, and new Powers 6-A machines will be installed.

Charles Robinson, who formerly owned the Alhambra theatre at San Pedro, Cal., has purchased the only theatre in Covina of Wells C. Mervin.

The theatre has a seating capacity of three hundred. For the present the policy of the house will remain the same, Mr. Robinson continuing with a General program and the "Perils of Pauline" series one evening every two weeks.

Frankfort, N. Y., is to have another motion picture theatre. Philes Thibault, of Clayton, recently purchased a lot on Litchfield street and is erecting a theatre. The building is 30 feet front with olf, 60 feet and the space between joints inside is 18 feet and is built of tapestry brick. The ventilation will be perfect, the building will be fireproof and everything will be up to date. The seating capacity will be 450.

Grand Reopens in Reading, Pa.

The Grand theatre, Reading, Pa., has been reopened as a moving picture house. D. R. Letson and W. H. Linton, of Little Falls, N. Y., who have been conducting the Empire moving picture theatre in Utica, have sold out that business to H. P. Clark in Owego, who has sold to them the Alhambra theatre at the latter place.

Michael Boone, of 799 Hallette street, Bridgeport, Mass., has purchased the Donovan moving picture theatre on Maplewood avenue and is having plans estimated for changes to the building. He will build an addition to the rear and will make interior changes.

The Lyric theatre, Fitchburg, Mass., has passed into the hands of a corporation of moving picture men, showing the Paramount pictures.

The Odeon theatre, Washington, D. C., has reopened for the winter under new management, with T. J. Nicholson at the helm. This is a resident theatre offering only evening performances of five reels for five cents. Sunday, however, is a ten-cent show, when two additional reels form the program.

Grand Closes in Atlanta

The Grand, Atlanta’s biggest playhouse, has closed its doors as a moving picture theatre. The fate of the theatre for the rest of the year depends on a conference to be held in New York between Harry B. Hearn, the resident manager, and the lessee, Jake Wells.

Mr. Hearn explained the closing of the Grand as a motion picture house with the statement that really big feature films are extremely scarce and that only about one a month is procurable.

Under the management of Mr. Hearn the Grand has made a splendid record in Atlanta. Mr. Hearn himself holds a high place in the esteem of local exchange men and exhibitors who trust that the closing of the Grand will not take him from Atlanta.

Morris Slotkin, general manager of the Olympic theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., has sold out his interest in the Plaza theatre in William street to L. Michaels and Jacob Rosen. The Plaza will be conducted as a vaudeville and motion picture house, as in the past. Mr. Slotkin will devote his attention entirely to the Olympic theatre.

New Theatres in Louisville

The new Knickerbocker theatre at Eighteenth and Market streets, Louisville, Ky., was thrown open to the public for the first time this week. William Tapp, who has been connected with the Majestic theatre, is managing the new house. The Knickerbocker is of brick construction and presents a pleasing appearance both inside and externally. The capacity is 600. The Universal service is being used and five cents is the admission charge. The theatre is situated in the midst of a thickly-populated neighborhood and the outlook for its success is bright.

The Shelby Amusement Company has accepted plans for a new motion picture theatre to be built at Shelby and Guandoline streets, Louisville. Ground will be broken for the foundation this week. H. B. Strube, manager of the Empire theatre, who is interested in the project, says that he expects the new house will be completed some time in March. The building will be of fireproof construction and will cost about $22,000. The seating capacity will be 950.

H. K. Bentley, a business man of Monongahela, Pa., is erecting a handsome new building which will be used as a moving-picture theatre. The structure will cost when new more than $30,000, and will be one of the best theatres in that section where films are shown. The theatre will have a capacity of 400 seats and will be modern in every respect. It will be opened on Thanksgiving Day.

The Regent Theatre in East Liberty, Pa., was opened several days ago and made a hit right from the start. The theatre is a Clark and Rowland one and is built in the most approved fireproof style. It is a model of beauty and one that pleases as soon as one enters the doors.

$75,000 Theatre Opens in Pittsburgh

The theatre is in an aristocratic section of Pittsburgh and is patronized by the social set of this section. It cost $75,000 and shows for every dollar spent on its construction.

Among Northern California Houses

The Webster Playgraph theatre, Webster street, Alameda, Cal., has been reopened under the management of G. F. Gilellen, having been remodeled and much new equipment installed.

The Theatre Fresno, Fresno, Cal., has been remodeled and has been opened again under the direction of Fred Voight.

The fine new theatre of Eschelbach & Morton at South San Francisco, Cal., was opened on November 14. The house is equipped with two Powers No. 6-A machines and a Wagner converter.

A new house, known as the Crystal theatre, has been opened at Porterville, Cal.

A cement moving picture booth has been built into the Post Theatre, Battle Creek, located on the second floor, taking the place of a galvanized iron booth on the first floor. The new booth is lined with asbestos, and is equipped with two moving picture machines. The following theatres are in course of contemplation in Michigan: G. E. LeVegue, 1717 Dime Bank building, Detroit, plans to erect a brick theatre building on Farnsworth avenue; Architect W. S. Joy, 516 Stevens building, Detroit, is preparing plans for a theatre to cost $10,000, 50 by 115 feet in size; the United Theatres Company, 322 Monroe avenue, Grand Rapids, will erect a new theatre, and E. N. Brown, who runs a moving picture house on the west side, Grand Rapids, will soon open another at 430 Bridge street, which will seat 600 people.

Fire recently destroyed the Elite moving picture theatre, near Waysnoro, Miss. The property, which was owned by Trigg Bros. & Company, was valued at $1,500, with no insurance.

George W. Sarliss has just become joint proprietor of the Majestic theatre at Jackson, Miss., by purchasing a half interest in that popular establishment from H. D. Bowers. Mr. Sarliss, who is a native of Indiana, is highway engineer for the county of which Jackson is the seat, and this is his first venture into the motion picture world. He will hereafter devote a good portion of his time and attention to the theatre.

Salamanca, N. Y., is to have a new theatre. J. C. Groat, who has owned and managed several picture houses in the city, has begun the erection of a $25,000 theatre. The building will be 70 by 140 feet. Under the same roof will also be a ballroom, bowling alleys, billiard room and restaurant. The building is to be completed by February 15, 1915.

Strand, Pasadena, Will Open November 25

The Strand is to be the name of the beautiful new theatre on Colorado street, Pasadena, Cal., under the management of Jack Foote, and the opening date has been set for November 25. The all-star picture, Ethel Barrymore in "The Nightingale," from the Alco program and the Vitagraph spectacular train wreck offering "413," will constitute the opening program.

Music and the Picture

Various Ways of Playing the Picture

IN wandering around the city, taking in a picture show here and there, one can hear "music for the picture" played in various ways. One theatre has a "Fotoplayer," another has a "Wurlitzer"; one an orchestra of from three to six pieces, and others just the piano with or without drums.

The Drury Lane theatre on Eighth avenue, New York City, has a "Fotoplayer," and what is more, they have a man that can bring out the good points in it.

The music as rendered on this instrument by this musician is certainly adapted for accompanying the pictures, and the way he can change from one selection to another in keeping with the picture speaks well for the management of this particular theatre.

The Electra theatre on Third avenue, Bay Ridge, Brooklyn, N. Y., has an orchestra of six and a pianist. The cellist there certainly is some player; and in the picture, "The Bond Eternal," where the son comes to the bedside of his mother (the relationship being unknown to him) the audience was held as in a trance by the musician's wonderful playing. There was hardly a dry eye in the house.

This latter is an example of where an orchestra can play for the pictures; but too often there is one selection played after the other in utter disregard of their fitness to the picture. This is where the new "orchestrations," operated from a keyboard, are valuable. Combining all of the advantages and none of the disadvantages of a full orchestra, they have the additional merit of being played by one person, who can change from one musical selection to another, can vary the combination of his different instruments as combined in the orchestra, without any pause or apparent break in the playing, and can therefore suit his music to the picture.

He can change his time, or his selection. He can change from flute and violin to horn and drums and piano or any other combination of instruments as his fancy might dictate; and all this without stopping or hesitating, simply by pressing any combination of stops as on an organ.

Most of these have a separate manual or keyboard on which a solo may be played on any of the instruments, with a piano accompaniment on the other keyboard. In addition to having the different instruments at the command of one player, to be used in any combination, the orchestrion has all the different "traps" as formerly furnished by the drummer and can bring them in evidence by pressing a button, pulling a leather cord, or pressing a pedal. Drums, snare, bass and kettle; castanets, triangle, tambourine, cymbal, locomotive or steamboat whistle, chimes, horses' hoofs, train bell and so on, are right where he can get them instantly.

Manager-Musician in Charge of Buffalo Hippodrome

THE large audiences at Shea's Hippodrome recently, the enthusiasm which prevailed and the quantities of flowers in the lobby were a flattering testimonial to Manager Shea's appointment of Henry Marcus as the new house manager.

Besides being house manager, he will direct the musical programs, and from time to time will personally conduct the orchestra in selections from the famous composers as well as the latest successes. Mr. Marcus is a musician of artistic cultivation and has had a wide experience as a conductor. He has been until recently the director of the Regent theatre orchestra. For many years he was conductor of Shea's vaudeville house orchestra.

C. W. Perine, manager of the Lyric Theatre at Salem, O., was in Pittsburgh recently and stated that he has just completed remodeling the theatre there. He said business was good. Warner's Features are being used in his house.

Schultz to Direct Music in New Victoria

MRS. LILLIAN M. HASTINGS, at present manager of the Victoria theatre at Grant and East Ferry street, Buffalo, N. Y., announces that she has procured Herman E. Schultz, late director of Shea's theatre orchestra, to take full charge of the music at the New Victoria, when that large and beautiful photoplay house opens in a few weeks.

Mr. Schultz is one of Buffalo's most prominent musicians. He is conductor of the Buffalo Symphony orchestra, a composer of note, and at present furnishes the music at the Hof Brau, Buffalo's famous German cafe, and the Gayety theatre.

Mrs. Hastings announces that she will have fifteen men in the orchestra at the New Victoria. The theatre will be the second largest in Buffalo, having a seating capacity of over 2,500. It is being built by Mitchell H. Mark, owner of the Strand Theatre, then York. Situated at the corner of Ferry and Grant streets, this theatre will have one of the largest and most densely populated territories in Buffalo to draw upon.

Applications for New Licenses Alarm Minneapolis Exhibitors

IF things keep up at the present rate, Minneapolis will soon have the reputation of having more motion picture theatres than saloons, and it takes some to beat that record.

Three licenses were granted in one day on Plymouth avenue North; two on 20th avenue North; one on 32nd and Penn; one on Lyndale and Lake street; one at 1508 Como avenue S. E., and one at 603 Hennepin, right in the downtown district.

One of the members of the Council remarked that he was in favor of passing every license which might come up, and evidently his word had some bearing on his fellow workers, inasmuch as licenses were granted without any restriction.

This surely is stirring up the exhibitors in local circles, and if things keep up at this rate, Heaven knows what the outcome will be. Something certainly should be done to get the license committee to use some discretion in granting these petitions.

Atlanta Theatre Installs Mirror Screen

Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 18.

MANAGER EVANS of the Vaudette has shown his enterprise as an exhibitor by installing a $1,000 mirror screen last week. Other improvements tell better than words of the prosperity of the Vaudette.

are self-lubricating iron wheels which roll up steel tracks. The surface of the moving plane is produced by a series of parallel cleats about one inch apart, forming longitudinal ridges and grooves.

The installation may be either double or single; that is, there may be two escalators running parallel to each other so that one may be moving up while the other goes down, or both in the same direction if desired. When running in the opposite directions the descending load counterbalances the ascending with a consequent reduction in power cost.

The accompanying diagrams show the construction details of the "cleat type" escalator, giving the amount of room occupied, the degree of elevation, and so forth.

The complete installation cost for theatres amounts to $4,000 as a minimum up to $10,000, depending upon the finish and extras required. The investment is a good one both for new theatres and those being renovated when the saving in time, space and advance of price is considered.

The question is one worth taking up with your architect and considering if you renovate your present house or are thinking of building a new one. Further information will be given upon request.

"Lucille Love" Is Celebrated in Song

The Joe Morris Music Company has released a new "moving picture" song entitled "Lucille Love," written by Scherler Green and Otto Motzan of their regular staff. This should be of interest to those seeking "music for the picture."

CHICAGO TO ALL EXHIBITORS:—

GENTLEMEN:—

The minute we saw the first release of THE MASTER KEY serial we called in our Poster Artists and gave instructions to spare neither pains nor expense in producing for this remarkable picture the most elaborate 24 sheet poster that money and brains could make, and we say to you candidly, in the entire history of the Moving Picture world we have never yet seen such a work of Art and Power for advertising as this 24 sheet stand.

We have spent a small fortune to have this 24 sheet stand prepared for you. Mr. Laemmle wants YOU to use it. We want every Exhibitor that runs THE MASTER KEY to use it.

It will set your town agog. It will attract people like moths to a flame. Arrange with your local bill poster for as many boards as you can possibly get, then wire your Exchange for all you can possibly use. If you can't get them instantly from your Exchange, wire the MORGAN LITHOGRAPH CO., of Cleveland, Ohio, direct, but first go to your Exchange. We have made special arrangements with all Exchanges.

This magnificent 24 sheet stand will bill your house like a circus and what you need and what every living, thinking Exhibitor needs is PUBLICITY and ADVERTISING. This Poster will do the work unlike anything that has ever been attempted in the Movie world. Wire you Exchange the moment you finish reading this message.

MORGAN LITHOGRAPH CO.
CLEVELAND, OHIO
MORE THAN QUEEN

A 4-part drama in the superb Pathécolor. The story of a queen who would rather be a woman. The sacrifice of a throne for the perfect love. Perfection in production. Gabrielle Robinne and René Alexandre are featured. 1-3-6-sheet posters.

WHEN FATE WAS KIND

A 3-part American drama. The story of a husband who was betrayed by a friend, yet saved in the eyes of his wife by a strange trick of fate. The unusual in photoplays. 1-3-6-sheet posters.

MAX AND THE FAIR M. D.

Max Linder, funnier than ever, is featured in a 1-reel comedy. He marries a lady doctor but loses his patience while she attends to her patients.

THE PERILS OF PAULINE

Pauline is the modern miracle. She stretches human ingenuity and daring far beyond the ordinary snapping point.

The Pathé reproductions from oil paintings open up a new field to motion picture exhibitors. They are portraits of Pathé's most popular players.

The paintings are reproduced by a new and secret process which retains in detail the full tone, color, richness, and texture of the original.

Sittings were given by Pearl White, Eleanor Woodruff, Crane Wilbur, Paul Panzer, and the artists were the celebrated Goldbeck, Crisp, and Nikolaki. Each picture is a masterpiece in itself, and each was especially selected and approved by the player portrayed. They are autographed by both player and artist.

These reproductions, which cannot be detected from the originals, are produced by the new process at a seemingly incredible price. They are within the reach of every exhibitor and motion picture fan. When framed they are unsurpassed for the lobby of a theatre or for the home.

They have two sources of profit because they increase the popularity of your theatre and add to its distinction and they also create a demand for similar pictures among your patrons. The price to you is so low and the quality of the picture is so high that you can sell them at almost any margin of profit.

The pictures, or information concerning them, may be obtained at any of the Eclectic Feature Film Exchanges, at the home office in New York, or through an exhibitor showing "The Perils of Pauline."

They measure 13 x 17 inches, ready mounted for framing. Price, $2.50 each, f.o.b. the Exchange where purchased.

RUNAWAY JUNE

BY

GEORGE RANDOLPH CHESTER

LILLIAN CHESTER

* Will be published in 2500 leading newspapers throughout the United States and Canada.

* RUNAWAY JUNE will start where all other pictures end. It leads off with a wedding. The greatest and most expensive wedding ever shown on the screen.

* RUNAWAY JUNE has action, suspense, dramatic punch, photography, direction, and last but not least the greatest story ever told on the screen.

* RUNAWAY JUNE was written for the screen. It is the first serial series ever written solely and entirely with this end in view. It is not a story just written and adapted to the screen, but it was written on order for us.

* RUNAWAY JUNE deals with money, gold, love, romance, jealousy, hatred, mystery, a woman, a man—it deals with the drama of life. Yet through it all is a fine vein of comedy.
RUNAWAY JUNE is a lesson. It is the problem of life. The rich, the poor, the working man and the millionaire are all interested in the problem that it offers.

RUNAWAY JUNE is not a "stunt" picture—not a chase picture—not a lot of situations thrown together in a haphazard way.

RUNAWAY JUNE means something more than just picture. George Randolph Chester has put his heart and soul into it. It is his greatest work. It is so good that he is willing to have his wife's name, Lillian Chester, associated with him in it.

RUNAWAY JUNE will be without a doubt the greatest serial ever released. There will never be one better.

RUNAWAY JUNE will get the money for you no matter what program you are using. You will play to capacity when you show it. It runs for fifteen weeks, two reels a week. We want every exhibitor in the country to write to us for our advertising booklet—the greatest help to exhibitors ever put out. A fifteen weeks' campaign all laid out for you by the greatest advertising force in the country.

RUNAWAY JUNE is being produced by the Reliance Motion Picture Company, 29 Union Square, New York City, and can be had at any Mutual Exchange.

On Getting Down to "Brass Tacks"

The trouble the Humanology Film Producing Company experienced in finding a releasing firm with a really sound business-like proposition is thus described by Jack Rose, president of the company, in the New York Sunday Telegraph of Nov. 1:

"I've had my troubles in securing the right outlet for my productions," said out Rose. "The propositions made me sounded good until matters got down to brass tacks, and then there was little left but a labyrinth of wasted verbiage. Very much discouraged, I heard of the United Film Service. I opened negotiations and found all the good words I had heard of this firm substantiated. I am satisfied that in entrusting the marketing of my films to the United Film Service I am insuring them the best possible exploitation."

Mrs. Wilcox, now that she has been won over to the motion picture fold, was pleased even to state how it all came about.

UNITED FILM SERVICE (Warner's Features, Inc.) New York
The popularity of Thanhouser productions is due to the remarkable strength of the Thanhouser organization. In regular Thanhouser releases you will find such stars as Florence La Badie and Sidney Bracy who made famous The Million Dollar Mystery.

The overwhelming success of The Million Dollar Mystery demonstrates the ability of the Thanhouser Film Corporation as a producer of high quality photoplays.

The Thanhouser Film Corporation releases three productions every week through the Mutual Film Corporation in the United States and Canada. Exhibitors can arrange bookings in America through the nearest Mutual Exchange.

For the current week we announce these three releases:

If not, write our nearest exchange for information.
A Phenomenal Success!

ZUDORA
Thanhouser's Greatest Photoplay

The first episode of Zudora was released Nov. 23rd. The tremendous enthusiasm that greeted Episode No. 1 at the theatres in New York, Chicago and in other cities throughout America stamps this newest Thanhouser production a phenomenal success.

It is only natural that a photoplay created and written by two such noted authors as Harold MacGrath and Daniel Carson Goodman, should meet with pronounced success. This stupendous serial is now running at the better theatres. The story is appearing in the biggest metropolitan newspapers. Such wonderful cooperation and a play of extraordinary merit have made this Thanhouser's GREATEST Photoplay.

An exceptional cast including Marguerite Snow, Harry Benham and James Cruze interpret this play with all the effects which the authors intended. The entire production will take 20 episodes of 2 reels each. A new episode is being released each week. Exhibitors who are seeking a powerful box office attraction can arrange Zudora bookings by applying to the Thanhouser-Syndicate representative at any Mutual Exchange in America. Zudora is an independent release and may be obtained regardless of the regular program being used. Book NOW!

IT is no secret that the picture market is at present in considerable disorder. It is confused—to say the least. Those who are in close touch with field conditions—particularly those in touch with exhibitor conditions—realize this fact very clearly.

* * *

WITHIN the week past I have put the question to a number of leading manufacturers: "What is the matter?" Where is the trouble spot—if there is one main spot?

Their replies are remarkably at variance.

There is one common attitude of mind—and that is a real desire to know what is wrong. A few are trying urgently to find out. * * *

ONE manufacturer is a pessimist. Few exhibitors, he declares, are making money. The manufacturer is in the same boat.

For which condition, he says, there is one main cause, namely, unbridled competition— all along the line.

"There are," he asserts, "an over-production, an over-distribution, and an over-exhibition of pictures."

"There are too many houses," he continued.

"If you totalled their number of seats, assessed each its necessary earning capacity, the result would profoundly amaze you."

"Again, pro-rate the number of exchanges to the number of theatres and you'll find the average exchange can't possibly make expenses."

At the same time he admits—and the admission is significant—that there are too few exhibitors who really know their business, too few efficient and successful exchange managers, and a lot of producers who don't know how to make good pictures, nor to make them without exorbitant waste. * * *

ANOTHER manufacturer believes in efficient distribution.

The business is to be had, he says, and will be had through exchanges systematized along modern efficiency lines and raised to highest endeavor through a profit-sharing scheme on increased business.

But he also makes an admission—that this increase of business is to come to him directly from the exhibitor, who therefore must have an increase from the public, which increase will only come steadily from good pictures, successfully advertised and exhibited. * * *

IN other words, he must do a good deal for the exhibitor in the way of pictures and service (advertising help, principally) if his efficient exchanges are to do a good deal for him and for themselves.

A FEATURE manufacturer puts his finger definitely on one trouble spot, when he says that picture theatres today are in a state of hopeless and confused competition because they are not standardized.

In the legitimate, vaudeville and burlesque fields, theatres are well separated into distinct groups. There is a wide variance in the cost and quality of their bills and correspondingly in the prices of admission.

But in the picture theatre field, with little range in admission price, big and little houses are scrambling all over each other in an effort to compete with much the same kind of bills. * * *

"I AM booking features every day," said he, "to exhibitors who, with their limited number of seats and low admission price, can't possibly afford them. At least they are losing money on them."

This brings us to the question of increased prices, which another manufacturer is now prominently advocating.

But here again exceptions must be made.

Increased prices are highly necessary and logical—there is no question about that; moreover they are inevitable.

But you cannot simply tell the exhibitor to raise his admission price; you must tell him how to do it successfully.

To please the public and make it pay more he has got to have good pictures, good music and good all around theatre service; and secondly, and very importantly, he must advertise efficiently.

There is a great deal to tell him on these points, a great deal of help to give him, which he wants badly and greatly deserves.

Again, prices will not be raised, on a scale at all general, until the exhibitors are organized. * * *

THE fundamental spirit of the human race is a fighting one.

It's sad, but it's true; and the European situation today isn't the only glaring example.

We fight much more easily than we reason; and this applies to the whole world in its daily affairs.

S senseless, cut-throat competition exists among exhibitors today simply because they don't know each other and won't become acquainted and reasonable.

They "see red" and start to kill each other off; whereas a conference would probably disclose, first, that each combatant was a pretty good sort and, secondly, that there was enough local business, properly increased and divided, to make each fairly prosperous, instead of bankrupt.

(版权, 1914, by Exhibitors' Times, Inc.)
TO recount, then, we may say that the following "wrongs" exist, in more or less degree and sufficiently to bear seriously upon the situation.

There are over-production, over-distribution and over-exhibition of pictures—the normal results of a big, fast-growing industry.

But against these conditions, there are also: generally wasteful production and a good deal of poor production; a good deal of wasteful distribution; a large measure of faulty exhibition due principally to confused buying policies, poor house service and inefficient advertising.

In other words, while there is an over-development in volume of business, there is an under-development in efficiency—all along the line.

And coupled with this situation there are: a lack of standardization among theatres and of organization among exhibitors.

WHAT is to be done?

Obviously a great many things: but is there any one way to start to put the house in order?

I have purposely delayed one interview because it seems to me that this manufacturer answers the situation. He does so in one word: education.

EXCHANGEMEN AND EXHIBITORS LAUNCH PITTSBURGH SCREEN CLUB

Special to Motion Picture News

The Pittsburgh Screen Club was formed at the meeting and banquet held last Sunday at the Fort Pitt Hotel in this city, with more than 300 persons attending the opening meeting. It was the greatest gathering of the film men of this section ever held and it is certain that the greatest good possible will be accomplished by the new organization, if the initial gathering has anything to do with its future.

Men of political and civic prominence gathered about the banquet table and assisted materially with the work of organization and State Representative A. C. Stein, who is one of our prominent local attorneys, offered the boys to get them the charter free so that they can get going right as fast as possible.

There was a spirited but friendly gathering of the film men on one side and the exhibitors on the other and politics was played to the limit with the result that the exhibitors proved their strength when they elected to the presidency of the organization H. B. Kester of the East Liberty Camera Phone Theatre.

One word about Kester. He is one of the prominent exhibitors in this section and has a host of friends. He ranks high as a man and is one of the best men that could have been selected from the ranks for the position of president of the new organization. He is a hustler as an exhibitor and as a booster for the film business he is one of its best workers.

William Mayer was elected secretary. He is the publisher of the "Pittsburgh Moving Picture Bulletin," a paper that at all times pushed the interests of the film men here. He was elected secretary without any opposition and is sure to prove his worth when it comes to advancing the interests of the business here.

A. J. Hanna, of the Palace Theatre, was elected treasurer. He has been connected with other movie organizations here and is well liked by all the boys who know him.

There were exhibitors from all over the western part of Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Eastern Ohio, and they were all loud in their praise for the getting together of the banqueters for the formation of the Screen Club.

From the amount of interest taken by all present the Screen Club has a bright outlook before it and it is sure to be an organization for the betterment of the business here. It also has for an object of organization, protection of the business from the claws of a few politicians who would bleed the business for the last cent to pay the debts of hot political campaigns.

There is a large amount of work before the members as there are several bills pending in the legislature at Harrisburg that might spell ruin to many of the small exhibitors in the state and it is to the interests of these men that the screen club will look as well as to those of the larger theatres.

We all need it, he says; and we need a consistent campaign of it.

It will do little good to generalize and theorize. We must have concrete facts—details of field conditions and practical suggestions, for the exhibitor and exchange, of how to meet them. Complete data should be secured and presented.

THIS man believes in the better motion picture and the greater motion picture future.

Several million more people, the more cultured classes, can be—many are—being—made regular patrons of the picture theatre.

But to meet the requirements of this greater field and to cope with the exactions of the present great one, we must make ourselves fit and efficient.

HE doesn't believe that a trade journal can afford to print such articles; but we do.

We believe they will be received in the spirit of fairness with which they will be presented and for the sake of the industry upon which we are all dependent.

At least, we are going to try it. We shall announce these articles shortly.

INDIANA EXCHANGES JUMP RENTAL PRICES

Evansville, Ind., Nov. 25.

NOTICE has been served on movie theatre managers by local film exchanges that the cost of films will be increased forty per cent by the first of December. Those picture shows that have been paying a weekly rental of $60 will have to pay $100.

The cause of the increase is said to be the war in Europe. Chemicals used in the manufacture of films which come from Europe cannot now be obtained. The supply now in the United States is said to be fast diminishing.

Managers are also preparing to make their first annual war tax payments. On December 1st the schedule of taxes is as follows: seating capacity of 250, $25; 250 to 500, $50; 500 to 800, $75; all over 800, $100.

HORKHEIMER IN NEW YORK WITH 40,000 FEET OF NEGATIVE

Special to Motion Picture News

E. D. HORKHEIMER, secretary and treasurer of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company, of Long Beach, left the early part of last week for New York City, taking with him 40,000 feet of Balboa Feature negative which he will deliver to a great marketing corporation, recently formed to handle the products of this company.

While in the East Mr. Horkheimer will arrange further details regarding the Balboa series of pictures dealing with problems of today, for which the company will give $1,000 in prizes for the best answers to the following query, "Who pays?"

It has been announced that there will be twelve separate releases, each complete within itself.

A renewal of the contract with Bishop, Pessers & Co., Ltd., of London, for marketing Balboa pictures in Europe will be consummated by Mr. Horkheimer and Mr. Henry Pessers, who is now in New York, having made a special trip across the Atlantic for the purpose of making this contract.

The London firm, by the terms of the new contract, will have charge of marketing all Balboa pictures in India, Australia, South Africa and other foreign lands.

K. C. BOOKING COMPANY OPENS CANADIAN OFFICES

The K. C. Booking Company, Limited, has been formed and has opened offices in Montreal, Canada. The company will handle all of the Kinetophone features in Canada, including such Kinetophone masterpieces as "The Spirit of the Poppy," "The Span of Life," "The Coming Power" and others.

"Markia" or "The Destruction of Carthage," the Ambrosio production which the Kinetophone owns, will also be booked.
WHERE EXHIBITORS STAND UNDER THE WAR TAX

Motion Picture Houses Will Be Assessed the Same Amounts as “Legitimate” Theatres, According to the Decision of the Assistant Commissioner of Internal Revenue—Transfer of a Lease Not Allowed to Include Tax Payment—Government Scrutinizing Imported Films

Washington, D. C., Nov. 25.

MOTION picture theatres will be considered in the same light as the legitimate houses in the assessment of the special tax under the provisions of the act to increase the internal revenue recently passed by Congress. The statement contained in a letter addressed to the collector of the eleventh district in Columbus, Ohio, by the assistant commissioner of internal revenue. This decision was arrived at after the matter had been given careful consideration in the commissioner’s office.

In a letter addressed to the collectors of internal revenue, Commissioner W. H. Osborn states: “Every person, firm, or company liable under the act of October 22, 1914, should render a return and pay such special tax, as provided in the case of other special-tax payers. As these special taxes take effect from November 1, 1914, all such returns and payments for the remaining portion of the special tax year ending June 30, 1915, should be made during the present month or within the month in which the business is subsequently commenced.

The commissioner further states that such returns (applicable to theatres) should be made on Special Form 11A, which will be furnished to collectors at an early date, and in a note appended to the letter the fact is emphasized that returns must be made during the current month.

In the event that blank forms for returns are not received in time for persons to make return within the calendar month thereon, parties requesting the same are to be instructed to make a statement or return of liability on a plain paper, which will be received as a tentative return, and the party making same will thus be relieved from any liability to the penalty of 20 per cent, in addition to the amount of the tax for delinquency.

Section 6, of the law, which relates to theatres, is as follows:

“Sixth. Proprietors of theatres, museums and concert halls, where a charge for admission is made, having a seating capacity of not more than two hundred and fifty and not exceeding five hundred, shall pay $50; having a seating capacity of more than two hundred and fifty and not exceeding five hundred, shall pay $50; having a seating capacity exceeding five hundred and not exceeding eight hundred, shall pay $75; having a seating capacity of more than eight hundred, shall pay $100. Every edifice used for the purpose of dramatic or operatic or other representations, plays or performances, for admission to which entrance money is received, not including halls or armories rented or used occasionally for concerts or theatrical representations, shall be regarded as a theatre. Provided, That whenever any such edifice is under lease at the passage of this act, the tax shall be paid by the lessee, unless otherwise stipulated between the parties to said lease.

Exceptions to this clause are taken when “theatres are entirely closed to performances during the months of July and August, and only open in the month of September, the special tax is to be recorded from the first day of September to the first day of July following, at the rate of $100 for the year beginning July 1. (Nov. 1, 1914, to June 30, 1915, current year.)

“A special tax stamp taken out by the lessees of a theatre cannot, upon their transferring their lease to other persons, be transferred to the latter persons in conducting the theatre.”

Proprietors or agents of certain other public exhibitions, not including circuses, or shows for money, shall pay $10, and this tax paid in the District of Columbia, one State or Territory, will not exempt from payment of a like amount in another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, although but one tax will be collected for exhibitions within any one of these.

Included in this provision are exhibitions and shows given on fair grounds, but not under management of the fair association; lecturers using a stereopticon to illustrate their lectures, and charging an admission fee.

Watching Imported Films

Instructions have been given to all officers and collectors of the customs to carefully examine into the origin of all motion picture films offered for free entry into the United States from abroad, it having come to the attention of the customs division that in many instances motion picture films have been entered free of duty as of American origin when they were in fact manufactured abroad from negatives exported from the United States.

In a letter to the officials of the customs service, Andrew J. Peters, assistant secretary of the treasury and chief of the division of customs, states:

“From statements made by leading film manufacturers in the United States it is learned that in most cases no positives are shipped abroad. The negatives only being shipped and the positives made in Europe. In cases where positive prints are shipped to Europe, they are leased or sold with the understanding that the films are not to be resold or shipped back to the United States.

“In view of the foregoing, you are instructed to examine carefully all moving picture films claimed to be free of duty under paragraph 404 of the tariff act and to refuse free entry in case of doubt unless satisfactory evidence shall be produced as to the American origin of the film. In cases where films of foreign origin are fraudulently invoiced as of American manufacture, they will be re-released only upon payment of the home value therefor plus the duty.”

Only Woman Member of National League

Mrs. Charles Marley, of Los Angeles Branch, Said to Have Such Distinction—Thirteen New Members Recently Enrolled

Los Angeles, Nov. 23.

The League workers in Los Angeles have met with great success. The names of thirteen new members were recently enrolled, the "class" being composed of the following: George A. Howell, Lyric; Bert Lustic, National; Dick Parks, Photoplay No. 1; Seth D. Perkins, New Optic; Manager Sweeney, Novelty; I. Gore, Electric; Fred Seigert, Columbia; F. H. Lowe, Majestic, Glendale; Manager Campbell, Banner: S. U. Anderson, Belvedere, Pamona, and Mrs. Charles Marley, Liberty. The League officers expect a still greater increase.

With these new members the membership totals about forty, but it is the plan of every member to do the good work and eventually have every exhibitor a member.

Securing the membership of Mrs. Charles Marley, the officers believe, brings the distinction to the Los Angeles League of having the first woman member of any organization affiliated with the National League. But then why not? This is one of the first states to adopt equal suffrage.
PATHE TAKES WAR FILMS WITH OFFICIAL SANCTION

It has been officially announced that Pathe Freres has been appointed official cinematographers to the French Government in connection with the war. This much sought for concession will give Pathe a tremendous advantage in the matter of securing authentic and historically valuable pictures of the world's greatest conflict, since it is evident that the prejudice which has existed against the motion picture camera anywhere near the firing line will, to some degree, be lessened when the cameraman bears an official government commission.

In this connection, Pathe Freres announces that the reported arrangement between a branch of theirs in Germany and the German Government for the taking of war pictures with official sanction, is untrue. Such an arrangement they say may have been made with a German film company but certainly not with any connection of theirs.

“CHRISTIAN” WELL HANDLED IN ILLINOIS

Exhibitors throughout Illinois have been favorably attracted by the manner in which The W. H. Bell Feature Film Corporation has been handling their feature film, “The Christian,” produced by the Vitagraph-Lieber Company.

The picture is handled and routed along the lines of a road show. Particularly attention is given to the supplying of music cues, elaborate big framed lobby display, valuable publicity aids and effective paper in connection with the distribution of this subject.

“DAMON AND PYTHIAS” TO BE SEEN AT NEW YORK THEATRE

On Monday, November 30, at the New York Theatre, New York, the Universal Company will make the initial presentation of its newest and most costly feature film, “Damon and Pythias,” and two performances will be given daily throughout the engagement. Such an important picture will attract attention.

California Picture League Adds Thirty Members

Organizer Cory, on a Thorough Canvass of the State, Sends in Batches of New Names Practically Every Day

San Francisco, Nov. 16.

Since the annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of California, which was held in San Francisco one month ago, more than thirty new members have been added to that organization and scarcely a day passes but what new additions to the list are made by the secretary and organizer, W. A. Cory, who is now in the field visiting exhibitors.

Mr. Cory left San Francisco by automobile on October 28, and when last heard from had reached Los Angeles, where he expects to secure fifty or more new members. Among the houses in the coast section that have been brought into the state organization by the organizer on his present trip are the following:

Liberty Theatre, San José; Gem Theatre, Los Gatos; Jewel and Star Theatres, Santa Cruz; White’s Theatre, Salinas; Ragby Theatre, Monterey; Star and Monterey Theatres, Monterey; Novelty Theatre, Soledad; W. H. Farley, Pacific Grove; Elmo Theatre, San Luis Obispo, and Dixon Theatre, Ventura.

Other houses that have joined since the convention are the Colonial, Oakland; the Princess, Oakland; the Elite, San Rafael; Wonderland, Turlock; Fairyland, Willows; Lyceum and Modesto, Modesto; Sunset, Fowler; P. S. Braun, Monte Rio, and H. D. Hubbard, Calistoga.

Most of these houses are located in small cities on the coast and in the interior, and indicate in a striking fashion the feeling among country exhibitors of the need of organized effort. As the time for the opening of the biennial session of the state legislature draws near, it is becoming apparent that many measures of more than ordinary importance to the moving picture industry will be introduced and exhibitors are determined to be prepared to combat any adverse legislation.

Milwaukee Exhibitors Prepare Ball In January

Preliminary Work Well Under Way—Profits Will Be Devoted to Legislative Fight—Trade Exhibition Will Again Be a Feature

Milwaukee, Nov. 25.

The motion picture ball, which is to be given by the Milwaukee Motion Picture Exhibitors’ Association, will be held under the auspices of the newly organized Wisconsin Photoplay Association, which organization will utilize the profits to battle adverse legislation at the state capital. Much of the preparatory work for the ball, which will be given in January, has been started.

An attempt will be made to get just as many photoplay stars as possible to attend the dance, and letters inviting the various companies to send their stars were sent out.

In addition to the ball, it was decided to hold a trade exhibition, the same as last year, only on a much larger scale. A space for a picture theatre was arranged and a free show will be run all during the dance and exhibition. A cabaret entertainment will also be on the program, the songs going on between dances.

AUTHORITIES HELP FILMING OF “SPRINGTIME”

The municipal authorities in New Orleans have afforded the Life Photo Film Corporation the use of all the public and private parks in that city in the making of that company’s forthcoming feature release “Springtime,” in which Florence Nash is being featured. The producers are anxious to preserve the atmosphere of the old “creole days.”
GEORGE RANDOLPH CHESTER, one of the best known writers in America, has been signed by the Reliance Motion Picture Company to write a fifteen instalment serial entitled "Runaway June," which will be ready for release early in January.

It is understood that the price paid Mr. Chester is in the neighborhood of $25,000, and is said to be the highest ever paid an author to write a serial or any other story for moving pictures.

Mr. Chester's fame is world wide on account of his "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" series which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and book form, four million copies of which have been sold to date, and Mr. Chester has already completed sixty-five "Wallingford" stories.

Although "J. Rufus Wallingford" is the best known of Mr. Chester's works, his "Cordelia Blossom" and "The Jingo" also lead toward his fame.

Chester Establishes Precedent

In writing "Runaway June" Mr. Chester has established a precedent, as he has adopted a new scheme in writing stories. Realizing that in order to produce a successful moving picture it is necessary to visualize, Mr. Chester has written his action out first, and then supplemented the word version in his story.

Mrs. Lillian Chester collaborates with her husband in all his works, and she is partly responsible for the success of "Cordelia Blossom," "The Ball of Fire" and "The Enemy," which was Mr. Chester's greatest work prior to "Runaway June."

Owing to the great popularity of George Randolph Chester, over 2,500 newspapers have been signed to run this story in serial form.

The A. P. Robyn Newspaper Syndicate of Chicago has been retained to syndicate this story in the various newspapers, and several novel and interesting advertising plans have been developed along this line.

Mr. Chester's theme is novel and unique in many ways, and treats with a subject which is world wide and of interest to everyone, inasmuch as it deals entirely with a present-day problem of life.

GEORGE RANDOLPH CHESTER AND MRS. LILLIAN CHESTER

In talking with Mr. Chester he said: "In writing for moving pictures I find that my style must be entirely changed, and should be different from that which I employ in dramatic work and the true literary vein.

"I have analyzed the moving picture situation and realize that the majority of scripts fall short for the simple reason that the author does not visualize his story, but attempts to apply a fiction story to picture purposes.

"In writing 'Runaway June' Mrs. Chester and I have laid out the following plan. We first of all take our main plot and determine upon the lines to pursue. This has taken up considerable time, and after we have thoroughly established the thread of continuity we then take up the question of sub-plots. After that an action plot is written out entirely devoid of the dialogue. When we have this action plot so that it suits us, we then rewrite the whole thing and place our dialogue where it suitably belongs.

"The counter-plots in 'Runaway June' as I have outlined them are unique in many ways, and there is a mystery which runs through the entire story, and will not be disclosed until the fifteenth instalment.

"I have tried to adhere to the truth as much as possible, and the theme I have utilized is one that I have had in mind for years.

How He Writes His Scenario

"I realize also in writing for moving pictures that it is necessary to consider our audience, and I have adopted a theme for 'Runaway June' which is so general in scope that no matter where this picture will be shown it will meet with instant approval. I have tried to refrain from the old stunt pictures, embodying the chase element and blood and thunder, and my ambition is to produce a dramatic story of such intrinsic value that these stunts which have grown tiresome are not necessary.

"Some interesting points may be brought to light in the method of Mr. Chester's way of working. One point of particular note is the fact that during their working hours Mr. and Mrs. Chester will not be interrupted and he himself is not at parts unknown to complete each and every instalment.

Mr. Chester said that often he and Mrs.

Chester have worked for eighteen hours at a stretch without even food, as they find that in order to get the best results they must be keyed up and work under pressure.

NAVAJO FILM COMPANY LAUNCHED IN LOS ANGELES

The Navajo Film Company, composed of R. H. Mouser, president; W. H. Bosell, secretary and treasurer; Jack Freise, vice-president; and Charles K. French, managing producer; a California corporation of $100,000, with $90,000 paid up, began producing recently at a newly constructed studio at 2450 Tevot street, Los Angeles. Mr. French was formerly with the New York Motion Picture Company and previous to that with other well known producers. The company will produce dramas of one and two reels each for the Kriterion programme.

Among the leading people employed by the company are William Parsons, for the past year lead with the Western Lubin Company, and Miss Lucile Young. The scenario department will be in charge of Jack Freise, who was formerly with Pathé.

"SEATS OF THE MIGHTY" FOR CASINO THEATRE

Commencing Sunday, November 29, "The Seats of the Mighty," a photoplay based on Sir Gilbert Parker's novel of the same name, will be presented at the Casino Theatre, New York, by the World Film Corporation. Lionel Barrymore is featured in "The Seats of the Mighty." Others in this production are Millicent Evans, Glen White, Lois Meredith, Grace Leigh, Marjorie Bonter, Thomas Jefferson. "The Seats of the Mighty" represents an investment of $100,000 and eight months' work. This feature was made by the Colonial Motion Picture Corporation. Special music has been written for this picture by Professor Harper Garcia Smyth and Ludwig Marum.

CECIL SPOONER IN "DANCER AND THE KING"

Cecil Spooner has joined the throng of stage stars whose energy is now being turned toward the world of the screen. She has chosen as her starring vehicle her play "The Dancer and the King," which is based on many incidents in real life. This is the second of the Blaney releases to be shown in the World Film Corporation program.

Pierce Studies Conditions in New England

Special Representative of Bosworth Encounters a Temporary Lull in Film Field But Declares That "Legitimate" Is Dead

Boston, Nov. 25.

THE condition of the motion picture attendance in New England's theatres is not up to the mark of last year, says Carl H. Pierce, special representative of Bosworth, Inc. Some exhibitors attribute this to the war; some to increased competition; some to general business conditions. There is consolation in the fact, however, that while the photoplay houses have been doing a very satisfactory business—even though it is below the records of last year—the "legitimate" houses have been doing nothing like their usual business.

In fact, the outlook for the "legitimate" houses is discouraging. Even some of the plays that did well in New York have not done well in New England. One reason for this seems to be that the "legitimate" play usually is not represented on the road by the "original" cast that made it famous in the theatres of the metropolis.

People expect to see the famous stars, but are obliged to see a "substitute." Mr. Dazer's theatres brought out strongly this advantage in the photoplay in contradistinction to the stage play at a recent banquet address, emphasizing the fact that not only does the photoplay always carry the original stars, but it shows real true-to-life scenery instead of the painted makeshift to which we have been accustomed with suffering patience.

New Englanders who are studying the situation declare that the day of the two dollar house is rapidly waning, and that the day of the photoplay feature, with its carefully directed and executed "original cast" is more rapidly coming to the front. They also expect, as business conditions improve—and they are right now picking up—that photoplay conditions will also rapidly improve.

Vitagraph Theatre Puts on Strong Bill

"The Sage Brush Gal," a Drama Reincarnating the Spirit of Western Pioneer Days, and "The Man Behind the Door," Make Hit

THE Vitagraph Theatre, New York City, offered a change of program, beginning Sunday, November 22, which included the feature pictures "The Sage Brush Gal," a drama in three parts, and "The Man Behind the Door," a four-part picturization of Archibald Clavering's entertaining story of the same name.

"The Sage Brush Gal" is a drama of the West during the early '50s, pictured from Frederick Chapin's story by Doris Schroeder and produced by Rollin S. Surgeton, under whose direction "Capital of the Alfarcers" and "The Little Angel of Canyon Creek" were screened. The story is told to a party of automobilists, while the chauffeur is repairing a break, by a character typical of the early California days, and is replete with dramatic episodes characteristic of the time. "The Sage Brush Gal" is a cleverly conceived screen story, a photographic achievement whose scenes are vividly realistic, presented by a cast from the Western Vitagraph Company, including Mary Ruby, George K. Kelchi, William Burke, Myrile Gonzalez, George Holt and J. A. McGuire. "The Man Behind the Door" is a comedy and was adapted for the screen by Marguerite Bertsch who, in visualizing Mr. Gunter's novel adhered closely to the story of the book. It was produced by Wally Van, with a cast of Vitagraph comedians, including Mr. Van, Nitra Frazer, Cissy Fitz-Gerald, Albert Roccardi, Charles Wellesley, Harry Morey, William Shea and Louise Beaudet.

Who Will Be the "Maid of America"?

The Young Woman Fortunate Enough to Meet All the Requirements for Big Warner's Feature Picture Will Become National Figure

WHAT young woman will tour America as the "Maid of America?"

Here are some of the requirements necessary for a candidate to qualify for the honor:

She must be American born; must be beautiful; must have had college or high school education; must have perfect figure; must dress stylishly and wear clothes well; must have a number of accomplishments that tend to further social prestige; must have personality, must have had instruction and experience in elocution; must be endowed with the dramatic instinct; must have a "screen" face.

The young woman selected will, because of the very nature of her work, become a national figure in filmdom, as she is to appear as leading woman of the organization of photo-play actors, who will interpret the scenarios written around the various sections of the United States to be put on the screen in theatres throughout the country under the title of "America," releases to be made weekly for 40 weeks.

This monster film, which will comprise something like a hundred thousand feet when the last reel has been taken, is to be made to foster interest in the establishment of a Made in the U. S. A. Day an annual open-shop holiday, first advocated by J. Arthur Nelson, a prominent film producer and manufacturer, who is president of the United States Film Corporation.

Releases will be made through the United Film Service (Warner's Features, Inc.), which, with its 42 branches in the United States, should insure the Made in the U. S. A. Day propaganda ideal publicity.
EDITOR’S NOTE.—It is the desire of “Motion Picture News” to include under this heading novel advertising ideas, successful schemes in the management, decoration and equipment of the theatre—everything, in fact, done by the exhibitor to stimulate his trade. We invite every exhibitor to write us about any new enterprise he has; also to come to us for advice or information along any line. PROFILING BY THE WAR

THE appearance of a “German infantryman,” wearing a helmet and full regalia of the Kaiser’s troops, in front of the Dreamland Theatre, 240 West Fifth street, Cincinnati, the other day, caused a furore among Cincinnati’s population and at the same time demonstrated the ingenuity of Ed Bauman, manager of the photo-play house as a live-wire exhibitor.

Bauman was showing “The Last Volunteer,” a war feature. He obtained the services of a young German who had formerly served in the German army. The man had saved his uniform, which he donned and stood as a sentinel in front of the big six-sheets which Bauman had stretched across his lobby to illustrate the picture.

Some citizens complained that the wearing of this German uniform was a violation of neutrality. Complaint was made to R. E. Simmonds, British consul at Cincinnati, and Chief of Police Copelan by zealous supporters of the Allies, to no avail.

The consul admitted he was powerless to prevent a man appearing on the street in any kind of costume he desired, and the police chief gave a similar dictum. The net result was that the newspapers took up the controversy and soon Bauman’s house was being filled during the run of the picture.

“BUY-A-BALE” COUPON FOR SOUTH-ERN THEATRE

So popular has an advertising scheme of A. S. Dickinson, manager of the new Alcazar motion picture theatre at Chattanooga, Tenn., proven that the crowds, in their eagerness to secure entrance to the theatre, narrowly missed causing a riot.

In line with other cities throughout the country this city has been boosting the “buy-a-bale” of cotton movement, and Manager Dickinson purchased a bale, announcing that he would give away to each patron of the Alcazar a coupon, the coupon bearing a number corresponding to that on a card which would be drawn from a box in the presence of the audience entitling the bearer thereof to the bale of cotton.

These coupons were given away by him for several days. The night set aside for the drawing the crowds filled the theatre to its capacity and extended out into the street. It became necessary to close the box office, so great was the congestion.

This was all that prevented the riot.

When the number drawn from the box was flashed on the screen a party in the back of the theatre, so it was stated afterward, possessed the lucky number, but was unable to make himself heard. Another number was thrown on the screen which matched that of one of the patrons further down front.

Manager Dickinson, upon learning that the party having the number corresponding to the first one exhibited, was present at the drawing, succeeded in settling the matter satisfactorily between the two lucky patrons.

The Alcazar, although in operation only a short time, is proving popular. Only high-class features are shown there.

PHOTO coupons are coming into rather extensive use as business boosters among exhibitors in New England. They were first given out at the Orpheum theatre, in Savin Rock, being distributed in such large numbers that there are now a great many devotees of the “silent drama” who have private collections of photographs of film stars.

At the Orpheum, one coupon is given with each admission. Ten may be exchanged for one photograph of any popular motion picture actor or actress. Any number of subjects are offered.

PROFITS ON SECOND RUNS

MANAGERS of several of the retail district larger theatres of Los Angeles who have experimented with running pictures that had been shown earlier in the season to good business, found this to be a successful way of eliminating expense and not materially affecting the box office receipts.

Return engagements proved that the feature pictures were as good drawing cards as when first shown.

“THE SCREEN FOR ADVERTISING

A N example of what can be done in the way of a high-class exhibition in a comparatively small house is furnished by the policy of the Lyric theatre in Greensburg, Pa. This house has a capacity of 288 and uses Paramount World Film Corporation productions and the Mutual schedule.

In telling of the scheme the manager, M. Manos, said he is making money and uses an orchestra in addition to an orchestra. He advertises freely throughout the town and has the people interested and never hesitates to laud his wares on his screen, telling of the pictures to come.

He goes to Pittsburgh and makes his bookings and then returns home and gets his slides ready. Sometimes he is advertising his plays for three weeks in advance of the time they are to run. He is a firm believer in the saying that “It Pays to Advertise,” and he is doing plenty of it right in his theatre, where the cost is cut down to practically nothing.

TO GET HIGHER PRICES, ADVERTISE

STUBBS AND PADDUCK, owners of the Savoy theatre at San Bernardino, Cal., tried an increase of prices from ten cents for adults and five for children to twenty for adults and ten for children, three nights last week while showing “The Spoilers,” and played to capacity houses.

The Savoy has 800 seats. The three-night engagement was advertised in the local papers, on billboards and a big truck gaily decorated with flags and lithographs visited the whole city.
Industry Is Reaching Solid Basis, Says Wright

He Sees Strong Tendency to Book Pictures Through National Sales Organization, and Declares That This Concentration in the Marketing of Releases Means Benefit to Exhibitors, Who, on the Whole, Are Aligning Themselves with Such a Movement

WILLIAM H. WRIGHT, of the Excelsior Feature Film Company, whose wide business experience gives his views a significant interest, was recently interviewed. Mr. Wright's observations on certain conditions of the motion picture industry follow:

"A man I know has pasted over his desk a printed motto which says: 'There is no fun like work,' and this surely is an excellent motto for the average business man. I find in the motion picture industry, however, a tendency to rearrange this: 'There is no work like fun,' and while it is true that the object of the motion picture industry is to furnish amusement, I am convinced from my own observations that the industry as a whole would be far better served if the men composing it took their business more seriously than they do at the present time.

"It is a curious thing that in an industry, which has been as profitable as motion pictures, that some of the people in it should be as apparently irresponsible as they are.

"I am inclined to believe that perhaps some of this is due to the comparative newness of the business itself. Any new business developing as rapidly as the motion picture industry has attracts many men, who, for one reason or another, find it advisable to seek a new field for their activities.

"The solution is a comparatively simple one. The strength, financial responsibility and commercial integrity of any industry is exactly proportionate to the individual honesty of the men composing that industry. If, therefore, each manufacturer, exchange man and exhibitor will feel that the honor and integrity of the entire industry given, or a contract entered into, is an absolute bond for the specific performance of which he personally assumes the responsibility, each individual unit will feel its responsibility to the utmost, and the industry as a whole must unquestionably benefit.

"In the present movement concentrating the booking of pictures in the hand of strong national sales organization, such as the Alliance Films Corporation, through which all Excelsior pictures are released, I can only see a benefit both to the manufacturer and the exhibitor. The men at the head of institutions such as this are men who have proven their ability in commercial life, and stand today as the representative men of the film industry, not only because they are financially solid, but because they are men of moral integrity, men who would not descend to the petty tricks that are unfortunately the characteristics of some of the smaller, I mean mentally smaller, business men in the industry.

"I can see the more substantial and the more solid manufacturers, those who produce the most artistic and meritorious pictures, affiliating themselves with these larger booking organizations, not only because these organizations are more responsible financially, and assure a wide distribution, but because business relations existing between the manufacturer and the booking must be based on much mutual confidence. Confidence can only result from a reputation of previous satisfaction in dealings.

"I can see the better class of exhibitors aligning themselves with these sales organizations, because of the high grade of pictures offered, and they, too must appreciate the satisfaction in dealing with the booker of established reputation, financial worth and personal integrity.

"The days of the shoe string operator, the wild cat booker and others of that tribe are surely numbered, if not already past. The motion picture industry has lived through much abuse, both from the inside and the outside, and today stands an enormous industry, solidly founded on a public demand, representing millions of invested capital and untold thousands of employees."

$75,000 Studios Planned by Dyreda Corporation

Will Be Located near New York City—Firm Will Release Through World Film Corporation—Will Double Number of Releases

PLANS have been submitted for the erection of a studio and complete motion-picture plant for the Dyreda Art Film Corporation, who has been using the Old Reliance Studios at Yonkers, N. Y., and who have already made two features which will be released through the World Film Corporation, of New York City. This plant will cover several acres and will be equipped with all the modern devices—Cooper Hewitt lights, revolving stages, etc. The exact location of the new studio has not been given out as yet, but it is understood that it will be conveniently located to New York City. The company have decided to spend at least $75,000 on their new home.

The interior stage will be 70 x 100, and will accommodate several sets at one time. It is the intention of the company to double the number of its releases through the World Film Corporation, and this, of course, will necessitate a large force of actors at all times.

ELEANOR WOODRUFF SAILS FOR FRANCE

Eleanor Woodruff, whose plan to depart from France to enter the Red Cross service was announced in these columns last week, has engaged Passage on the French liner Madonna, sailing on December 7. Miss Woodruff will land at Marseilles, and from there go to Paris, where she will be assigned to the hospital of which she is to have charge. Since the announcement of her contemplated departure for the scene of the war, Miss Woodruff has been in receipt of a great many messages from her friends and admirers wishing her a safe trip and a speedy return.
In and Out of Los Angeles Studios

Los Angeles, Nov. 23.

FILM players have been given "weather vacations," owing to the cloudy mornings which have prevented work until almost midday, and even with the presence of Carl Laemmle, Samuel Long, S. S. Hutchinson and other notables of the film industry, the production has fallen short of the usual.

The weather conditions have made it possible for officers and players of the Universal, Kalem and American companies, respectively, to get acquainted, and this will no doubt bring results.

The Charles Giblyn Nestor company has made a one reel drama, "The Dear Old Hypocrite," by Ruth Ann Baldwin, in which Murdock MacQuarrie masquerades as a poor old man who is deaf, without other relatives than a niece—daughter of an estranged brother. He does this to test their fidelity to him, and finding them willing to sacrifice their comfort and happiness in the time of misfortune favors them not only with ready money but in his will. MacQuarrie is supported in this by Agnes Vernon and W. K. Wilson.

The unusual business caused by the parcel post department in an exaggerated form is used as the plot for "The Village Postmaster," a one reel comedy made by the Jack Blystone Joker company. Ernest Shields plays the name part with a cast composed of Betty Schade, Phil Durham and Eddie Boland. The scenario is by Phil Walsh.

In returning to the U studio from a location the Frank Lloyd Rex company passed a gypsy camp equipped with unusually fine wagons and tents, and all players, including the director, decided the use of the people and their property would make elegant settings for a romantic story. A request was made for a scenario in which a gypsy camp was needed. The task of writing one was assigned Ruth Ann Baldwin, and until two o'clock in the morning she remained at her typewriter. Being handed the complete script in the morning Director Lloyd announced work on the multiple reel picture, "The Gambler," being produced by the company would be deferred until the gypsy picture was made.

"Captain of Villainy" Delayed

After a change of make-up and costumes to suit the new parts the three car loads started for the camp of the nomads. But in the night, at the order from the police department, the campers had folded their tents and departed for parts unknown. For hours the autos chased them but with no success. The company now has an excellent scenario for sale, and is back at work on "The Gambler."

The Jack - Kerrigan - Jacques Jaccard "Terrance O'Rourke" company, delayed in the production of the fourth of the series, "The Captain of Villainy," by the foggy and cloudy weather, are still sojourning in Morocco at Universal City.

Pauline Bush is featured in a semi-western one-reel picture from a scenario by Tom Forman, of the U studio, "The Desert Breed," under the direction of Joseph De Grasse, and many of the exterior scenes will be made on the American Sahara desert.

Calder Johnstone with the Bob Leonard company making exterior scenes for "The Mite of the Month" sojourns the U studio department from San Francisco, that the company is meeting with unusual success in the work, and results have been far better than anticipations of either Mr. Leonard or himself.

Ford Sterling, Robert Harron, Dorothy Gish, Robert Leonard, Ella Hall, Kathlyn Williams, Roscoe Arbuckle and Charles Chaplin will go to San Francisco, and attend the first annual ball of the Screen Club of that city on the evening of November 28.

Charles Stillwell, vice-president of the club, spent a week here, and in addition to making arrangements for players to attend the ball the local producers ready to aid the new organization with liberal orders for advertising in the program for the event.

Albuquerque Companies

Both the farce and comedy companies of the Albuquerque Film company resumed production last week, the former in charge of Archer McMacken, and the latter under the direction of Gilbert P. Hamilton, and with Dot Farley playing the leads.

Mr. Hamilton is to produce another series of "The Frontier Twins" pictures, originated by Miss Farley some months ago, and while Miss Farley prepared scenarios for this series Mr. Hamilton has been trying to find someone to play the other twin. Miss Farley has completed her work, and now the director has confessed of failure on his part. It is necessary for this reason that the series be delayed.

The Komic company at the Reliable - Majestic studio has made the thirteenth of the "Bill" series and just to show that the members were not superstitious they began work on the production Friday the thirteenth and in order to carry out the scheme several scenes were added to the scenario in order that the picture contain fifty-two - fourth times thirteen.

Ethel, the stenographer in this subject, succeeds in persuading her boss to be the guest of honor at the "S. M. B."—stenographers' masked ball—and Bill, the office boy, mixes up the costumes to be worn by the boss and Ethel's sweetheart, causing numerous cases of mistaken identity which form many ludicrous situations. Fay, Tam, Eddie and Tod play the leads. And Fay wore her finest gown.

The two reel Reliance picture, "The Best of the Year," an adaptation from a story of the same title by Robert Livingston Beecher appearing in Pearson's Magazine has been completed by a company playing under the direction of Jack Adel. This picture deals with a baffling murder.

The finest issue ever published of a motion picture trade paper will appear under date of December 10. SEE PAGE 102. No orders for additional copies can be taken after December 8.
A headless body of a man is found, and the only clue to his identity is a button of a peculiar color on his coat. A cub reporter takes the only clue, and in a Sherlock Holmes, analytical deduction method clears up the mystery. The members of the company include Eugene Pallette, Sam de Grasse and Frances Bilington, and at all times had the co-operation of a local newspaper reporter who served in an advisory capacity.

Love Affair of a Soldier

The Donald Crisp Reliance-Majestic company is producing "At Dawn," from a scenario by Ferdinand Moore, a well known short story writer. The settings are in America and the Philippines, and show the two love affairs of a young soldier. When he left his sweetheart in America he swore he would be true.

A native belle of the Islands attracts him. Then when his American sweetheart inherits a fortune and goes to see him, he tries to break with the Philippine girl. She persists and he finally commits murder. The parts are played by George Seigman, Billie West, Wallace Reid and W. E. Lowery.

Fred Kelsey, R. and M. director, who has the reputation of just accidentally doing things that bear him into print, is at it again. He is producing another newspaper story to be released under the name of "The Exposure."

In this Irene Hunt is appearing as the "soft" sister, and in ferreting out a graft story reveals the fact that her fiancé is the leader of the crooked politicians. The picture, Kelsey says, will have the smell of printers' ink, and run through the projecting machine just like paper off the roll goes through the press.

Charles Fais, Los Angeles business manager for David Horsley, is the busiest man of the film colony, daily making arrangements for production for the Centaur company on the west coast. Mr. Fais states he has not said a word, but report has it that seven companies will be put to work in the very near future. This rumor has not been denied or confirmed by Mr. Fais, who states he will be in a position to give out definite details within a few days.

Bracken Back at Work

Pertram Bracken, who for two months has been taking a vacation, has resumed work at the Balboa Amusement Producing company studio at Long Beach, and will in the future act as director general of the producing companies, six of which are being organized at this time. The company has made a long time contract with Mr. Bracken, and it is current in photoplayers' circles that he will receive one of the highest salaries paid on the west coast.

Mr. Bracken, who filmed the six reel production of "St. Elmo" and a score of other features for this company, was the director for Gaston Medlies during his worldwide tour, and is in every way a very capable director.

Besides directing his own group of players in the larger features, Mr. Bracken will personally supervise the five other companies engaged in flashing pictures required by the contract recently made with the owners of the Balboa company, H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer, by one of the largest film marketing corporations. Under the terms of this contract the Balboa company must produce a minimum of six full reels each week.

The first feature to be made by Mr. Bracken will be an adaptation of Mrs. Augusta Evans' novel, "Beulah," in six reels, which is a sequel to Mrs. Evans' story, "St. Elmo," the film version of which was produced by Mr. Bracken. Some of this producer's current releases are: "The Square Triangle," "The Test of Manhood," "Heart of the Brute," "The Vow" and "The Winner."

The Universal company under the direction of Francis Forde has taken up the production of a six reel feature, "The Campbells Are Coming," which will be of a historical nature relative to the Sepoy rebellion in India. In the preparation of the scenario special attention was given to the correctness of the historical facts, and about this was woven a pretty romance.

Practically all of the sets used in this picture will be large ones. The gates of the city of Delhi are of such size as to permit sixteen soldiers marching abreast to pass through. The will about the city is forty-four feet in height and four hundred feet long. Forde will play the part of Nana Sahib, and Grace Cunard will be seen as a Scotch girl. The cast includes Harry Schum, Duke Warren, Lou Short, A. Denecke, Mary Granville and hundreds of others. Several companies of National Guards are expected to take part, and there will be more than a thousand "extras" in the battle scenes. It is expected one month's time will be required in the filming of this picture.

Leslie Carter Play Under Way

The Tiffany Film Company has perfected its producing organization, and for ten days has been at work on the filming of "The Heart of Maryland," featuring Mrs. Leslie Carter, at a studio on Santa Monica Boulevard. For the battle scenes in this picture a tract of 12,000 acres of land east of Los Angeles has been leased, and a village consisting of replicas of the homes of southern aristocrats, together with a large church, is being built.

This village will be destroyed by dynamite and other explosives. The cast selected by Director Herbert Brennon includes J. Farrell MacDonald, Bert Hadley, Clarence Burton, Raymond Russell and Vivian Reed, besides William E. Shay, who plays the male lead. The company expects to complete the picture by the second week in December.

Max Figman, now in charge of the production of the Masterpiece Film Company in filming "The Truth Wagon," is applying the same rule he used in productions on the legitimate stage—every player be an actor with an education sufficient that he perfectly understands the part he is playing, and be able to interpret it. No marionettes for Mr. Figman.

"The Quest of the Kingdom of Childhood" is a five reel photoplay filmed under the direction of William A. Gibson, of Los Angeles, for showing at the San Diego exposition during the year of 1915. Mr. Gibson has spent five months in the filming of this feature, which is of a fairy-tale nature, embodying the scenic wonders of southern California. It could well be classed an educational picture. More than ten thousand school children took part in this, and all but three of the members of the cast are children.

"Hi Judd, Old Sunshine," is the name given to the four reel picture featuring Macklyn Arbuckle in the main part, filmed under the direction of Lois Weber at the Bosworth Ranch, for the company written by Mr. Arbuckle himself, and the scenario prepared by Miss Weber. It is of the same type as "The County Chairman" and other legitimate stage successes of this well known actor.

Phillips Smalley is having unusual success in filming the story written by Elsie Janis for her first motion picture appearance. The positive prints of the first two four-hundred-foot spools taken bring out the fact that Miss Janis photographs exceptionally well. The actress is delighted with her work before the camera, and is now writing the story for her second picture.

Another Zoo Picture

Director E. A. Martin has been making another one reel Selig animal picture, "Love and the Leopards," with settings in South Africa—that is the extreme west portion of the Selig Jungle Zoo farm. The leads for this are Billy Stole and Catherine Henry, supported by Joe Hazleton, Lilian Hayward, Edward Wallock and C. C. Holand.

W. C. Clifton, of the Selig scenario department, has written a pretty romance about an eccentric society girl, played by Bessie Eytou, who tires of the idlers and longs for a lover of the primitive type. The son of a railroad president, Tom Santschi, learns of this and pulls off the real Lochinvar stunt. The title for this is "The Primitive Way," and among those of the cast are Helen Castle and Barney Fuery.

It is very probable that the Los Angeles film colony will be represented in the parade of warships through the Panama Canal next March when President Wilson comes to the west coast, as Captain William Melville, director general of the Lubin Western company, has been advised by ship builders in New York that his recently purchased yacht, which was left on the east coast for the installation of oil burners, will be ready for the cruise the latter part of February. The new yacht, the Argo, carrier a crew of twenty-eight men, including eighteen over all, and has a twenty-two foot beam. This boat was purchased by Captain Melville while on his recent trip in the east, and is to be used exclusively for Lubin features and the pleasure of its owner.

The Lubin players have been filming a two reel subject, "The Song from the Heart," of the same nature as the "Music Master." The lead character part is taken by Melvin Mayo, and the picture features Bertie Priest, a vaudeville dancer, who completed a tour over big time circuit with her and has recently. One scene of this picture, that of the interior of a theatre in grand opera season required one hundred and eighty extra people.

Alco Receivership Lasts Just One Day

President Walter Hoff Seely Buys Out Al Lichtman and William Sievers, and Equity Proceedings Are Discontinued—John D. Dunlop Enters Directorate

The suit in equity which was started by William Lichtman of St. Louis, as treasurer of the Alco Film Corporation, and which resulted in the appointment of a receiver, was discontinued November 21. Stock held in the Alco Film Corporation by Al Lichtman and William Sievers was purchased by President Walter Hoff Seely and his associates. Contracts were signed by which the stock is to be transferred, and the papers were also drawn for the discontinuance of the proceeding. The receivership lasted for but a single day.

Mr. Seely and his associates, who purchased Mr. Lichtman's stock and that of Mr. Sievers and his associates, have brought new capital into the business. The Alco releases will go forward as scheduled, and that promise, according to the most optimistic, and stars have been signed for features yet to be announced.

At the formal signing of the contract President Seely and his associates were represented by Hon. Job E. Hedges, and Mr. Lichtman and Mr. Sievers by Ex-Congressman William S. Benett.

Alco exchanges throughout the country have telegraphed to President Seely expressions of their entire confidence in him, his associates and in Alco. They are going ahead vigorously distributing the Alco releases throughout their territory, as well as the raudium gold fibre screen and other theatre supplies which are handled by the Atsc supplier the releasing corporation.

Releases Will Be Followed

The list of releases which has already been announced will be followed by the reorganized corporation. Florence Nash, Marie Must, and Miss Olga Petova, Jane Cowl and Beatriz Michelena will appear as has been stated in photoplays based upon the legitimate successes already announced.

The new impetus which has been given to the releasing corporation is being felt by the producing companies allied with Alco. These are going ahead working vigorously upon their respective photoplays. The Alco group of producers, which is composed of the All Star Feature Corporation, the California Motion Picture Corporation, Popular Plays and Players, Inc., B. A. Rolfe Photo Plays, Inc., and the Life-Photo Film Corporation, has expressed its entire confidence in the reorganized releasing corporation.

The reorganization is going forward with the idea of facilitating, if possible, distribution of the Alco program. It is also desired to improve, if possible, every condition under which the parent company and the allied companies work.

Kane Remains as Exchange Head

Robert T. Kane continues as supervisor of exchanges. He will visit, as heretofore, the west coast and will try to bring them into better relations with one another and the parent company. He acts as a medium through which ideas are passed both between various exchanges, and between exchanges and the home company.

Harry Cohen becomes the new manager in place of Al Lichtman. Mr. Cohen was for years the feature manager for the General Film Company and established for the General many successful branches over the country.

While he remains with Popular Plays and Players, Inc., many of his duties there will be taken over by one of his assistants who is promoted for the purpose.

J. D. Dunlop Joins Alco

With the opening of court Monday Judge Learned Hand dismissed the suit in equity brought by William Sievers, of St. Louis.

John D. Dunlop, prominent financier and banker, well known in the downtown financial sections of New York, has entered the directorate of the Alco Film Corporation, which action probably gives this enterprise the most substantial financial backing of any firm of similar activity in the field.

Mr. Dunlop, when seen at the office of the Alco Film Corporation, expressed himself as highly gratified at the condition of the corporation, and said he was entering the film field only after having subjected the company to the most rigid scrutiny.

"NEPTUNE'S DAUGHTER" HAS CAPTURED CANADA

"Neptune's Daughter," the big Universal feature, captured Canada. Opening at the Princess, Toronto, for one week the business was so satisfactory that the second week was immediately booked, and continued to play to increased receipts.

In Montreal the same film was presented at His Majesty's Theatre, and business was so good that the second week was booked.

In Ottawa, at the Russell Theatre, the governor-general and members of Parliament, which is now in session, attended the opening performance. The business is excellent. L. N. Scott, manager of the theatres in St. Paul and Minneapolis, who booked "Neptune's Daughter" originally for a week, booked it again for presentation within the month.

VITAGRAPHIANS OFF TO NEWPORT

Theodore Marston, the Vitagraph director, with Dorothy Kelly and James Lorison, are at Newport, Rhode Island, to portray scenes off the coast. They will employ the guards of the life saving station at that point to rescue Miss Kelly from a sinking vessel. The business boats will be used and a thrilling scene will be enacted in the surging sea.

The finest issue ever published of a motion picture trade paper under date of December 19. See page 102. No orders for additional copies can be taken after December 8.
Admission Prices Rising, Kane of Alco Finds

ROBERT T. KANE, supervisor of exchanges for the Alco Film Corporation, has just returned to the city after a trip in the interests of his company through Pennsylvania, Michigan, Chicago and Minnesota. He will leave again within a few days to visit the Alco exchanges in other parts of the country. Mr. Kane's mission is to carry the Alco gospel to exhibitors and exchange men. He keeps the various exchanges in constant co-operation with one another and with the parent company in New York.

Mr. Kane got a general idea of film conditions in the sections of the country which he visited.

"I believe," said he, "that the feature has dashed the doom of all short-reels except purely as fillers in. This foreshadows, I think, a general increase in admission prices. Managers who have been getting five and ten cents are now forced by the demand of the public for features to charge from fifteen to twenty-five cents. The average show, I find, which is popular in the great country outside of New York runs an hour and a half. In the larger houses there is an organ and an orchestra. The highest price of admission in any of the cities which I visited is fifty cents.

"In the smaller towns I find that there is a growing tendency for the 'Opera houses' to fill in with feature pictures. Otherwise these Opera Houses would be dark three or four nights a week. There are very few legitimate shows on the road today which visit these smaller houses, so the people are turning in increasing numbers to moving picture features for amusement. Where the projection is good the management of the Opera Houses are easily able to get twenty-five cents admission.

"A new development in motion picture theatres is surprising to the patron and lover of the legitimate. Big feature photoplays are now being put on in the large cities for 'runs.' Just at present these 'runs' are only for three weeks, but undoubtedly the time will be increased. Beatriz Michelena in 'Salomy Jane,' for instance, is at present having a run of three weeks at the Ziegfeld theatre in Chicago. It was preceded by Ethel Barrymore in 'The Nightingale.' 'The Nightingale' ran two weeks and broke all Michigan avenue records."

"Those of our exchanges which I visited reported a constant demand for return dates in the cases of 'The Nightingale' and 'Salomy Jane.' It is a result of this demand that Augustus Thomas is preparing to put Miss Barrymore in two more plays which he is writing for her. And the California Motion Picture Corporation in response to the same demand will follow 'Salomy Jane' with other plays of the real West.

"There is a big demand over the country for Western plays. But they must not be such as many producers have offered in the past. People want no idea of Western life conceived on Broadway. It must be the West as it is today, or the West as it was in the past generation."

VITAGRAPHIANS SEE LACKAYE ACT

Sixty Vitagraph players and members of the executive staff of the Vitagraph Company recently attended a performance of "The High Cost of Loving." Lew Field's presentation, at the Republic Theatre, New York City. Their attendance was complimentary to James Lackaye, their friend and former associate, who was well and popularly known in Vitagraph pictures.

"CIRCUS MAN" RELEASED BY LASKY

Florence Dagmar, a new discovery of Cecil DeMille's, plays opposite Mr. Roberts.

S. H. TWIST CONVALESCING

Stanley H. Twist, recently connected with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, who has been ill at the Flower Hospital suffering from a nervous breakdown, is convalescent. He left a few days ago for Los Angeles, to go to his mother's home, where he will rest before resuming his activities with the Universal.

The finest issue ever published of a motion picture trade paper will appear under date of December 19. See PAGE 102. No orders for additional copies can be taken after December 8.

GERTRUDE McCOY IN EDISON CHRISTMAS FILM

"The Birth of Our Saviour," the Edison Christmas drama, depicting the Nativity in the Stable and the Adoration of the Magi, affords an excellent opportunity for Gertrude McCoy to display her talents with exceptional ability in the role of the Madonna.

INCEVILLE DIRECTOR BACK AT STUDIO

George Osbourne, the Inceville director, is about to pack up and return to his duties at the studio of the New York Motion Picture Corporation in Santa Monica, Cal., after a vacation of two weeks spent in the northern part of California.

According to letters that have been received from Mr. Osbourne he has been whiling away the time in motoring and water sports. The director was unusually busy during the few weeks prior to his departure for the north. His productions included "Nipped," "The Vigil" and "The Game of Life."

BRONX MOVIES CIRCLE GIVES BALL

The entertainment committee of the Bronx Movies Circle, which set November 22 as the date for the third annual ball of the organization at the Burland Casino, Westchester and Prospect avenues, the Bronx, N. Y., did everything in its power to make the affair the sensation of the year in that part of the city.

They worked day and night to get to popular celebrities, including Clara Kimball Young, and King Baggot to attend and also Maurice Costello, Robert Warwick, Steward Holmes, Darwin Carr, Ned Finley, Lillian Walker, Norma Talmadge, Mary Anderson, Leah Baird and many others.

NEW AMERICAN COMPANY FORMED

Harry Pollard, American Beauty brand director, was in Los Angeles recently and selected a company of players who accompanied him back to Santa Barbara, where they took part in the production of three, four and five-reel pictures. Mr. Pollard and Margarita Fischer play the leads for the new company, and Mr. Pollard has charge of the direction.
Blanche Sweet Is Engaged by Lasky

SAMUEL GOLDFISH announces a contract has been concluded between the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company and Blanche Sweet, whereby she will appear in the new series of Lasky-Belasco productions now being staged for the screen. Miss Sweet was selected by Mr. Belasco and Cecil B. De Mille, for the Lasky-Belasco productions, and signed a contract for a term of years at a record breaking salary.

Blanche Sweet needs no introduction to lovers of photoplays, for, though she is only eighteen years of age, she has been making history in this art for several seasons. She is especially famous for her intense though restrained gestures and a marvelous command of facial expression for "close up" effects.

Up to the present time Blanche Sweet has been mainly associated with David Griffith, in most of whose leading productions she has appeared. She worked under Mr. Griffith while he was directing for the Biograph Company, and played the title role of "Judith of Bethulia," which electrified all America last spring. More recently she has been working with Griffith for the Reliance and Majestic companies, and has played the leading feminine roles in "Home, Sweet Home," "The Avenging Conscience," "The Escape" and other film plays which have reached Broadway.

Under the management of Mr. Lasky, and appearing in Belasco productions, Miss Sweet will be creating roles for dramas already of international fame, and she will be a member of the family of stars, which includes Dusitan Farnum, Robert Edeson, Marguerite Clark, Edith Tillaferro, Edmund Breese, Charles Richman, Edna Goodrich, Theodore Roberts, H. B. Warner and others.

Miss Sweet will make her first appearance as a Lasky-Belasco star in William C. De Mille's famous success, "The Woman," which played at the Republic Theatre for two seasons, and which will be ready for release on February 15. Work will begin within a week.

Blanche Sweet

Blanche Sweet has the distinction of being the first film star to join the Lasky ranks, hitherto made up of stage celebrities.

CATHRINE COUNTISS FOR NEW LIFE PHOTO PRODUCTION

Cathrine Countiss, who was starred in "The Awakening of Helna Ritchie," "The White Sister," and "The Christian," has just been placed under contract by the Life-Photo Film Corporation for photoplay work. Miss Countiss will do her first work for this producing organization in the photoplay held by assuming the lead in "The Avalanche," another recent acquisition of the Life Photo Film Corporation.

Present plans provide for the release of "The Avalanche" through Alco as the next Life-Photo production following "Springtime."

This former Broadway success deals with the attempts of a woman to wreck a man through manipulation of the mining stock Avalanche. Before the man's marriage, he and the woman were engaged. She subsequently married. Her husband died. Meanwhile he her former fiancé has married. This arouses the hatred of the central feminine figure in the play, which Miss Countiss is to portray.

SCENES TAKEN ON NOTED COLORADO RANCH

"When East Meets West," a forthcoming release by the Thanhouser Film Corporation, was taken on the Walsh ranch, near Denver, the birthplace of the famous $1,000,000 McLean baby. The picture, which has Mignon Anderson and Morris Foster in the leads, furnishes an excellent illustration of life on a well-ordered ranch.

The wild riding and milking herds are the same as in the old days, but great substantial barns and buildings have displaced the "dobe" shacks and fence corrals. This picture is one of the much-heralded releases made by the Thanhouser "Yellowstone" company.

GISH SISTERS TO STAR IN MUTUAL DRAMA

For the first time in more than a year the Gish sisters, Lillian and Dorothy, are featured together. They appear as co-stars in the Majestic-Mutual feature "The Sisters," written especially for them and produced by W. Christy Cabanne.

In working together in "The Sisters" Lillian and Dorothy have succeeded in adding their natural personal touch in their relation to each other as sisters, which makes this charming pastoral feature an excellent offering.

SCREEN FAVORITES WHO WILL FIGURE IN KINOTOPHOTE'S NEW FEATURE "THE SPAN OF LIFE"
"SPAN OF LIFE" FULL OF REALISM

The Kinetoscope is expecting big results from the first feature to be released by that company with Lionel Barrymore as the star. The picture is "The Span of Life," which has been pictured by Catherine Carr from the late Sutton Vane's famous melodrama of the same name.

Mr. Barrymore has associated with him in the picture such well known players as Gladys Wynne, Alma Martin and Lyster Chambers. Two well known child actors also play in the piece, Ogden Childs and little Barry Phillips. The picture is directed by Edward Mackay, who has appeared with success in several of the Kinetoscope features.

"The Span of Life" was not taken without some very trying work on the part of the company. Mr. Chambers came near being thrown from the top of a cliff by his horse. An automobile which was carrying the company down the side of Baldy Mountain went wrong, and the women of the party had to jump for their lives. And in the taking of the great "span" scene Miss Wynne came near falling from the human bridge made by the three acrobats who stretched themselves across a deep chasm. The story is more thrilling than the stage version because of the realism which has been injected into the screen version.

With Barrymore in the picture much is expected from it. It is to be released on December 7.

SPOKANE COMPANY IS INCORPORATED FOR $10,000

Spokane, Nov. 24.

Local photographers have announced the organization of the Photo-Action Company of Spokane, with an authorized capitalization of $10,000. The company is in possession of a studio and equipped to do motion picture commercial and feature work.

Charles A. Libby is president and treasurer of the company and Raymond Kahn is vice president and secretary. Others in the enterprise are George Felt, William Moore and Howard Fisher.

"Springtime" Replaces "Tigress" on Alco Schedule

ARRANGEMENT of the Alco release dates permits the public to see Florence Nash in her screen debut, "Springtime," earlier than had been intended. It is a Life-Photo production, released on December 7. Olga Petrova in "The Tigress," which had been scheduled for that date, goes over to December 21.

The readjustment was made necessary because of the large efforts which the producers of "The Tigress" are using. The motion picture public benefits from the change, since it permits them to see "Springtime" at an earlier date, and also gives the producers of "The Tigress" ample opportunity for big screen values.

Edward M. Roskam and Miss Nash, with a company of thirty, have almost completed the work of filming the Booth Tarkington photoplay, "Springtime," in New Orleans, in which the author placed the story.

Miss Nash has been long and favorably known to the public of the legitimate theatres. Although one of our youngest actresses, she has played important parts. These have been, however, characters with accentuated traits. In "Springtime" she is seen in an ingenue role, pure and simple.

Florence Nash was born in Troy, educated in a Canadian convent and in Albany. Her father was Philip F. Nash, a well-known theatrical man. So it seems only natural that Miss Nash should turn to the stage. She has been equally successful in singing and dramatic companies and in vaudeville. She began her stage career with a short season in stock.

Then came the first of her character creations. She made an instant hit as the lisping girl in "The Boys of Company B." Later she was with "The Algerian." Following this she joined De Wolf Hopper, and an engagement in "When Sweet Sixteen" followed. Shortly after this she was promoted to the honors of leading woman to Thomas W. Ross, supporting him effectively in "An Everyday Man." The vaudeville claimed Miss Nash's attention next. She was popular over a wide stretch of country in the sketch "In 1999." Next Miss Nash returned to the legitimate. In "Within the Law" there was an opportunity which the management felt was eminently suited to her talents. The role of Aggie Lynch, a type of the "tough girl," was entrusted to her.

Mr. Roskam and a company of thirty are still in New Orleans. They report that the weather has been perfect and the picture is nearly complete. They were granted permission by the municipal authorities in New Orleans to make many of the scenes in municipal parks which the action of the story required.

Other scenes were photographed in the localities described by Mr. Tarkington. Some of the scenes of the original "Springtime" were laid in the creole quarter, others in historic mansions. Mr. Roskam and his associates sought out these buildings.

NEW COSMOS RELEASE WILL BE READY SOON

The photoplay which the Cosmos Feature Film Corporation has chosen to succeed "Hearts and Flowers" is entitled "The Little Girl That He Forgot." Beulah Poynter plays the title role with her usual success.

"The Little Girl That He Forgot" was written by Miss Poynter and as a play proved a wonderful success. The story takes place in a lumber camp in Missouri and the characters are the plain but sturdy folk found in that section of the United States.

A commanding love story, in which the little swamp girl meets and learns to love a wealthy engineer from St. Louis, holds the interest throughout. The love breeds a familiarity that causes the girl of the swamps much trouble and sadness and even brings her to prison and a threatened hanging when her lover brings a reprieve and his old-time love to her.

In this story Miss Poynter passes from her pleasing childish fancies to the highly emotional woman in excellent fashion.

Miss Poynter makes the play one of powerful human interest and worth while, and it is especially in the final scene that Miss Poynter is most effective.

REVIVING THE DAYS OF PERIWIGS AND DUELS IN "SPRINGTIME" (ALCO-LIFE PHOTO FEATURE)

THE WAGabd / FLORENCE NASH / WAITING BY THE RIVER
HAVE these exhibitors answered satisfactorily the question, "What will this organization do for me?"

Have they even asked themselves that question?

If they have not, it is time they did.

And while they are in that frame of mind, here are a few other questions they may profitably ask themselves, to avoid repenting at leisure what they are about to do in haste.

* * *

EXHIBITORS have their own peculiar problems, which, from the very nature of this business, are not to be found or paralleled in the world of the stage.

Will an association composed of and controlled by men outside the motion picture business do anything to satisfy the needs of their exhibitor members, except where those needs happen to coincide with their own?

Will the United Managers assist the exhibitor to solve the problem of higher prices?

Will the United Managers assist the exhibitor to solve the problem of film rentals?

Will the United Managers assist the exhibitor to fight legalized censorship?

Will the United Managers assist the exhibitor to eliminate cut-throat competition and reduce his business to a solid, substantial and efficient basis?

* * *

WILL the United Managers assist the exhibitor to fight hostile legislation, unless that legislation affects the legitimate, vaudeville and burlesque interests as well as those of the motion picture?

And, finally, will the exhibitor be better satisfied among men who are either competitors of or strangers to his business, than he is among his own kind, whose interests are identical with his?

If exhibitors can not live in harmony in an organization made up solely of exhibitors, can they expect to live without bickerings, brawls and battles in an organization where they are always in a minority, and where they will have the pleasure of seeing their problems and needs continually pushed aside for those of the stronger party?

* * *

THAT any exhibitor should consider it necessary to go outside of his own field to find an organization he is willing to support is a confession of a total lack of common sense and business judgment on his part.

Not one of the services which the exhibitor who joined the United Managers would have a right to expect from them, but could and would be more efficiently performed by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

* * *

THESE things have not been said with malice or prejudice, but simply in a spirit of justice to the exhibitors whom Motion Picture News is bound to serve.

The United Managers' Protective Association does not need the exhibitor any more than the exhibitor needs the Association.

The Best "News" You Ever Received

EVERY issue of "Motion Picture News" is "good News" to the live-wire exhibitor—the man to whom exhibiting pictures is the vocation of a lifetime.

But the issue of December 19 will be an eye-opener from the front cover in colors to the last line of the publication.

The Christmas number of "Motion Picture News" will mark an epoch in special numbers in this field. In arrangement, contents and value it will set a new mark. No extra copies can be had after December 8.

Don't be a watchful waiter. See to it that you get all the copies you want—you'll want all you can get.
Women Will Act as Censors in Detroit

It Is Practically Decided That the Club Will Act in Charge of Film Supervision in Detroit

Since the first of last July, Detroit has been without an official censor, owing to the fact that the board of estimate would not make an allowance for the same in the appropriation asked for by the police department. The police department has made no attempt, except in one or two cases, to pass or censor any new picture films, although plain clothes men, as well as the regular policemen, have been expected to report any films which, in their opinion, were unfit to be on public exhibition. It is a fact the police department received very few complaints.

Theatre managers and proprietors, outside of a few, have had the interests of their patrons at heart and would not permit indecent and immoral pictures to be shown.

At a meeting of a committee from the Detroit Federation of Women’s Clubs and secretary of the police department, George A. Walters, it was practically decided that the Detroit Federation of Women’s Clubs should take charge of the censorship of motion pictures in this city, pending the active organization of the recreation committee, provided for by a charter amendment adopted in the November 3 election.

When the committee called on Secretary Walters, November 12, the members were informed that there wasn’t any censorship of picture theatres; that improper films have been shown by a number of downtown theatres, and that the general tone of films has been below that maintained while Lester Potter was on censor duty.

The club women volunteered to act as censors, and Secretary Walters assured them that they would be most welcome. He explained that the police department had submitted estimates for a censor, an assistant censor and a motion-picture machine operator, but that the board of estimators had cut all of the items, causing the department to abandon censorship.

He explained that if the club women found instances of improper conditions, they might notify the department, which would gladly send officers to investigate the complaint and to see that the conditions were remedied.

California Solons Ready for “Regulation”

Huge Batch of Uplift Bills, Including Censor Job, Will Be Considered

Los Angeles, Nov. 23.

That freak bills for the “regulation” of the motion picture exhibitions will be introduced at the coming meeting of the California assembly in January has become known.

One of these, now filed for public examination, provides that following the projection of each reel of pictures the lights of the theatre shall be turned on and remain lighted for three minutes, in order that the eyes of the patrons may have an opportunity for rest.

A change in another proposed piece of legislation, referred to in a previous article in Motion Picture News, relative to the establishment of a state board of censorship, with offices at the state capital, Sacramento, from which point all pictures must be released, provides that a charge of $2.50 shall be made for the examination of each reel, and that the board of censors shall consist of three members, one to be selected by the Federation of Women’s Clubs, one by the state ministerial association, and the third by the state association of school boards.

These proposed bills, together with the others—prohibiting admission to children under 16 years of age, unless accompanied by parents or legally appointed guardians; permits from state board of censors revocable at their pleasure, for the operation of a motion-picture theatre, and the state censorship bill as originally proposed—are the chief topics of conversation when two or more exhibitors or exchange men meet.

The preparation of these bills and their exhibition are proving to be a good cause for the Exhibitors League, and will result in strengthening the organization wonderfully in every part of the state. The membership is growing every week.

Naval Reserves Play Important Essanay Part

The Illinois naval reserves play an important role in the Essanay drama, “Every Inch a King.” Several of the scenes in this play, which is released December 11, are taken aboard the cutter Dubuque. Francis X. Bushman takes the leading role in the play, but the reservists play an important part in forming the lesser characters.

Robert Broderick, leading man of the Dyreda Art Film Corporation, who are using the old Reliance Studios at Yonkers, N. Y., has an international reputation as an actor, having played with such stars as Francis Wilson, Virginia Harned, Thomas Jefferson and many others.

Mr. Broderick’s first advent into the picture game was with the Kinemacolor Company, on the coast, where he wrote and played the lead in the old fable, “Jack the Giant Killer.” His portrayal of that difficult character was so excellent that he was made an offer by the Western Kalem Company, which he accepted. He then came East and joined the Eastern branch of that company, and from there to the Famous Players Company. When J. Searle Dawley left the Famous Players Company to form his own company, the Dyreda Art Film Corporation, he took Mr. Broderick with him as his leading man.

The Dyreda company up to the present time have made two big features in which Mr. Broderick has played the lead. These pictures are being released through the World Film Corporation.

The first picture, a four-reel subject, “One of Millions,” has already been released. The other feature, “In the Name of the Prince of Peace,” in four reels, will be released in November.

Children Like the Pathé Cartoons

Manager Hudson, of the San Francisco office of the Edelweiss Film Company, recently received a note from Mr. Roth, of the Portola theatre, enclosing a letter he had received from a little girl in regard to the Pathé animated cartoons by Bray. The letter is worth quoting:

“Dear Mr. Portable: I am a little girl 10 years old. My brother and I were at your pitcher show one night and we liked it that one where the elephant chased a man up the mountains. Please have some more like this.

“Yours truly, "Viola Ransome."
SKIRBOLL ACTIVE IN PITTSBURGH TERRITORY

JOSEPH SKIRBOLL, general manager of the Chicago and Pittsburgh Alco exchanges, paid a visit the other day to the Alco Film Corporation’s offices in Forty-second street. He reports that the demands for big features in Chicago and Pittsburgh are steadily increasing. In both places feature plays are put on for runs of several weeks.

Mr. Skirboll has added many new theatres to his list in his territory. The new Regent theatre at East Liberty just completed at a cost of $100,000, has signed the Regent for the entire Alco program. The theatre opened with “Salomy Jane” as the attraction. The management did extensive advertising. It got out booklets dealing with this first production of the California Motion Picture Corporation and other attractive advertising matter.

Mr. Skirboll has also added the William Penn theatre, of Pittsburgh, to the number to which he is supplying regularly the Alco programme.

CHANGES AT WASHINGTON EXCHANGES

SOME changes have taken place at the exchange offices in the Capital City. Mr. Anderson, of the Greater New York Film Exchange, has added the Box Office Attraction films to his program and has been able to place these films in important theatres.

J. A. Koepel has recently become manager of the General Film offices in Washington. As he is a man who believes in the productions of a corporation being its best spokesman certainly the popularity of the General Film program in Washington is ample proof of its quality. Its features are especially in demand.

H. M. Osborn has succeeded C. L. Worthington as manager of the Eclectic offices. He places considerable in very favorable and announces S. M. Flax, formerly of Warner’s Features, to become the road man for his offices. Mr. Worthington has associated himself with the Box Office Attractions of Philadelphia.

ALCO OPENS KANSAS CITY OFFICE

THE Alco Film Service have opened an office in the研究 building, Kansas City, Mo, suite 317-318, under the management of William Reichman, who came here from their St. Louis office. Their entrance into this field with up-to-date productions will meet aggressive competition, as all the high class firms are represented in this territory.

The fall trade in the West has shown an increasing demand for moving pictures, and in fact all lines of business are flourishing. This condition is a natural result of abundant production of food stuff, and at very satisfactory prices, caused, of course, by the struggle of our unfortunate ancestors “across the pond.”

There is a decided increase in the demand for the better class of productions, and higher grades of all equipments.

BLINKHORN OPENS COAST OFFICE

THE Blinkhorn Photoplays Corporation has established Pacific Coast headquarters at Mason and Market streets, San Francisco, Cal., in the Mechanics’ Bank building, the new branch being in charge of C. L. Williams, formerly of this city, but located for several years past in New York.

Large offices have been established on the sixth floor of this building, and an unusual feature, for San Francisco at least, will be an up stairs exhibiting room. An operating booth is being fitted up, and this will be in operation within a short time. Some films have already been received, and advance bookings have been quite satisfactory. It is the plan of this concern to open several branches in this territory as soon as the main office is running smoothly, these to be at Los Angeles, Denver and at either Seattle or Portland.

MAY REPRESENT ONE OF NEWER COMPANIES

E. R. MENCEL, better known as “Dick,” one of the oldest road men out of Minneapolis and formerly with the Mutual, Universal and World Film companies, has resigned his position with the last named firm.

After a few weeks’ recuperation he will return to the Twin Cities, probably as representative of one of the newer programs.

WORLD INCREASES STAFF IN ATLANTA

ARTHUR S. HYMAN, manager of the Atlanta branch of the World Film Corporation, has found that the increase in his business has made necessary additions to his forces.

Thomas F. McCrory has been secured as road man, and a special feature department has been added by Manager Hyman.

EXHIBITOR WILL JOIN EXCHANGE

HARRY NAUGLE, who has been manager of Chum’s Broadway Theatre, Los Angeles, has tendered his resignation to take effect in the near future and will accept a position as assistant to Manager Harry H. Hicks of the Los Angeles General Film Company exchange.

FROM PITTSBURGH EXCHANGES

MAYER SILVERMAN, who went to New York on business several days ago, has returned to Pittsburgh. Silverman is of the Liberty Renting Film Company. While in the East he closed for “The Great Train Robbery,” a four-reel feature, and he states he has other productions under consideration. Mr. Silverman announces the following will be ready for release: “Saints and Sinners,” four reels; “The Woman He Wronged,” five reels, and “When London Sleeps,” four reels.

Adolph Klein, of the Keno Feature Film Company, has added a number of big features to his already large list.

Although he has been in his new office but a few weeks Harvey B. Day, local manager of the Box Office Attractions Company, has already had the carpenters busy remodeling his new plant. He states that it is necessary for him to have more room on account of the expansion of the business and the many new reels that will be shipped in each week.

NASMITH HANDLING STATES RIGHTS

WILLIAM J. NASMITH, who was formerly in Chicago in the exchange business, is back in that city once more and this time selling the rights to feature films. After leaving Chicago Mr. Nasmith went with the “Universal Weekly” and left that company, to become associated with the Progress Feature Film Company.

Lately he has had charge of the Eighth Avenue and Belvedere Theatres, two of the largest photoplay houses in Manhattan and Bronx.

Mr. Nasmith announces that he has the states rights for Illinois and neighboring states of several big features of current releases.

MONTREAL EXCHANGE SIGNS LIFE PHOTO RELEASE

THE Equitable Film Exchange, the head office of which is in Montreal, has just completed negotiations with the Life Photo Film Corporation of New York City, to release in Canada all its features.

The following are the first of the series: “The Ordeal,” “The Banker’s Daughter,” “Capt. Swift,” “Northern Lights,” and “The Greyhound.” Mr. Roskam is the manager.

CRONE VISITS LOS ANGELES

R. CRONE, manager of the Pacific Mutual exchange at San Francisco, and who was formerly of Los Angeles, spend a week there in conference with Manager Johns of the Los Angeles exchange.

Montana Relieves Exhibitors of Tax Burden

Supreme Court Hands Down Decision Against City Licenses as State Already Exacts $25 a Year Assessment

Butte, Mont., Nov. 23.

MONTANA cities cannot validly tax a motion-picture house in this state for a license in excess of the annual tax of $25 charged by the state, according to a decision of Judge Albert P. Stark, of the district court, in the case of the city of Livingston against E. P. White, a Livingston picture-house proprietor.

The decision is of interest to every exhibitor in the state. The case will be brought to the supreme court for reversal by the authorities of the city of Livingston. This is the first test case in this state. It is understood that various cities have been waiting to see the success of the move by the city officials of Livingston. A law passed at the last session of the Montana legislature, setting a tax of $25 on picture houses and guaranteeing those houses certain rights on payment of the tax, was also held constitutional in Judge Stark's decision.

The city council of Livingston passed an ordinance a year ago taxing Livingston picture houses $30 per quarter. White objected, and the case was made a test one. Exhibitors throughout the state will await with much interest the decision of the supreme court, which, however, may not be given for some months yet. It is understood that the matter will not rest here. The general feeling among picture men is that the decision of Judge Stark will stand.

Los Angeles Company Ceases Production

_Usona, First Affected by War, Was Releasing in Europe Exclusively—Burton King Declares Market There Is Badly Hit_
_Special to Motion Picture News_
Los Angeles, Nov. 23.

THE first producing company of the Los Angeles motion picture colony to announce a close-down because of the European war is the Usona company, composed of Los Angeles parties, who have been releasing in Europe.

The producing end of this company was in charge of Burton King, and for months it has been known as the "mystery film company," as no one knew the releases, and it was believed here all the fifty-odd reels of negative made had been placed on the shelf.

It now develops that all negative was shipped direct to England, where the positive factory was located. A majority of the subjects went big, according to reports, the most successful being "Mother's Birthday," from which one hundred and forty-two prints were made and sold. The name role of this picture was taken by Eugenia Forde, well known as Rosamond in the "Desperate Desmond" comedy series, of several years ago. The son and daughter parts were played by Robyn Adair and Virginia Kirkley.

According to reports received by Mr. King, direct from England by cable, the market there is badly hit, and further releases will cause losses.

FIRST FOUR ALL STAR FILMS TO BE HANDLED BY CASINO

THAT there may be no misunderstanding as far as Michigan is concerned, the Casino Feature Film Co. will handle the first four releases of the All-Star Producing Company, which have or will come out since October 5.

Outside of these four attractions the complete Alco program in the state of Michigan will be handled by Charles M. Davie, who has just opened offices at 206-208 Equity building, Detroit. Some houses have been under the impression that Mr. Davie would also handle the All-Star productions, but he desires to correct any such impression as above mentioned. The first release in Michigan was "Salomey Jane," which appeared at the Empire, Detroit, Monday and Tuesday, November 23 and 24.

BRACKETT GETS SOUTHWEST FOR BUFFALO BILL FILM

ROBERT BRACKETT, of Los Angeles, who has had charge of booking the Buffalo Bill Indian War feature in California and Arizona, has been very successful with the production, so much so that the owner, Historical Film Company, of Chicago, has allotted him additional territory. In the future he will have charge of all booking in Colorado, Utah, Nevada and New Mexico, in addition to this state and Arizona.

Exhibitor's Hint to Reviewers

Editor, Motion Picture News,
New York City:

Dear Sir: Your editorial of November 28 on real quality is assuredly a timely one and the last paragraph is something every reviewer should ponder over. "Why don't you put the exhibitor on guard against such productions?"

Well! Why don't you? The inland exhibitor is obliged to judge his features from the reviews, and his advertising is almost entirely governed by his deductions, which nine times out of ten is most favorable.

Did you ever read a review that was not a boost for any old kind of a big feature? I had before me now two reviews of a standard feature which I just played a few nights ago; one said the picture was lacking all those things that make a big picture—the other said the exhibitor could go as far as he liked boosting; after exhibiting I found out that the latter was right.

Now the man who roasted that picture discards the profession to which he belongs.

But to get back to the main question. How is the exhibitor going to determine which is the real from the near feature? Not from the general views in the numerous magazines, because they are all "good" in them.

Under present conditions the exhibitor, if hooked up with some standard features, should under no consideration nibble at the alluring baits of wild cat features.

An editorial directed to the small town exhibitor would be of wonderful assistance in future guidance, for no writer ever thinks further than conditions in New York City.

Old Timer.

President Beach on Program Troubles

Since the manufacturers of feature film attractions have entered the field on such a large scale, and it has become necessary for almost all exhibitors to show these features from time to time, in order to vary their programs, theatre owners have complained bitterly of the manner in which film exchanges insist upon payment for a full program, whether it is desired in its entirety or not.

In a communication to his fellow exhibitors, President H. L. Beach, of the California State League, says:

"To undertake to run a show with the regular program means stagnation; to run features alone means lack of variety; therefore we see the need of both, and the successful exhibitor must have both in order to satisfy his patrons.

"One of the greatest problems an exhibitor has to meet is the show business is to keep his patrons satisfied and to keep them coming; therefore it must be clearly seen that the exhibitor must have freedom in selecting that which brings him the greatest success, and to have success an exhibitor must have both variety and strength to his program. Under the present conditions the exhibitor is caught between the two factions, and is like being caught between two great millstones—he is being ground exceedingly fine.

"The regular program exchanges seem to feel that they have a first mortgage on the exhibitor, by reason of priority in the field, while on the other hand, the feature man feels that he also has his money invested and desires to make a living, and by the very nature of his productions the price per reel must exceed that of the regular program.

"Now, if the exhibitor has to pay his regular daily service and pay an advanced price per reel on features, taken altogether he frequently finds himself in the hole on the day's business, with the total sum of having worked all day for the film exchanges. To solve this problem exhibitors must have freedom in contracting with exchanges, as their needs require a liberal policy. Surely this will benefit all. What the exchanges desire most is to deal with a prosperous exhibitor, for he does not hesitate to buy good films and pay a fair price. Let our motto be, "Live and let live."

Editor, Motion Picture News,

Dear Sir: Among the severe criticisms of features on exhibition the past few weeks, is the increasing lotting of scenes in which the infants take a prominent part. The finer feelings of mothers, fathers, brothers and sisters especially, are shocked by the distress, weeping and real sobbing of the little babies, often in the hands of persons not accustomed to handling the little tender ones.

The real thrills of a well-staged drama or emotional play are not produced by distressing a helpless, tender baby. Eliminate the error, and let us have the laughing, crying, little ones, or not at all.

Most of the alleged comic plays now produced are too rotten even for the smaller towns. As a matter of fact there is only one production that is in the slightest entertaining. The rolling, tumbling policeman, running over house-tops, the usual plunge in water, and many others of like nature, are getting so stale they are disgusting instead of amusing. Let us have something new or drop them out entirely. [Many of the objection made by "Exhibitor" are well taken, but he should remember that the tendency is toward improvement.—Editor.]

Casino Has First Four All-Star Features

THE CASINO FEATURE FILM CO. 2200-2211 Dime Bank Building.

Editor, Motion Picture News,

Dear Sir—It is well to note in your issue of November 21 an announcement to the effect that C. M. Davie has obtained the franchise for the entire Alco program for Michigan.

We would like you to correct this statement, inasmuch as we have the exclusive rights for the next four All-Star releases, including Ethel Bartonmore in "The Nightingale," "Shore Acres," Digby Bell in "The Education of Mr. Pippy," and the release following that. We have also an option for a year following these releases, and any announcement to the effect that the Alco exchange in Michigan controls all Alco productions is a misstatement of facts.

Yours very truly,

FEATURE "WHEEL" IS PLAN OF CINCINNATI EXHIBITORS

New Organization Closes Deal with Box Office Attractions for a Series of Multiples to Be Shown at Association Houses Before They Are Released to Other Theatres—Each Feature Will Run Ten Days Before General Release—South Dakota Exhibitors Fight Sunday Law

Cincinnati, O., Nov. 25.

THE Exhibitors Managers' Association, the new organization of Cincinnati film men representing 10 motion picture theatres of the city, this week closed one of the biggest deals for feature attractions in the history of the city.

At their meeting in the Savoy hotel, the ten members of the association signed agreements by which features of the Box Office Attraction Company will be furnished to these houses for an indefinite period. Mr. Colby, representing the film company, stated that an office will be opened in Cincinnati within a few weeks, and programs will be then furnished to the members of the organization.

It has been so arranged that the features will start at the Alhambra, President Charles Weigel's theatre, and some according to the plans of the organization, through the other houses represented in the membership.

Each Feature to Run Ten Days

Each feature thereafter will have a run of ten consecutive days before it will be available for release to other theatres. Theatres represented in the organization are located in different sections of the city, so that the releasing arrangement appears to be an ideal one.

The first of these features, all of which will be five or six reels in length, will be "St. Elmo," it is announced. This is to be followed by "Life's Shop Window" and other pictures of similar character. The association has made similar arrangements for first releases of the Alco and Shubert-Brady features through Clay E. Breinh, manager of the World's Special Film Corporation here.

Charles Weigel, manager of the Alhambra, is president of the organization; A. G. Hettesheimer, manager the Orpheum, vice-president, and Harry Kruse, manager the Park Theatre, Northside, secretary.

Downtown Business Is Booming

Business among exhibitors is reported as fair, considering the fact that many workmen in the downtown district are idle as a result of the general business depression. Interest in the better grade of pictures has naturally increased with the arrival of cold weather. Downtown theatres are playing to exceptionally fine houses, but those of the suburbs are not doing as well as had been expected.

Arrangements for the opening of the new Strand Theatre, under the management of Isaac Libson, on Thanksgiving Day are being completed. The Strand is to be the rejuvenated Gayety Theatre, formerly a burlesque house, which will now be devoted to feature films. The Keith interests are behind the new house. It is the largest exclusive picture theatre in the heart of the city, and it is confidently expected that under the management of Mr. Libson will be immeasurably successful.

Decorators have been busy during the past two weeks rearranging the paintings in the lobby and auditorium. Huge signs announcing the opening of the new theatre have been built around the lobby and completely hide the workers from view of pedestrians.

The Gayety was the newest theatre building in Cincinnati, and the construction of the auditorium was after the most modern plans. No announcement has yet been made of the programs which it will offer, although it is intended that the General Film Company will furnish the greater part of the program.

EXHIBITORS FIGHT SUNDAY CLOSING LAW IN SOUTH DAKOTA; CASE IS IN COURTS

Minneapolis, Nov. 25.

EVER since motion pictures were exhibited there has been constant wrangling about Sunday shows in various South Dakota towns; some towns are permitted to run on the Sabbath day providing the subjects exhibited are of a scenic, educational or industrial order; in short, any motion picture which contained no acting or special stage settings were considered appropriate on the day of rest.

At the present time the exhibitors of Aberdeen, S. D., are having a fight on their hands. A few weeks ago they commenced to run Sunday performances which in every detail complied with the requirements of the Sunday laws; one by one each manager has been arrested, and on two separate counts.

In one case an exhibitor lost out in Municipal Court; carried it to Circuit Court, and also lost out there, and this has now been carried to the Supreme Court of the State. The other exhibitors have been able so far to keep their cases in the Municipal Court as they cannot get a jury to agree.

If the Supreme Court upholds the decision of the Circuit Court it will close every picture show on Sunday in the State of South Dakota, and in some towns such as Sioux Falls they have been running for several years.

The Aberdeen bunch are determined to make this a test case, and an article was inserted by the theatrical proprietors of Aberdeen, and appeared in the Aberdeen Daily American of November 6.

The Aberdeen exhibitors are making such heroic efforts to win their cases that every exhibitor in the Northwest, in fact the entire United States, should lend a helping hand to these fellow exhibitors, and C. T. Smithers, in care of the Idle Hour Theatre, Aberdeen, South Dakota, will be very glad to hear from any one who might have one or the other suggestion to offer.

Elizabeth Conditions Forecast Business Boom

Exhibitors Feel Good Effects of Action of Singer Sewing Machine Company, Which Is Now Taking Back Operatives

Elizabeth, N. J., Nov. 25.

LOCAL theatre managers are unanimous in the belief that the falling off in business that accompanied the beginning of the European war will have but little effect on the future theatre patronage in this city.

Everyone reports that during the past two weeks conditions have materially improved. The laying off of several thousand men at the Singer Sewing Machine plant here and the enforced idleness of hundreds of employees of other manufacturing concerns, were more keenly felt by the moving picture houses than by playhouses that staged other forms of entertainment.

Several managers declared that during the months of August, September and October the attendance dropped off fully 50 per cent. During the present month, however, there has been a gradually restoration of normal conditions until at the present time attendance figures are but little smaller than characterized the pleasing conditions that existed before the advent of the European conflict.

The Singer company has begun taking back hundreds of those who were laid off and better industrial conditions are reported from other sources throughout the city. At the Garden Theatre this week all attendance records have been broken by the capacity crowds that greeted Mary Pickford in "Behind the Scenes." Proctor's Broad street theatre and other motion picture houses report improved conditions of patronage that argue well for a profitable winter season.

HANDWORTH VISITS NEW YORK

The director of the Excelsior Film Company found time to run down from Lake Placid to New York for a day or two of work. Harry Handworth was happy as usual and of course busy. He said he had found time to come to town as the next production of the Excelsior was already completed. Mr. Handworth felt that he deserved a well earned rest.

The finest issue ever published of a motion picture trade paper will appear under date of December 19. See PAGE 132. No orders for additional copies can be taken after December 8.
STRIKING FIGURES AND SCENES FROM THE SECOND EPISODE OF THANHOUSER'S NEW SERIAL

THE CHIEFTAIN

OVERCOME IN THE "SLEEPING HOUSE"

"ZUDORA"

(Thanhouser—Second Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

EVEN if the witness of "The Mystery of the Sleeping House," the second episode in the adventures of "Zudora," finds it slightly unfathomable until the termination of the first thousand feet, his interest will be so well sustained by the remarkable atmosphere of mysticism and seclusion which pervades the film that the little complexities in the plot itself will pass unnoticed.

Such delightfully mystifying situations which are continually presenting themselves throughout the two reels, seeming for the reason all too short, were bettered to any great extent in Zudora's famed predecessor, "The Million Dollar Mystery."

It was not our good fortune to pass judgment on Zudora number one, and so if the actions of the characters, and even the characters themselves, seem, in the beginning, rather obscure, it is because of our negligence, not the fault of the picture. But let the point be made clear that after the action has gained headway, after we have become acquainted with the various members of the cast, and after a few mystic situations have been led up to and developed, the why and wherever of the story is as clear as the sun's rays, and like the sun's rays, again it fairly dazzles with elaborately gorgeous settings and costumes.

But there are other things to awaken and enliven the senses, however dull they may be. When we see Storm, the handsome hero of the story enlocked in a contracting cell with the walls slowly closing in about him, we are seized with abject fear and anxiety that Zudora will not reach the giant Nubian slave who is turning a crank which is closing the walls, in time to save her lover.

She accomplishes this in grand style, however, and the two are united again, ready to start on the next adventure. The way Storm arrived in the cell was the result of a search for Zudora, who had gone to a Hindu den to fathom a mystery allotted to the mind of her guardian. He, however, gives the problem to Zudora to solve, as one of the twenty she has to complete in order to receive his permission to marry Storm.

She only emerges from her perils triumphant after the most trying circumstances, which are calculated to create suspense, and this they certainly do, in a most effective style. In the class of mystery stories, this episode of "Zudora" is most certainly one of the best in every degree.

"THE WALLS OF JERICHO"

(Box Office—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

I f one is not familiar with the fact that "The Walls of Jericho" was formerly a stage success, the conclusion might be that the story was laid back in biblical times, but such is not the case. Distinctly modern in nature, "The Walls of Jericho" mean in reality the walls of social cynicism and hypocrisy, which, thanks to the author, fall down with a crash in the end of the picture, much, as the Bible tells us, resembling the downfall of the walls of the ancient city, when the Israelites blew their trumpets.

As a stage production "The Walls of Jericho" achieved great success, both in New York City and throughout the country at large. In its visualized state it is sure to entertain and enthrall many thousands of persons, even more, perhaps than its illustrious forerunner. It is said that Alfred Sutro, the author of the play, was more than satisfied when he viewed the production in its finished state, so if the author is pleased with his own story in a picturized form, it is safe to surmise that the public will be equally satisfied.

After a somewhat lengthy introduction, showing the habits and characteristics of two miners in our own west, we see one of them, an Englishman, Jack Frobishier, forced to flee to his own country from a crime which he did not commit. Here he falls heir to his father's vast estates, and soon after marries Lady Althea, an English society woman. The rest of the picture is taken up with illustrations of the false and hypocritical ways of society. His wife succumbs to the wiles of a corrupt English society man, and is openly denounced by her husband, but even then he still purports to keep her, and straightway unites her eyes to the evil of the man she thinks she loves. This man, in league with an enemy of Frobishier from the States, accuses him of the crime he was supposed to have committed, but the sheriff steps in just in time to tell the truth.

Emmund Breese interprets the role of Frobishier in a way which calls for no unfavorable comment. He is immensely strong as an out of the ordinary Englishman, possessing a character and manner of going about his business with a determination to get to the bottom of things, effected by the quick and decisive ways of one who has received hard knocks in a previous life as an American miner.

Claire Whitney is so well suited to the role of his wife, that it seems as if Lady Althea were a part especially created for her. Stuart Holmes is an unsympathetic part as the idle Englishman, which suits him remarkably well. Edward Jose appears to good advantage as the claim-jumper who attempts to accuse Frobishier of murder, but is finally arrested on that charge himself. The rest of the cast is good.

The photography of the offering is very good and the scenes and sets realistic. Credit should be allotted to Lloyd B. Carleton, who directed the picture, and to all others who were concerned in the making of it.
FOR THE MASTERY OF THE WORLD
(Eclair-Universal—Three Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

These reels follow as a sequel to "Adventures in Diplomacy." A three-part subject released a short time ago by the Eclair Company. The same characters appear, and although the former picture was practically complete in itself, this one adds an ending which is not necessarily, but forms another complete story.

The picture deals with a group of international spies, who have perfected a wireless bomb which they desire to sell to some foreign ambassadors in the United States. Grimm, of the Secret Service, is put upon the case to prevent the deal from going through, and after a number of exciting experiences he is successful.

The leads are played by Alec B. Francis, Belle Adair and Edward Roseman, who have also appeared in the former picture. In the finale of this after the pretty international spy's two brothers have met with death in testing the bomb, she is taken under the protection of Grimm, and the supposition is that they are married.

HUMAN HEARTS
(Imperial-Universal—Three Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

If anyone is so far mistaken as to think that the real honest-to-goodness melodrama has passed out of existence, let that person see this picture. Whether it will please him or not depends on his individual tastes, but if he is looking for melodrama, and melodrama of the super-melodramatic sort, he will go into ecstasies over "Human Hearts." In that class of pictures this one is truly the best.

It will be remembered that "Human Hearts" was once and perhaps still is a stage attraction. On the film it loses none of its force, and will form ample entertainment for the melodramatic-loving soul. To George Lessey goes the credit of having transposed the stage production to the motion picture. He has fully demonstrated his ability in a production of this variety, as will be verified when it has been seen by the public.

To begin with, we have the absolutely merciless, cold and immoveable villainess; not even a prayer-meeting, nor the entreaties and beseechings of an old lady will melt her steely heart. Characteristic of all "villainesses," she begets the hero's forgiveness in the end, but he refuses, and she meets death by interfering with a misguided shot from the villain's gun.

The villain is a bad individual also; his worst act is to stab the hero's father in the back, mistaking him for his offspring. Then the adventuress steps in and accuses the son of the vile deed, and he is sent to the state prison. The poor boy's mother weeps bitterly and in weeping becomes blind, but it is she who secures the governor's pardon, which—although the villain has been chased from cover by a tramp who saw the deed committed, and convicted—will be liable to cause tears to come to the eyes of the soft-hearted.

The picture is constructed well and played in a corresponding manner, with King Baggot and Arline Pretty in the roles of the hero and heroine. The entire three reels are absorbing; the action is fast, and the scenes, especially those of the prison grounds, most realistic. Altogether, "Human Hearts" is an excellent melodrama.

THE BEST MAN
(Edison—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY CLIFFORD H. PANGBURN

This film is an adaptation of a detective story of such an unusual and absorbing kind that it could hardly fail to be interesting. As a matter of fact the producers have taken full advantage of the novel to make a film which holds the attention from the first.

The production's only fault is one of the rarest known in the making of motion pictures, namely, it is too short. The book from which the picture is taken is so crowded with exciting incidents and situations that a four reel picture could have been made form it without the slightest padding, had the original been followed closely. It is regrettable that this was not done, for it is seldom a film can be criticised for being too short.

However, as may be imagined, the two reels are full of the fastest sort of action. "The Best Man" differs from most detective stories in that there are few, if any, scenes of actual violence. Instead, there are many startling situations and a surprising romance. Gertrude McCoy makes a charming heroine, while Marc MacDermott is seen in a dual role as the villainous would-be bridegroom, and the detective who found himself so unexpectedly married.

The detective goes to New York to get a copy of an important government cipher message from a band of crooks. He is introduced at a dinner as an expert on code translating. His task is to steal the cipher and return it to Washington. At great risk he manages to obtain the paper by means of a clever ruse, but is not out of the house before he is pursued. He leaps into a carriage, and is amazed to be driven to a church.

A wedding is about to take place, and the detective is seized and rushed into the church. He thinks he is the best man, or rather has been mistaken for him, and it is not until the ceremony is nearly over that he realizes he is being married to the pretty girl at his side.

He sticks to his place, however, as the crooks are waiting outside. How the bridge was so ignorant of her fiance's appearance as to be deceived by a stranger and the ultimate success of the detective, and his wooing of his wife makes the rest a story of decided excellence.

CURFEW IN FORCE IN LOUISVILLE
Special to Motion Picture News

The old curfew ordinance forbidding children to be on the streets after 8 o'clock at night without the consent of their parents, has been revived at Lexington, Ky. Mayor Cassidy has instructed the Commissioner of Public Safety to write to the proprietors of theatres and picture houses requesting them not to permit children under fifteen years of age to enter these places of amusement after 8 o'clock.
“WHEN FATE LEADS TRUMP”
(Excelsior-Alliance—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY H. S. FULD

THIS production from the book of Alice M. Roberts dealing with a story of a woman’s trust, suffering unwitting error, fear and final happiness must interest all beholding it. There is not a dull moment through the entire four parts; the photography is exceptionally clear and distinct. The exteriors, the views of the mountain streams, the lumber camp scenes in the woods, are all fine, and examples of care in the choosing. The interiors are good in the main, only the cave scenes being a little crude. But the story is so interesting that this minor fault is lost sight of.

Gordon, against the wishes of his father, the leader of a band of smugglers, marries Marion Williams (Octavia Handworth), and taking his wife with him to visit his father is just in time to be caught in a raid of the police. He is captured with his father and the rest of the band, but Marion escapes.

After wandering around all night she is found by two lumbermen, and carried by one of them, Jim, to his home. Her privations, suffered in her all-night trip, have unbalanced her mind and she loses all recollection of her life previous to her rescue. Upon her recovery she consents to marry Jim and for a few years they are happy.

One day, Jim, who is now paymaster, comes home and finds Gordon, who has served his time and been released from prison, in the house with Marion. Gordon, not to compromise her remains silent when Jim gives him “one hour to explain or fight.” Having first removed the bullets from his own revolver Gordon receives a mortal wound in the duel that follows, and dying, confesses to Jim that she married him years ago and believed him dead.

The acting of the entire cast is beyond criticism, although the fervor and realism of Marion’s acting as interpreted by Octavia Handworth deserves special mention. Especially so in her escape from the cave when she climbs the cliff and her subsequent aimless wanderings where she is not averse to falling in the water a few times and getting thoroughly soaked.

Taken all together this production will prove an acceptable release and should add to the producer’s reputation.

RESCIND LICENSE TO ENCOURAGE THEATRE OPENING

Buffalo, N. Y., Nov. 25.

In an effort to have a motion picture theatre open in Falconer, N. Y., near this city, this winter, the village board has just passed a resolution abolishing a license fee for such theatres. In 1911 the same board passed a resolution charging $500 license for picture shows.

The next year it was reduced to $50, and in 1913 the fee was brought down to $25. Each year the theatre in town has had several different proprietors, and each season it has closed down in the middle of the winter. It has been suggested that next year the village board give a bonus to anyone with nerve enough to start the enterprise.

“THE LAST DANCE”
(Picture Playhouse—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY CLIFFORD H. PANGBURN

ONE of the most difficult tasks which ever confronts a motion picture producer is to put on the screen a story of a heavily emotional type. With a company composed of American players such a picture usually falls flat because of the coldness and lack of sympathy of the acting, or else by reason of an unsuccessful imitation of the methods of some famous emotional artist.

If a European company attempts such a picture, and they do so with great frequency, there is an almost inevitable tendency to overact to such an extent as to appear ridiculous to American audiences. “The Last Dance” is acted by a Spanish company, but the last mentioned fault has been avoided, without falling into the first. True, there are a few spots where there is a considerable amount of heaving of bosoms and working of faces, but they are excusable because for the most part the acting is restrained enough to satisfy an American audience, but sufficiently gesticulatory to express the emotions of the characters.

In the matter of settings this picture is also noteworthy. A number of scenes take place in an opera house. For these is used a great auditorium with three tiers of boxes extending around the pit. The seats and boxes are filled with people in fashionable attire. As views from the front, back of the house and the boxes are shown the effect is most excellent.

Another excellent feature of the settings is the extensive use made of glass doors and partitions. These give the scenes a sense of richness, as well as presenting attractive vistas and offering opportunities for some very fine light effects.

The art gallery in which one scene takes place has every appearance of being the real thing. Speaking of art, the producers deserve a compliment on the costume of the hero, who is an artist. A simple, flowing black necktie is the only thing about his costume which differs from the ordinary civilian outfit. After the outlandish rags which some American directors have used for artists recently this is a pleasant relief.

There are many other fine interiors, and in addition to this the scenes which take place out of doors are enacted before unusually pleasing backgrounds.

The cast is headed by Signorita Conchita Ledesma, a Spanish dancer widely known in southern Europe. Gustavo Serena is seen as her lover. Ninon, the model, is played by Laura Darville, and the part of the artist’s friend by Camillo Tovaglari.

A poor artist is attracted by a famous dancer and forgets his faithful model. She induces the dancer to pose for the man she loves, although she realizes that she will probably lose him. She is right and the dancer and painter marry after the latter has won fame through his picture of the woman.

Later they separate to give themselves to their respective arts. The painter loses his money and is dying. His model, still faithful, goes for the dancer. Too late she realizes the folly of their separation. She dances for the last time for her lover, who dies before her. Feeling that life is no longer worth while she kills herself.

DRAMATIC MOMENTS IN THE EXCELSIOR-ALLIANCE FEATURE, “WHEN FATE LEADS TRUMP” “THE COLONEL OF THE RED HUZZARS”
(Edison—Three Reels)
REVIEWED BY CLIFFORD H. PANGBURN

THIS picture is a dramatization of the novel of the same name by John Scott Reed. The book belongs to the school of modern fiction which was made famous by Anthony Hope. It is the type of story which deals with the adventures of an American in some imaginary kingdom of Europe. Usually the American finds himself mixed up with the ruling family, and this instance is no exception. Nevertheless, it is a romance which is full of interest.

The film is marked by a series of effective settings, noticeable among them being those in the grounds about the royal palace. The photography is also of a high order. The cast is a strong one, excellent acting being the rule. Especially good work is done by Robert Connex, MacDermott and Miriam Nesbitt. Armand Dalberg, a young official in the State Department at Washington, meets the pretty young wife of an aged army officer for some supposedly worthy cause may harm others its real interest lay in the fact that it presented a good story.

It is for this reason that the book was so widely read, both in this country and England. It is the type of story which is well suited for transfer to the screen, and Otis Turner, who directed the work, has been successful in his task.

The cast includes a list of favorites from Universal companies. Anna Little is seen as the girl who loses her memory but is later “called back.” She handles the difficult part without overacting and with a decided charm. Her husband is portrayed by Herbert Rawlinson.

The action of the story takes place in England and on the Continent. As the picture was produced in California Mr. Turner had no easy time in obtaining the right atmosphere. The difficult scenes at the Siberian convict camp are specially well done, and the artificial blizzard is so realistic as to make the spectator shiver. By using modern costumes instead of those of the period in which the story is laid the producer has lost a chance to give the film an added touch, but he avoids the many difficulties surrounding a costume piece.

The story concerns a girl who loses her memory at the shock of seeing her brother killed before her eyes by one of a band of anarchists of whom her uncle is a leader. A blind man is present, but is allowed to go on account of his condition, which leads the murderer to believe that he can never give testimony. Two years later the blind man has been cured. He has so altered his appearance that he is not recognized when he again encounters the anarchists. He finds and marries the girl, and then discovers her condition. He sets himself the task of curing her by finding out the past events of her life. He succeeds in restoring his wife’s memory after many adventures, which, among other things, lead to the death of the murderer at the hand of one of the band he has betrayed. There are a number of exciting incidents which cannot be described in so condensed an account of the plot.

“FOUNDLINGS OF FATHER TIME”
(Nestor—Universal—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A LINE on the first title of this picture remarks that it is “Respectfully submitted to those who have plenty to seek out and render aid to the aged poor,” and no better sentiment could be prefixed, as it makes a great human appeal to those of that class.

Productions that Charles Gyblin, the director, and Murdock MacQuarrie, leading man, turn their hands to, are practically sure to be good, and this is almost the best picture that they have turned out for some time. As a character study it has no superiors and very few equals. Containing little action it relies solely on its sympathetic trend, and the ability of the principals, Mr. MacQuarrie and Mrs. Benson to carry it through, which they do in an excellent manner.

Little else can be said of it, except book it, and it will most surely please any house. The story starts with the scene of an old firm. An aged bookkeeper is its most trusted employe, but a corporation being formed the old man loses his position, and thereon can get no other, because of his age. Through all his misfortunes his wife remains loyal. They are turned out of their home, and finally out of their wretched room, where they meet death in the terrific rain storm that rages.

PREPARE FOR PHOTOPLAYERS’ BALL

Los Angeles, Nov. 22.

WHEN the auditing committee of the Photoplayers, Inc., the West Coast organization of actors, directors and others connected with the industry here read its report at the last meeting of the club following the weekly good-fellowship dinner, and it was found the indebtedness over and above all money on hand was about $1,200, Manager L. Bernstein, of the Universal studios, made the motion that bonds of $20, $30, $40 and $50 be issued. Within five minutes more than $1,800 had been subscribed by the players. The membership numbers about five hundred.

At this meeting the first steps in preparing for the second annual photoplayers’ ball, at the Shrine auditorium on February 14, were taken when a committee on arrangements, consisting of Isadore Bernstein, Theodore Roberts, Charles Pias and George Melford, was named.
"UNREST"
(Selig—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY T. S. MEAD

A TWO-REEL picture so thoroughly and uniformly good that it requires no special feature or over-worked thrill to excite the second reel, and it will certainly be appreciated by every audience. Such a picture is "Unrest," a truthful-o called psychological drama. By this be it not understood that the production is devoid of thrilling scenes. An exciting automobile race between Thomas Santschi as Tom Dean and Bessie Eyton as Bessie Garwood, a realistic bar-room fight, Tom's rescue of Bessie from her pretended drowning, would help a lot towards putting any picture over. But here these scenes merely add spice to a consistently good production, and are not used as the high seasoning necessary to make a poor one palatable.

W. E. Wing has hit upon an original idea for the plot of the scenario. Such originality would excuse a multitude of sins, were it necessary. In this case it is not, for the main idea is well supported by a perfectly logical development of the story.

The motherless Tom Dean is the cause of great anxiety to his father. For some unaccountable reason, Tom prefers the company of bar-room rowdies to the refinement and luxury of his own home. He fights for the seemingly uncontrollable love of fighting, and though not morally bad himself, he continually associates with a bad crowd of toughs. These tendencies worry Tom also, but he seems unable to combat them.

Professor Delmar, a loyal friend of Tom's father, becomes interested in this peculiar case, and thinks he finds its solution in the hereditary phenomenon of atavism; that Tom, in other words, has inherited the characteristics of his ancestors generations back, when brown and muscle ruled, instead of brains. Professor Delmar persuades Bessie Garwood, an attractive society girl, to aid him in the treatment of Tom. Bessie starts in by one day soundly beating Tom in an automobile race, and taunts him with the fact that he has been outdone by a girl.

This, of course, gives Tom's vanity a great shock, but at the same time it arouses his first interest in one of the gentler sex. Shortly after this good beginning, he gets into another scrape, and thoroughly disgusted with himself he leaves home, this time going to the seashore, where he engages as a boatman. Here, Bessie finds him and renews the treatment in a clever manner. Success rewards her. Tom is not only cured, but love develops between them, and a few days later Tom writes his delighted father that he has been cured not by any involved psychological treatment, but simply by love.

"THE TWO COLUMBINES"
(Threeotsofilm—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY CLIFFORD H. PANGBURN

T HE Christmas spirit stands out in this attractive picture in a most effective manner. There are many touches of pathos, and towards the end a tragic incident, but the outcome of it all is happiness for two young people, and a promise of a bright future for a little girl who had known nothing but the most abject poverty.

The stage scenes are well handled as well as those showing dressing rooms and other parts of the theatre, such as the switchboard. Even the cheerless appearance of the stage entrance on a winter night is depicted with accuracy and realism.

A poor woman who is barely keeping herself and her little girl alive by working as cleaner in a theatre arranges a pitiful little Christmas tree in a broken flower pot for the benefit of the child. Then the woman's past is shown. She had once been a beautiful dancer, and was the toast of the town. As Columbine in the Christmas pantomime she had reached the height of her popularity. In the middle of the gayety she made a false step and fractured her ankle. Her dancing career was thus ended forever, and left without any occupation she soon found herself reduced to the position of a cleaner in a theatre.

Leaving her little girl in bed the former Columbine goes to the theatre. It is Christmas Eve and a final rehearsal of the Christmas pantomime is being held. Columbine and Harlequin are sweethearts, but during the evening they quarrel. After everyone but them had left the theatre the cleaner brought her little girl to the place, and put her in a chair on the stage. Then she donned the costume of Columbine and tried to dance. Her lameness hampers her, but the little girl is delighted.

THE BURNING OF THE PALACE

A Rutect by the unusual exertion and her own weakness she faints, and is discovered by Harlequin as he is leaving the theatre. He calls for help and Columbine comes in, followed by the stage door-keeper and a policeman. It develops that the unfortunate cleaner is dead. Brought together by the incident Harlequin and Columbine forget their quarrel, and further decide to adopt the motherless little girl, and give her a good home. A simple story, but one which should please any audience.

"MORE THAN QUEEN"
(Pathe—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY CLIFFORD H. PANGBURN

A N idea of the countless magnificent effects which will be seen when color photography is perfected can be obtained from this beautiful picture. The entire four reels are colored by the Pathé hand coloring process, and the work has been done with such consummate skill that it appears to be a natural color film. All things considered, this is one of the most beautiful pictures which has been shown in this country for many months.

Not satisfied with the color effects the producers have crowded the film with remarkable photographic feats, and scenes which are really extraordinary. Examples of the latter are most common in the parts which take place in and about the palace of the Queen of Norovia.

The Queen's drawing room opens by a great bay window on a long straight avenue of Lombardy poplars. Up and down this avenue gaily uniformed officers and stylishly dressed civilians can be seen riding horseback. The realism of the picture is brought out by another scene showing the same avenue some months later. The leaves are nearly all off the trees showing that the view was actually taken some time after the first one. This may be only a detail but it is significant of the thorough excellence of the picture.

The most remarkable scenes are those showing the burning palace. Instead of the one small set as is usual for such a picture, a large number of interior and exterior views of the burning building are shown. The start of the fire and the attempt of the servants to extinguish it is also depicted with the greatest realism. In fact the photographic quality of the film is so high that it is impossible to praise it too strongly. The acting is also a strong feature. The cast is headed by Yvette, Gabrielle Robineau, of the Comedie Francaise and M. Rene Alexander of the same theatre. They are supported by a capable cast.

The story is the weakest point, but it is one which holds the interest, and its only fault is that it is rather conventional. It tells of the widowed queen of Norovia, and her love for a lieutenant in the army.

A duress causes the queen to lose faith in her humble lover, and later the unhappy woman loses her little son. She then abdicates the throne, and learning of the undying faithfulness of the man she had thought untrue finds happiness with him, and starts life anew.

Latter Buys Half Interest in Burland and Eighth Avenue Houses—New Firm Expects to Have Broadway Location Soon

DAVID V. PICKER and H. Whitman Bennett announce that they have joined forces for the purpose of founding an extended circuit of large theatres. The alliance has been brought about through the sale by Mr. Picker to Mr. Bennett of a half interest in the control of the Burland and Eighth Avenue theatres.

Mr. Picker, who has long been widely known in mercantile circles, assumed the lease of the Burland theatre at 985 Prospect avenue, Brooklyn, even before the erection of the house and was indeed responsible for the manufacturing of a theatre of such unusual proportions.

He assumed direct personal management in June of the current year, and since that time the Burland has become the admitted center of Bronx motion picture events. The Burland is an absolutely modern fireproof building and has the largest seating capacity of any playhouse in the Bronx, in addition to an immense "open air" for warm weather use. It was here "Cabiria" was recently presented for a number of consecutive days to record-breaking business for uptown New York.

The Eighth Avenue theatre was formerly known as Miner's Eighth Avenue. As in the case of the Burland, this house is now devoted to the very best motion pictures obtainable. It has recently been remodelled and all obstructions removed from the auditorium.

A positive announcement would be premature at the present moment, Picker and Bennett expect soon to have a theatre on Broadway, where they will establish central offices for the circuit, which is also to include houses in nearby cities. Mr. Picker will remain in personal executive charge of the joint enterprises on behalf of himself and Mr. Bennett.

Mr. Bennett is well known as a newspaper man and press agent, and was for several seasons the general press representative of the Shuberts. He severed his last previous connection with the Mutual Film Corporation to become press representative for the Jesse Lasky Feature Play Company and to enter into his new affiliation with Mr. Picker.

Additions to Edison Studio Now Finished

Four-Story Concrete Structure Replaces Old Frame Building Destroyed by Fire—New Offices and Dressing Rooms in New Edifice

THE alterations and additions to the Edison Studio in the Bronx, New York City, made necessary by the fire of a few months ago, are now completed and in use by the company.

The large stage floor and the massive glass dome which the flames destroyed, have been replaced, while the work of production was carried on without interruption. On the site where the frame building, which consisted of directors offices and projecting room, once stood, has been erected a new four-story concrete structure to be used especially as dressing rooms for the "extras."

On the second floor is the costume department, where every conceivable costume from that of the dancer to king may be had. There is a private entrance for the extras, direct from the street to the dressing rooms, thus eliminating the necessity of their passing through the studio proper and interfering with the regular routine. On the ground floor is the kitchen, presided over by a chef, who supplies luncheon to all desirous of remaining in the studio during the noon hour.

Aside from the dressing rooms in the main building, four large and completely appointed dressing rooms are for use by the regular staff artists. A section of this new structure consists of a suite of ten offices for the sole use of directors and stage managers.

These much-needed changes will greatly improve conditions for all concerned, and will greatly facilitate the making of new pictures.

Blaisdell Joins Mica Film Corporation

Former Treasurer of Centaur Company, Who Knows the Film Industry in Its Various Branches, Will Assume Duties of General Manager

ROLAND BLAISDELL has joined the forces of the Mica Film Corporation, issuing the "Kriterion Program." Mr. Blaisdell, while well known in film circles, is one of the young "old timers" of the business. His experience covers practically every branch of the film industry from the studio to the exchange.

He was for several years assistant cashier in one of the largest banking institutions in the city. Leaving this position, broken down from several years of overwork, he became a salesman for several lines in New York and vicinity, but finally decided that the film business presented the best opportunity in the country. He entered one of the General Film exchanges, but in less than two months he received another offer and accepted. Later he was general-manager of the American Lumiere Film Agency for over a year, and treasurer of the Centaur Film Company, of Bayonne, a year.

His film experience, therefore, covers nearly the entire field from raw stock, laboratory, studies and exchanges to features. In his new position he will be secretary to the general-manager, and will be practical assistant general manager of the company.

AUGUST AND TERRISS JOIN KINETOPHOTE

Edward Mackay, who has been directing for the Kinetophone, will remain with the company and continue as director and star in other features which will be produced by the corporation.

The arrangements between Mr. Terriss and Mr. August and the Kinetophone were made complete this week and each of these sterling screen players has established himself in the offices of the corporation, at 126-132 West 46th street.

Mr. August has arranged to take up at once work on one of two popular novels over the rights of which have been bought by the Kinetophone. Mr. August will work with the author of the one selected as the first feature which he will produce, and will closely follow the original ideas regarding the characters. Each member of the cast will, therefore, be carefully selected as to looks and ability for the particular role which he is to play.

Mr. Terriss will produce and star in the famous Terriss plays made noteworthy not only by his father, the great English actor, but by himself as well.

The rise which Edwin August has had in pictures has been steady from the time when he played leads with Mary Pickford and Blanche Sweet in the old Biograph days. In addition to writing and producing, Mr. August has been the star in many of the screen dramas which have been made by him.

BEVERLY BAYNE ALMOST BIT-TEN BY COPPERHEAD

Beverly Bayne narrowly escaped death when attacked by a deadly copperhead snake while taking a scene for the Essanay production, "Every Inch a King," in the woods near Niles Centre, Ill.
GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"A Maid of War." (Essanay, Mon., Nov. 4.)—Two real Zane Grey melodramas this week, with the stage and the screen having a tie-up. A rousing naval dashpoom while Sweidie is explaining the European situation, a beautiful New England girl, and a zealous American serviceman, is due to the rooster. A chase through the rigging of a vessel, a dashing escape from a fire in the salon flooded by the contents of an opened keg follow.

"Her Bitter Lesson." (Kalem. Two reels.)—Miss Vantine is a widow whose selflessness is so great that she uses every cent of her husband's money for useless things. The husband is putting across a big deal and needs every dollar. He borrows to test his wife's resolve, but tells her that they are practically bankrupt, and moves to a cheap apartment, where he has a bosom friend and facts his lesson, and they go home in happiness. The situation is built out by the husband, who seeks to induce the wife to leave her husband. In the cast are Robert Walker and Helen Lindroth. Emotional but well acted.

"A Woman of the Road." (Biograph. Mon., Nov. 4.)—A story comes to mind, on the familiar situation of a woman who mistakes the noise made by some mice for the entrance of burglars in the house. Madge Kirby, Clarence Barr and Dave Morris are in the cast. On the same reel with "Throw Off the Throne.""

"Throw Off the Throne." (Biograph. Mon., Nov. 4.)—A burlesque involving a mixture of letters and confessions. Original material, and a funny story, with Claire Peerless. In the cast are Clubman, Gertrude Hartman and Marie Newton.

"The Way Back." (Biograph. Wed., Nov. 6.)—The last remaining telegraphs at the last minute that she cannot attend a reception to be given. They get a governor to take her part as they are set on having the reception go off as planned. A wealthy young bachelor falls in love with her, and they marry. Then it is discovered by the other girls who marries her, when he learns Nov. 8. This is due to the efforts of Edward Cech, Gertrude Hartman and Marie Newton.

"His Old Pal's Sacrifice." (Biograph. Fri., Nov. 8.)—A crook saves his pal's life in a fire, and is badly hurt. At the hospital he falls in love with a young nurse, and is saved. All is well for a time until a great temptation to make a name for himself is discovered. Then the man whose life he has saved has his marriage cast in doubt. In the cast are Charles West, William Hartman, Frank Evans and Claire McDowell.

"Little Miss Make-Believe." (Biograph. Sat., Nov. 9.)—A pretty girl has to write telegraphs at the last minute so that she cannot attend a reception to be given. They get a governor to take her part as they are set on having the reception go off as planned. A wealthy young bachelor falls in love with her, and they marry. Then it is discovered by the other girls who marries her, when he learns Nov. 8. This is due to the efforts of Edward Cech, Gertrude Hartman and Marie Newton.

"Fate's Tangled Threads." (Lubin, Mon., Nov. 11.)—The twelfth of the "Beloved Adventure" series. The；Laurel and Hardy experiment. Betty has been deceived into leaving her loving husband under the belief that he no longer cares for her. Her husband has searched for her vainly. He goes on the path of true love, and the girl is given to the other girl's husband, who marries her. The end is a happy one.

"Everything Against Him." (Vitagraph. Mon., Nov. 11.)—A small boy, who has been accused of the arrest of an innocent man for the killing of a friend, fights for his own liberty against a powerful enemy. The result is that the supposed dead man results in the other's release. A story with little action.

"A Tale of Two Worlds." (Biograph. Tues., Nov. 12.)—A tale of the age. The story is told while Sweidie is explaining the European situation. A beautiful New England girl, and a zealous American serviceman, is due to the rooster. A chase through the rigging of a vessel, a dashing escape from a fire in the salon flooded by the contents of an opened keg follow.

"The Choice." (Kalem. Two reels.)—Miss Vantine is a widow whose selflessness is so great that she uses every cent of her husband's money for useless things. The husband is putting across a big deal and needs every dollar. He borrows to test his wife's resolve, but tells her that they are practically bankrupt, and moves to a cheap apartment, where he has a bosom friend and facts his lesson, and they go home in happiness. installation of what appears to be a serial dream comes along and warns her in time so that she [VICTOR, FRI., DEC. 4.]—A well-bred man, with ward J. Pell and Richard Morris play the leads.

"Which Ham Is Schnappsmeiler's"? (Selig, Fri., Dec. 4.)—A nonsensical comedy with many good laughs. (VICTOR). A trucking accident, involving the theft of two separate and distant hams. On the same reel is "Love's Acid Test.""

"Love's Acid Test." (Selig, Fri., Dec. 4.)—On the same reel with "Leather-headed Ham Schnappsmeiler's"? Another really funny comedy. A lovesick drug clerk puts poison in a prescription, but after a wild chase succeeds in warning the unsuspecting patient before any harm has been done.

The Devil and Mrs. Walker. (Kalem, Fri., Dec. 11.)—A good comedy, with a good punch. Here we are, a pecked husband becomes head of the family after his wife has been converted to a devil's costume. When his wife discovers the trick, her friends are Carrie Ward, John Brennan, Ethel Tace, Frederick Hornby, Josephine Rice and Lee Hill.

"The Methods of Margaret." (Vitagraph, Fri., Dec. 18.)—A good comedy. Mr. Magoo is employed by a young married man called his wife some worry, but her husband refuses to dismiss her, saying that he lets his house's household servants alone. When the wife dismisses her maid and hired helper, he tells her that he serves her her husband changes his mind. An entertaining comedy.

"Bunny's Little Brother." (Vitagraph, Two reels, Dec. 18.)—Two reels描写 the woes of the pensive Bunny when forced by his wife to take Dr. Strickland's treatment for red face. As a result, a mixture of two ingredients makes the poor fellow fall into all sorts of complications. The film is filled with excellent railroad scenes, and the thrills are pronounced. Helen Holmes and the regular cast appear.

"Broncho Billy's Judgment." (Essanay, Sat., Dec. 5.)—Broncho Billy and his pal love the same girl, but she marries a good-for-nothing gambler. Later Broncho Billy, now sheriff, is called upon to arrest a murderer in a neighboring town. He finds that this murderer is his old pal, who shot the brutal husband of the girl that he loves. The sheriff gives up his star rather than arrest his old friend.

"Her Sister." (Selig, Sat., Dec. 5.)—A floor-walker in a large department store plays upon a girl'sabez, and after an accident, her husband searches for his wife. Her sister seeks to avenge the wrong, and after several truly amusing adventures, they finally come to the deadly sting of a wasp. Both girls have a good time, and the film is a good treatment of a much used subject. The acting of Stella Razeto and Adda Gleeson is excellent.

"It's a Bear." (Edison, Sat., Dec. 5.)—Tramps find a lost trunk containing an outfit for masquerading as a bear. They visit a summer hotel just in time to give a youth a chance to prove himself a hero. He is very reluctant to do it, but the film's happy ending finally comes out he is worse off than ever. A quiet, but entertaining comedy.

"He Wanted His Pants." (Lubin, Sat., Dec. 5.)—An engaging comedy, in which the accidental identity of a wife and her pocketbook is the basis of this comic situation. A certain amount of good business occurs between the two persons, but the husband finally makes off with the pants and the wife gets back the cash. On the same reel with "Brown's Cook.""

"Brown's Cook." (Lubin, Sat., Dec. 5.)—An engaging comedy, in which the accidental identity of a wife and her pocketbook is the basis of this comic situation. A certain amount of good business occurs between the two persons, but the husband finally makes off with the pants and the wife gets back the cash. On the same reel with "Brown's Cook."

"The Gazette." (Kalem, Fri., Dec. 4.)—A good comedy. Here we are, a pecked husband becomes head of the family after his wife has been converted to a devil's costume. When his wife discovers the trick, her friends are Carrie Ward, John Brennan, Ethel Tace, Frederick Hornby, Josephine Rice and Lee Hill.

"The Mystery of the Sea View Hotel." (Rex. Two reels, Dec. 11.)—An excellent mystery. Here, a axle that is supposed to be dead reverts and played the lead in this picture. He still retains his memory and solves a mystery which is to deep that no one will have the faintest suspicion of the culprit. As a detective story this one is the best.

"The Wow." (Imp. Two reels, Dec. 11.)—On the same reel with "The Barbershop." This comedy is a little better than its name would lead one to believe. The action here is very close to the original, and the film is an excellent one. The screen tests show that the Barbershop turn out a number of third rate comedies.

"The Ghost of Smiling Jim." (101 Bison Two reels, Thurs., Dec. 1.)—This produced great suspense and will therefore pass as an excellent mystery. (Cecil B. DeMille and Cecil M. Caron are the principals. The prospector is kept on the warpath by the sight of a ghost in his camp. But the prospector is not dead; he loses his mind. He wants to fling his old wife back to his daughter. Seeing her restores his memory."

"The Wise Guy." (Joker, Wed., Dec. 2.)—Two gents are rivals in love, one imperson- sted by the manufacturer, one by a bank robber. His actions are extremely funny. The husband of the girl shows up in the end.

"The Young Philanthropist." (Imp. Universal Boy. No. 11. Thurs., Dec. 3.)—A series of in- structions is being given in the manner in which milk is pasteurized. Matty appears as the audience and the people who use milk are addressed. It is almost a lesson in the art of pasteurizing.

"The Heart of a Magdalen." (Powles. Two reels, Fri., Dec. 12.)—A story of the life of De Grasse's company, headed by Edna Maye, and directed by John King. Through posing as a modiste for an artist the aspect of the film is completely changed. She learns to love him, and he prefers her former love. This latter statement may be questioned, as the picture leaves the artist com- forting his model.

"Father Buys a Bale of Cotton." (Victor, Fri., Dec. 12.)—A real laugh maker, produced by C. B. DeMille, and directed by Vornado in the leading feminine role. Elsie's sweetheart changes her last name, a fact she doesn't know; but the consequence is the old gentleman is discovered by the cunning cotton agent, good and philanthropic ways, nominates him for mayor. The man who plays the part of the big company's real comedian; he has many chances to put in humorous touches and make use of all of them.

"Sammy's Vacation." (Crystal, Tues., Nov. 24.)—What little comedy that appears in this review. Sammy, the是一部 excellent comedy. Some of the actions of the police force and their effeminacy appearing captain might pass under the sculpture of a puzzled man who is be- lieved to be looking for the average person seeking a police officer. The plot is so complicated that it counts for little.

"A Lonely Salvation." (Victor, Mon., Dec. 30.)—Mary Fuller, in the role of a thief, is lured to his death by the crook. (VICTOR). She is sent to work in the West, and after withstanding many temptations and becoming en- dowed with a sense of responsibility, she interest, and finds that he has died. A pathetic offering, far off the ordinary, and well acted.

"The Mystery of the Sea View Hotel." (Rex. Two reels, Dec. 11.)—An excellent mystery. Here, a axe that is supposed to be dead reverts and played the lead in this picture. He still retains his memory and solves a mystery which is to deep that no one will have the faintest suspicion of the culprit. As a detective story this one is the best.
A Messenger of Gladness. (Thanhouser. Split reel. Sun., Nov. 25.)—This picture is bubbling over with the good spirits of Thanksgiving. Here is the sequel, more than a sequel, to "Samaritans." A number of instances when she reconciles a husband and wife, a man and a woman, and a boy and a girl, etc. etc. etc. It is a picture that will make everyone have a laugh on the same reel with "Nature's Celebrities."

"Mrs. Van Ruyter's Stratagem." (Thanhouser. Two reels, Tues., Nov. 24.)—Although we have seen the same idea that is the basis of this drama picturized before, it is so different from the general routine of dramas that it has an air of originality. The rich lady is lured into an engagement from which her relatives shall receive her fortune. At the suggestion of a villainous relative she invites all to stay at her home, and then leaves it to make her fortune. The women are unimposing, haughtily or artificially friendly, except one. A squash does not prevent the capacity of maid. She wins the fortune and also the young lawyer's heart. Carey L. Hastings is the director and he, from the title to Harry Bennett the lawyer.

"As a Man Thinketh." (Beauty. Tues., Nov. 24.)—This lost-drilled and heaped-up work goes on a fortune builder, who says the man of iron will intend to be a leader of men. He takes the words so seriously by means of a man of him. In one day he makes a big sale, gets his interest doubled, and becomes boss of his home.

"The Archaeologist." (American. Wed. Nov. 25.)—A comedy in which two girls bury some antiques, and find an ancient orator with an erudite and a young sciolistic boy. The play is delightful, and one of the girls. Many pretty scenes. The suggestion that her sober but intense attitude of the student is entirely overdone.

"They Never Knew." (Reliance. Wed., Nov. 25.)—Things happen and cease happening with remarkable celerity in a comedy that will please everyone. Arthur Mackley directed the picture and has managed to get an unusual amount of action into the one reel, more than what often appears in two. The country girl is a boy, and he is mistaken for a man because he is mistaken with another that the girl is in love with. The other is also supposed to be a man, but the parents to the effect that she is going to marry the man. When she tries to get her revenge over these city men tempting her with wine in a cafe, etc., she beats him up and then marries the girl. R. A. Walsh is the hero and Victor Perry the heavy.

"A Burn Mistake." (Princess. Fri., Nov. 30.)—The old idea of mistaken identity, a great rumpus in this reel, and a few humorous moments appear. The heroine, a poor girl, who on the inside of some queer skin, is perhaps the funniest point of the picture. It is a mistake for an actor to trap, and receives the dinner of the other. Quite a bit of rough work appears toward the end of the reel, which is devoid of humor.

"A Romance of Old Holland." (Broncho. Two reels, Wed. Dec. 2.)—An excellently constructed story of a girl that is surf-making throughout. The Dutch atmosphere has been very well obtained. The acting and the script are justly deserved. the romance of a girl many years his junior, and the tricks that his ships do away with her lover while on a voyage. The young man is deserted and left in a small boat, but he reaches a derelict, steers it to port, and arrives just in time to prevent the old man from marrying her.

"The Vigil." (Domino. Two reels. Thurs., Dec. 3.)—A story laid in Japan, acted by the Japanese,1 cast headed by Tsuru Aoki and Sayesso Hayasaka. The first reel ends when a man's love is disappointed, a disappointed suitor, is extremely well constructed. Some splendid light effects have been obtained and the photography is excellent in all the scenes.

"Mother of the Shadows." (Kay-Bee. Two reels, Fri., Dec. 4.)—This is one of the best offerings that the Kay-Bee forces have offered for some time. A local story, locally developed and contains such an appealing theme, that a two-reel subject is of the best class. Tsuru Aoki has the pathetic part of an Indian girl, treacherously tricked by her more famous and disliked suitor, and is extremely well constructed. Some delightful light effects have been obtained and the photography is excellent in all the scenes.

"Slippery Sadie, the Diamond Biter." (Starlight. One reel) — A burlesque on an old timeIndian legend. The denizens of one of their diamonds using her teeth to good advantage. The wrong girl is accused and sent up for execution. She is, however, rescued, and the real biter is shown. The most remarkable feature is the capture, rescue and consent to the marriage.

"Rural Romoza." (Albuquerque. Split reel.)—On a similar reel with "All at Sea." Concerning the adventures of three of the gentlest mentioned in the title at odds about a country girl. The busiest one wins her after a number of laughs.

"Father—A Member of the Purity League." (Premier) — Mother rules both her husband and her children, and plans to make the former stay home while she holds a public meeting. She is captured, and left in some amusing. The comedy is rather low, but funny, at times.

"Camille as She Never Was." (Superba.)—This is a very funny and for some time the most revealing of the camerawoman Forrest in the leading role; not the name part, but little over twenty years old, and quite a dull, but some of it may strike people as funny.

"A Mender of Ways." (Premier.)—A pleasing drama in which a minister causes the reformer to marry the preacher's former sweetheart. Walter Rodgers is the husband.

"Shot in the Fracas." (Luna.)—Two staidwater tramps are to give their witnesses of the man who has just been appointed to the presidency. The young men have to go to Washington to ask the president to let them have some employment. They arm themselves at the station, and when the train is cut off, they achieve a triumph.

"Stockings." (Starlight.)—A bad carrier dreams of becoming a renowned detective, but he makes a mistake every way he turns in looking for a girl thief with striped stockings. He arrests several, and in attempting to arrest several more is severely beaten up.

"The Love of Princess Yolande." (Warner's. Two reels.)—A pretty romance with Elsie Albert as the princess who must marry the prince of a neighboring kingdom. For weeks before she was wedded she supposed as a sheperdess, and meets the prince who is assuming the title of a man for the sake of his own rights, but both desire to please their respective kingdoms more than themselves. When they discover that they must marry each other after all, their joy is boundless.

ECLECTIC—PATHE

"When Fate Was Kind." (Pathe. Three reels.)—A melodrama in which a false friend tries to knock the happiness of a married couple by causing the husband to appear to be too much interested in another girl. The girl in question has suffered all the meanest tricks, which she wished kept secret, and thus comes under the conversion of a truthful old man who is the hero of the plot. The husband discloses the plot, and there is general happiness.

"Max and Min—Fair M. D." (Pathe. One reel.)—An entertaining comedy featuring the clever Max Linder, who is now at the front with French armies. After much trouble he wins the heart of a woman doctor as his bride, but then he has troubles with his own hands for his own hands. Finally he eases all the patients and feels happy.

WORLD FILM CORPORATION

"The Dancer and the King." (Five reels. Monday, Nov. 30.)—Featuring Cecil Spooner, who is the most handsome in the King. Arthur Evers (the Minister, Howard Lang, is Giles and Margaret Cartwright). The supporting cast is quite poor, and some of the principals do not perform as well as might be expected. The dancer, who has been made a duress by the king, puts the evil powers in the kingdom who attempt to destroy him to rout. The photography of the offering is not up to the highest of Pathe, but some good chances for dramatic moments during the story, but for some reason they have been spoiled by the queer actions of some of the actors. As a whole the picture will amuse.

HEPWORTH-AMERICAN

"Through the Valley of Shadows." (Turner films. Four reels.)—Although the idea embodied in this picture is rather old it is rendered exceptionally entertaining by the concise and finished interpretation given by the members of the cast. The story is one of the most amusing in the same, some excellent situations enliven the story, and not one of them has been at all neglected. Delighted and pleasant touches give the film a distinct air of realism. At the opening of the story we see Alice, the doctor's wife, stop in and plays the leading part in a motion picture. Here she meets the man who came between her and her husband. She slams him while going over a scene of the play, but after a while, Frances Turner appears as Alice and Mr. Clifford as her husband. Her presence is not as amusing as Malting, the heavy. The rest of the cast are entirely capable and well suited to their parts.

"Universal Animated Weekly, No. 141." (Wed., Nov. 18.)—Of the twelve subjects that comprise this reel six of them have reference to the European war, which still affords interesting material for the pictures. The other items of note are: President Wilson订阅ing the publications, the statue erected to commemorate General Philip Kearny, at Altoona, Pa.; Governor Colquitt of Texas, presenting a silver service set to the U. S. S. Texas, and the making of Chicago Stock Yards. The reel ends with more of Mr. Mayer's famous cartoons.

ONE cannot but assume that "The Rose in the Ring," was exceptionally difficult to transform into a picture. This will be all the more apparent after one has seen "The Circus Man," which is based on the celebrated novel by George Barr McCutcheon. The hard obstacles which loomed up in the path of the director, Oscar Apfel, were, no doubt, many and trying to surpass, in order to give the picture the finished completeness that it possesses.

In the first place there are three distinct stories in the picture, which are not very strongly connected. This fact, of course, necessitated the introduction of a greater number of characters than one usually sees in a five reel picture.

The fact that they are only slightly confused and then only in a few scenes, is a strong point in favor of the producers. The stories, even though they bear only slight relation to one another until the end, are cleverly constructed and entertaining. The first few scenes are devoted to a youth, David Jennison, who is accused of killing his father, when in reality a scheming relation is the offender. He escapes from the law and joins a traveling circus, where he falls in love with the daughter of the circus man. After his name has been cleared by the maneuverings of a newly found friend, Dick Cronk, he leaves the circus.

The picture then drops David for a time, and shows how Braddock, the circus man, quarrels and leaves his wife, because he thinks her false. Later after Colonel Grand, the other man, has been killed by Dick's crippled brother, husband and wife are reunited, and David and Christine are happily married.

Theodore Roberts has the stellar role of Braddock, the circus man. He has a reputation to uphold as a character man and most certainly accomplishes it. In the first part of the picture he is a disgraceful inebriate, and in the latter part, is fully repentant, begging the forgiveness of his wife, which he receives. Mr. Roberts is such a good actor that one wouldn't mind seeing a little bit more of him, as he is scarcely in evidence until the final scenes.

Jode Mullally has the juvenile role of David Jennison, and Florence Dagmar is Christine, the girl he marries. The rest of the cast consisting of Fred Montague, Howard Hilsman, Raymond Halton, MAble Van Buren, Billy Elmer, Herbert Whitehead and James Neal are capable and thoroughly versed in their respective parts.

As a great part of the action takes place beneath the circus tent, the realism of these scenes is essentially important for the success of the picture. Life in the saw dust ring has been admirably portrayed, scenes in the dressing rooms, under the tent itself, with the attending audience, and the various acts taking place in the ring are as realistic as one could ask for. The photography in all the scenes is very good.

Except for the fact that the plots wander apart from one another in a few places the film is an excellent one. And even though this fact will cause slight confusion, the entire production is so much better than many multiple reel subjects, that it is better than the ordinary picture.

THIRTY YEARS OF A GAMBLER'S LIFE
(Pathé—Three Reels)

ALTHOUGH it must be admitted that this picture is a little depressing, it holds the interest, and at the same time presents a powerful picture of the misery which is sure to follow if a passion for gambling is indulged in.

Made in France, the film shows that care and elaborateness of settings which characterize most of the productions of Continental studios. The cast is composed of French actors who have learned that gesticulatory acting is not appreciated by American audiences and have reduced it to a welcome minimum.

A young man of some wealth is engaged to a beautiful girl. His father gives him $20,000 with which to buy her a wedding present. A false friend induces him to gamble with the money and it is all lost in a crooked gambling house. This trouble almost leads to the young man's arrest, as he gives notes for a similar necklace at a "fence."

The affair is patched up and the wedding takes place, but the husband has become fascinated by gambling and dissipates his wife's fortune as well as his own. After thirty years he is practically on the streets and his wife lives in a cellar. Finally he plans a murder, only to discover in time that his intended victim is his own son, who had been sent away to an uncle when a little boy. This sobers him so that he never gambles again, but his life is nevertheless ruined.

A CHRISTMAS CAROL
(Cosmofotofilm—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY CLIFFORD H. PANGBURN

MANY productions of Charles Dickens' most popular story have been made for the screen, but there has never been one which surpassed this. In the matter of photography alone it is a model. As everyone knows, a large part of the action concerns ghosts. This calls for an extended amount of trick photography, but it is so well done in this film that the spectator forgets that there is any trick about. He seems to be seeing real ghosts, if the expression be allowed.

The cast is a good one, and the settings are well handled. The general result is a film which the great author himself could view without a shock were he alive today.

ALBUQUERQUE BUILDS NEW STUDIO

Los Angeles, Nov. 23.

Work on the erection of studio buildings on a 3,000-acre tract of ground in the San Fernando valley, 21 miles north of Los Angeles, leased by the Albuquerque Film Company, was commenced the first of this week. Negotiations for the use of the land have been completed by Gilbert P. Hamilton, president of the company, and he hopes to be working his companies at the new studio within 30 days.

This tract of ground enables the company to make every kind of a valley or mountain scene, and is so situated that the players may be transported either to a city location or one by the ocean in 30 minutes by the automobiles of the company.

The first picture to be made at the new studio, no doubt, will be one of three reels, the company's contract calling for one picture a month for the United Motion Picture Producers' program.

LOUISVILLE LOCAL COLOR IN CALIFORNIA

The cabbage patch of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" is not a cabbage patch at all, but a little alley in Louisville, Ky. When the California Motion Picture Corporation decided to present Mrs. Rice's story in photoplay form it wished to show the cabbage patch. So camera men were sent to Louisville, where many photographs of the little alley were made.

These were sent to the San Rafael studios of the producing organization, and there in the center of its eight acre tract the little cabbage patch was rebuilt.

So new in method—so fresh in manner—these one reel comedies will mark an era in the progress of the motion picture art. No funnier or more skillfully executed pictures have ever enriched the service of the whose incomparable program has always been the exhibitors’ standard of quality. MinA Films will add just that tingle of youth and spirit necessary now and then to rouse up and stimulate the interest of the motion picture fan. Arrange for the first MinA Film Release

December 17th

Book it through your nearest “G. F.” branch office or other licensed exchanges, and remember that a failure to serve you with MinA Films means a loss of business to you. High art posters, ones and threes and an extraordinary publicity campaign go with every release.

The first MinA Film will be The Thrilling Adventures of Count Verace, one reel.

This comedy features Mlle. Valkyrien, the famous Danish film star, and was directed by Milton H. Fahrney.

"LOVEY MARY"

MRS. WIGGS

ANYONE WHO HAS READ THOSE TWO SPLENDID BOOKS BY ALICE HEGAN RICE CAN WELL IMAGINE THE POSSIBILITIES THEY CONTAIN FOR A MOTION PICTURE. THESE POSSIBILITIES HAVE BEEN TAKEN FULL ADVANTAGE OF WITH FINE RESULTS.

Be sure to mention "MOTION PICTURE NEWS" when writing to advertisers.
of the Cabbage Patch

FOUNDED UPON ANNE CRAWFORD FLEXNER’S DRAMATIZATION OF ALICE HEGAN RICE’S CELEBRATED NOVELS—“LOVEY MARY” AND “MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH.” A SUPERB CAST, INCLUDING BLANCHE CHAPMAN—ANDREW ROBSON AND HOUSE PETERS AND MANY OTHERS.

RELEASED NOV. 30 ON THE ALCO PROGRAM

THE ALCO PROGRAM IS ONE OF THE BEST PROPOSITIONS FOR THE EXHIBITOR THAT COULD BE.

IT IS A CAREFULLY THOUGHT OUT SYSTEM OF FILM SERVICE.

FROM MANUFACTURER TO EXHIBITOR IS PART OF THE IDEA.

DRAWING POWER IS THE MAIN IDEA. THE BEST KNOWN ACTORS PLAYING IN THE BEST KNOWN PLAYS DRAW THE CROWDS FOR THOSE WHO HAVE ALCO SERVICE.

Answering the insistent call of universal demand, a wonderful character will not be suffered to die. Tigris the Terrible, than whom in film history there is none greater, returns, the Super-Criminal, in a series of exploits extraordinary. To the many millions who witnessed his deeds of daring in the first "Tigris" no motion picture announcement could hold more promise. As "Cabiria" surpassed all other spectacles so will this transcend in power and plot and superb staging all serials filmed before.

"Maciste," the modern Apollo, whose colossal proportions make ordinary folk seem as pygmies, rightly earned in "Cabiria" the title of "the most talked about character in fictional filmdom." Round this character has been written tales of adventure, deeds accomplishable only by one whose daring dauntlessness is backed by strength immeasurable. Into imagination's depths one can go in finding tasks befitting this 20th Century Hercules. Each episode complete in itself—an entertainment entire.

GIVING THANKS!

(No. 58. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talks by Carl Laemmle, President.)

The man who waits for Thanksgiving before he expresses his gratitude for good bestowed upon him will never have much to be grateful for. I have never hesitated to express gratitude and appreciation. That's why I have so much to be thankful for this Thanksgiving and the other 364 days of the year.

Just now I wish to publish the Universal company's appreciation of its wonderful organization of men and women who have made it successful.

If it were not for what the French call the "esprit du corps" of the Universal staff I don't know where the Universal would be now. People who come to the Universal from other film companies are thunderstruck at the co-operation shown by each Universal employee for all of the others. They say they never saw the "happy family" theory put into practice so perfectly as it is done in the Universal family.

Every big and little department of the Universal is headed by picked men or women; experts in their lines; people who represent the survival of the fittest; men and women we have chosen by the process of elimination. For all of this the Universal is deeply grateful.

Away out in California we have a tremendous organization that is spending vast fortunes in cash every day of every week of the year. It is a vital cog in the huge Universal machinery. But it is so well oiled that it runs smoothly, without friction, without trouble of any kind. We in New York seldom have to give it thought. So perfect is the co-operation of every member of our western staff that the great Universal City is being constructed and many pictures are being produced every week without a hitch. For all of this the Universal is deeply grateful.

Away over in England is the headquarters of our whole European business. It is a tremendous organization in itself, with tremendous responsibilities. But in spite of the devastation of war it is making splendid headway. Not on the continent, of course, but in every spot that is not actually occupied by warring troops. For all of this the Universal is deeply grateful.

Our New York and New Jersey studios and factories are nearer the home office, but we rely upon the men who manage them as we do upon our western and European men. They deliver the goods, and that is all we ask. For all of this the Universal is deeply grateful.

Away down in South America and away over in India, China, Japan and Africa the Universal organization is being built up by our own men and reaching spots never before thought of as a market for American-made moving pictures. We get brief cable reports, but outside of that we do not have to detract our attention from the greater plans which we are always making. For all of this the Universal is deeply grateful.

All over the United States and Canada there are Universal exchanges, some of which we own and some of which are privately owned. All are on exactly the same basis, and all are co-operating with a spirit that makes the heart beat a little faster with appreciation. We rely upon the men in charge and they never fail us. For all of this the Universal is deeply grateful.

All over the world we are sending men on various missions; some to take pictures; some to sell them; some to build up weak markets; some to do any other little or big thing which they are commissioned to do. Some of them we do not see for months at a time, but we know they are using their brains all the time, for they are producing results. For all of this the Universal is deeply grateful.

Here in the home office the same spirit of "all for one and one for all" pervades the atmosphere. There is no petty jealousy among departments. Each is glad to suggest schemes to another or to accept suggestions from others. The Universal is proud of every person on its staff, and we have a sneaking suspicion that they are proud of the Universal.

It was not like this in the olden days. We've not always had such a fine machine. It has creaked and groaned in the distant past. It has sputtered and spluttered, screamed and cried in business agony. But the dead past has buried its past. We are living in the NOW.

And, finally, as a climax to this Thanksgiving straight-from-the-shoulder talk, I want to say that the Universal is doubly, trebly grateful to those exhibitors who have stuck to the Universal through storm and stress; who used our program in the long ago when they even thought it was poor; but who had faith in us, and who have given us the opportunity to demonstrate the truth of the fact that their faith was not misplaced.

Marc MacDermott in a Double Role—as a Real and as a Counterfeit Bridegroom

How a bride, waiting at the altar for an over-due bridegroom, can actually marry a counterfeit presentation of the man she expected to wed is a wonder. Marc MacDermott takes the part of the jilted bridegroom as well as of the real benedict. The fun doesn't end there, for, as they start on their honeymoon, a detective overshadows them on the Pullman. Gertrude McCoy plays the part of the bride.

It is a dramatic adaptation of the novel entitled "The Best Man" by Grace L. H. Lutz, and is in two parts. The plot is well wrought out, the acting of a high order, while the merriment at the embarrassing situations created, make for this a lively reel that is bound to delight a host of pleasure seekers.

Marc MacDermott is also featured as Lord Stranleigh in "The Premature Compromise" (an adaptation of the famous "Young Lord Stranleigh" stories, by Robert Barr), to be released Friday, Dec. 31st, in the Edison list of reels for December.

OTHER LOVE AFFAIRS IN THE DECEMBER EDISON LIST OF REELS:
"OLIVE'S OPPORTUNITIES," a series (one of which is to be released every Tuesday in December), in which Mabel Trunnelle takes the part of "Olive." WHO GOES THERE? in which Walter E. Perkins again plays the part of "Toppy," as in the original play. (To be released Dec. 4th.) A DOUBLE ELOPEMENT (To be released Dec. 5th). IT'S A BEAR—a would-be heroic swain tries to win a bride pretending to have killed a bear. (To be released Dec. 5th.) THE FLIRT, who deserts his latest attraction while she is in deep water about to learn how to swim. (To be released Dec. 14th.) ON CHRISTMAS EVE. A young couple take back as "Santa Claus" the grandfather they have set adrift from their home. (To be released Dec. 16th.) COLONEL OF THE RED HUSSARS, a magnificent reel in three parts. (To be released Dec. 18th.) MR. DALY'S WEDDING DAY. A swindler and counterfeiter tries to bribe cabbie and police. (To be released Dec. 28th.) THE COURTSHIP OF THE COOKS, who compete for the widow that discovers her husband is alive and is the policeman who appears just in time. (To be released Dec. 30th.)
TIGHTEN ENFORCEMENT OF FILM STORAGE LAW

New York exchanges, manufacturers, film brokers and manufacturers' agents with offices in the vicinity of Times Square are facing a serious situation following the revival of an ordinance passed January 1, 1912, at the instigation of the Bureau of Combustibles, prohibiting the storing or keeping of more than ten reels of film in a building within fifty feet of a theatre.

Summonses have been issued to a number of film concerns, demanding their appearance in General Sessions on Friday of this week, to show cause for their violation of this ordinance.
This followed unexpected visits by fire and building inspectors to the offices of the companies. Where their visits were anticipated safes were found locked and bolted, and in two instances the only men who had the combinations were out of the city.

Strict enforcement of the ordinance has been rumored for several weeks, but, it is said, the matter was brought to a focus last Thursday, immediately after a fire in the offices of the American and European Film Company, in a building at 143 West Forty-fifth street. The fire started in the testing room of the company, and did damage estimated at $50,000.
Other buildings in the vicinity of Broadway and Forty-second street where film companies are located were immediately inspected, and violations of the ordinance were found in perhaps twenty places.

Amendments were made to the ordinance at the request of several of the larger exchanges. They were permitted to construct fireproof storage vaults, enclosed with a double brick wall, and a reasonable distance from elevators, stairways and air shafts.

Charles Abrams and Joseph Miles, of Films Lloyd, 220 West
Forty-second street, applied to the Bureau several weeks ago for permission to construct a vault in their offices. Inspectors advised that the floor space was inadequate. Anticipating the present agitation and proposed action against film concerns, they leased a loft in a fireproof building at 345 West Fortieth street. Two big fireproof vaults will be constructed there from plans approved by the Bureau.

A Well-Ordered Photoplay Theatre

FOR the theatre of today the best decoration and the most modern equipment go hand in hand. The time has passed when either can be neglected with any regard for receipts, from a box-office standpoint. The evolution from narrow, painted halls and converted stores to the magnificent structures especially built for the projection of motion pictures has been gradual but none the less sure.

The motion picture industry today can boast of as fine a collection of beautiful specially constructed buildings, designed for the greatest amount of comfort to the patrons, large seating capacity, and superior to the average home of the legitimate drama.

Watch Maximum Seating Capacity

As a model of what an up-to-the-minute motion picture theatre should be the Southern theatre, of Wheeling, W. Va., is a good example. Conforming throughout with the rigid city building code specifications; built of concrete, stone, and brick with steel frame; every modern improvement that would go to give better projection or more comfort to the patrons, has been installed.

The importance of proper seating is what every prospective builder of a theatre should have before him, whether contemplating erecting a new building or altering an old one.

Since the seating capacity affects the box office receipts, the tendency to put in the maximum seating capacity sometimes tends to detract from the comfort of the patrons.

The law, in some states, governs the width of an aisle, but where there is no law or ordinance and the point is left to the builder, an aisle not less than three feet six inches should be provided. Of course in a wide house two or three aisles and sometimes four are used. The plans given herewith of the Southern theatre show how this matter was treated. In no case has the width of any of the aisles been sacrificed to give space for more seats, and the width at the narrowest point exceeds five feet. Here again is the axiom "safety first" given preeminence, and a patron does not have to pass more than six seats to reach an aisle.

The elevations and plans show all the conveniences, such as retiring rooms for the audience, dressing rooms, stage and other parts of the auditorium, also the seating arrangements. The building has a ground plan of 51 x 100 feet and a seating capacity of 660. The balcony seats 160, and there is ample standing room, allowing for some 200 extra standees.

This theatre is one of the finest of its size in the South, and the plans will go further to show the modern innovations and advantages as embodied in this theatre than any mere written article.

The arrangement of the lobby, the comfort rooms, the exits, the seats, the boxes, in fact everything that would enhance the convenience and comfort of its patrons, show such careful study and thought on the part of the designer as to leave nothing to be desired from the audience's standpoint.
In considering the comfort of the patrons the builders had in mind, as mentioned previously, that each seat should give the maximum degree of comfort with the minimum of waste space. Particular stress was laid on “better to forego a few seats than make the aisles too narrow.”

But one thing that the plans don’t show is the interior decorations. That intangible something which painters call “atmosphere” in a picture is nowhere in greater demand than in theatre decoration. Especially so for the interiors. Its influence is felt to a greater extent than is generally imagined. It gives the theatre tone, and this subconscious force acting on the feelings of the audience decides as to whether or not steady patronage shall follow the initial visit to the theatre.

It is not putting it too strong when the statement is made that “the average theatregoer has no knowledge of period styles and perhaps cares less; he does not know the difference between a Louis XV wall decoration and an Italian Renaissance panel; but as no man is absolutely dead to a sense of color and form, his latent artistic sensibilities are capable of being aroused by the subtle appeal of a harmonious blend of tints and graceful lines.”

The interior decorations of the Southern theatre leave nothing to be desired, and further attention is called to this by the system of indirect lighting used to illuminate the interior.

The equipment of the theatre includes two Motographs, a Fort Wayne compensarc, Gold Radium screen, 19 x 21 feet, and one General Electric spotlight. The seats throughout are from A. H. Andrews Co., and George II. Dieringer, with whom theatre buildings are a specialty, was the architect.
Problems That Puzzle Projection People

T. U., Good Ground, L. I.—Will you please tell me the ruling in New York for the size wire for the arc lamps in motion picture machine booths? Can motor machines be used? What kind of fuses are used?

Answer.—(a) The City of New York publishes, for free use to contractors, a code of rulings for electrical installations of all kinds. In this handbook it gives under "Arc lamps used as a part of a moving picture machine"—wiring to same (lamp) must not be of a less capacity than No. 6 B. & S. gauge.

(b) Dynamo.

dynamo to other.

Electrical supply houses sell a class of wire called moving picture machine cable. A catalogue of a leading supply house describes it as "a cable designed for use in connection with moving picture machines where the conductor is likely to be subjected to a high temperature. The strands are of fine wires, so as to procure an extra flexible cable, and the insulation is made up of one or two braids of cotton, impregnated with a slow-burning paint, and finished on the outside with a braid of asbestos."

Such a wire is generally used for the wiring to the lamp and rheostat and is approved for this use. This code also states, under "Wires" that stranded wire (except in flexible cords) must be soldered before being fastened under clamps, or binding screws, and whether stranded or solid, when they have a conductivity greater than that of No. 8 B. & S. gauge, they must be soldered into lugs for all terminal connections, except where an approved solderless terminal connector is used.

(b) Yes, under certain conditions. It must be of an improved type. If driven by a motor, must be of a type expressly designed and approved for such operation, and when so approved, motor driven machines, when in charge of a skilled operator, may be authorized under special permission in writing, given in advance.

(c) To answer this all important question the code is also here-with quoted: "The leads to the lamp and its rheostat or equivalent device, must be protected by a plug cutout or open link fuses, the latter enclosed in an approved cabinet with self-closing door. Cartridge fuses will not be permitted." The tendency of operators to "tamper" with the fuses, especially of the cartridge type, has compelled a ruling that the condition of the protecting device cannot at all times be easily seen.

E. M. F., Ampere, N. Y.—Does a small dynamo act in the same manner as a large one? Could a series wound dynamo be used for an arc lamp?

Answer.—(a) It makes no difference as to the size of a dynamo machine in its effect to generate electrical pressure, or voltage. In the smaller sized machines there will likely be difficulty experienced, at times, to get it to "pick up its voltage."

These small machines are not as efficient in transforming power and generally run at very high speed. This means more trouble to prevent vibration, and brush contact with the commutator will give trouble. (b) If you want to use a series wound machine, for the arc lamp only of a picture machine, you would be in trouble most of the time.

The burning of the carbons making a greater distance between the two carbons would create more resistance in the circuit. This would then lower the voltage of the dynamo just when it should generate more, to overcome this greater resistance. The arc across the carbons would perhaps then go out. Then it would be necessary to "build up the voltage" by holding the carbons together. Do not use this type of dynamo unless you want to have some fun for awhile. It would soon become tiresome. It is also not practical.

F. P. S., Chicago.—(a) Does a dynamo, when generating electricity, gather it from the air? (b) Does the location of a dynamo, in regard to the supply of air, influence the generating powers of the dynamo, and consequently the illuminating power of the lights? (c) Will a dynamo, when placed in a vacuum, generate electricity?

Answer.—Sounds as if you must have worked cranking a Wimshurst machine in a doctor's office before taking up cranking a picture machine. It is presumed that you refer to frictional or static electricity, which is seen in the air in the form of lightning, or which may be also seen from belting in cold weather.

Dynamic electricity is not produced by friction, but by induction. What is meant by induction is that a wire moved past a "pole" of a magnet so as to cut the magnetism emanating from it, the wire will be found to have set up in it electrical pressure.

The electrical pressure, or electricity, is not gathered from the air. (b) Yes, the cooler the dynamo is kept the greater the output that can be taken from it. Dry cool air should have free access to a dynamo. As the dynamo heats the voltage drops from the greater resistance offered in the windings and the field regulating rheostat will have to be adjusted to raise the voltage to that of the lamps, to make them burn brightly. (c) If a dynamo was run in a vacuum it certainly would generate.

However, its output could not be carried to the limit that it could be if air had free admission to it.

Don't Use Too Much Light for the Picture

LIGHT is necessary to project a picture. It is also true that too much light can be used for this work. An excess of light produces harsh and very disagreeable pictures.

It is the same in the projection field as it is in other fields of life; there is the person calling for more and more, as also in an audience calling Louder—LOUDER—LOUDER! This person seems never satisfied.

There should be sufficient light to project a picture plainly. It does not demand, however, that a great quantity of light be used, as seems to be standard among many exhibitors.

Beyond that amount of light to give a plain picture, the operator's duty is to call the attention of his employer, be he of the more and more type, to the increased cost for electric power.

The arguments for not using too much light are many. First, the operator may mention one which ought to interest his employer's purse. "Money talks!" Why not let it talk on the subject of too bright a light in a picture? It is interesting.

The "High Cost" of Light

More light beyond the point of projecting a good picture means more current consumed at the arc lamp. The bill rendered for power used is also larger. Let's see how it figures out.

At the rate of ten cents per kilowatt hour the cutting down of the current used in the arc lamp only a few amperes will amount to a goodly sum in a year's time. For an example:

For ease in the computation, we will take the figure 25. To obtain the power in kilowatt hours we multiply the voltage by the amperes and this product in turn by the number of hours. Giving both matinee and evening shows, about six hours daily, the arc lamp is kept burning.

Then 110 x 25 x 6 = 16,500 watt hours, or, 16.5 kilowatt hours each day. Running seven days a week makes this 165 x 7 = 115.5 kilowatt hours per week. For a month it is then four times this, or, 460 kilowatt hours.

Now, at a ten-cent basis for power, your monthly bill for the power consumed, in the arc lamp only, is $46.

What It Amounts to in a Year

Your employer insists that he must have a bright light in his pictures. So you adjust the rheostat to give, say, five more amperes, making it 30 amperes at the arc.

Recalculate, as before, but change the figure 25 to 30 amperes.

What have you now for the month's bill? It should be $54.4 kilo-wait hours at ten cents, or $55.44.

The difference is so near to an even ten, we may say, that to please his vanity for a bright light, the exhibitor is throwing away $10 each month. In a year's time it is $120. It is not a large sum.

It is worth considering, however, where a saving can be made.
There are many other things to be gained along with it. If the exhibitor is not interested in this saving for himself, why not then increase the wages for your operating help to this amount per year and obtain the higher grade of operators this increased wages will attract?

By not using more light than is necessary to project a good picture there are many more things to be gained in addition to the less cost for power. Among the more important things, a more pleasing and satisfactory picture is shown the patrons of the theatre; less heat is radiated in the operator's booth; less carbon consumption in the lamp; the fewer condensing lenses cracked; films will last for a longer service, and there is less danger from film fires.

There is much that may be said about these things, and they will be taken up later. The exhibitor and the operator cannot give too much thought along these lines of economics. The audience, the exhibitor and the operator are all three materially benefited therefrom.

The Location for a Screen

The location of a screen on the stage in motion picture theatres seems to have not concerned the exhibitor to the extent that it should. It is important, however.

There are many exhibitors who set up a screen directly in front and in the place where the stage curtain is usually hung. This location is decidedly wrong. The only thing that can be said in favor of such a plan is that it saves the expense for scenery or boarders to obscure the view from the stage walls.

Also, it may be said, the stage back of the screen, can then be utilized for storage room or for other purposes. Beyond this, everything stands against this location for a screen.

Why does the audience fill the middle and rear seats first and leave the front seats for the late arrivals? Simply because the screen is too near these front seats. The vision is impaired and it is much more difficult for the eyes, at this short range, to see all the action taking place in the picture.

Especially so, if the front seat be also a side one. The turning of the eyes alone cannot cover the vision from one side of the picture to the other. The head must also be turned to follow a figure crossing to the other side of the picture.

When a screen is hung further back on the stage, not only does it allow persons in the front seats to see the full picture clearly and without any physical exertion from the turning of the head, but a decidedly improved appearance of the whole front and stage of the theatre is thus obtained.

The space gained from putting the screen further back on the stage permits of placing flowers or ferns in artistically arranged groups. This style of stage decoration always conveys a very pleasing effect to the audience.

Locating the screen further back on the stage adds only a few feet to the greater distance to the rear seats. It is so small a percentage of this distance, that the vision of the spectator is not materially affected.

Questions and Answers

Q.—Do you think a 110-volt generator would generate enough electricity to throw a clear picture on an average size motion picture screen?

A.—This question does not give sufficient information for a positive direct answer. First, the strength of current to be used should have been given. It is assumed this operator is to use direct current. About 25 amperes will give sufficient light for the average sized screen. Then, if the dynamo he wants to use has the manufacturer's name plate stating the dynamo will carry 25 amperes or more, he may be safe in using it.

Q.—How many H. P. gasoline engine would I need to turn the generator at its required speed?

A.—The smallest sized H. P. engine that may be used to run the above small generator may be determined in this manner.
The unit of work in electrical energy is expressed in watts. The watt is the voltage multiplied by the strength of current given in amperes. Hence, 110 x 25 = 2,750 watts.

This calculation does not take into account the energy lost and gives the actual energy used at the arc. It is not necessary to go too deeply into efficiency and lost energy in the transforming of the power. It is sufficient to say, in the small generator this operator is inquiring about, the efficiency will not be above 50 per cent.

The relative H. P. of 2,750 watts equals 746 watts (equal to 1 H. P.) divided into 2,750 watts: 2,750 ÷ 746 = 3.68 H. P. Add to this the 50 per cent. lost in the dynamo, which gives 5.52 H. P.

It will be wise, then, not to use a smaller sized engine to generate this small amount of electrical energy for the arc light only, than a 10 H. P. engine. This additional capacity for the engine is to take care of the loss in friction for a belt drive.

Seasoning the Program with "Local Color"

Many motion picture operators throughout the country have hand cameras and are, perhaps, advanced amateurs in the taking of photographs. Has the idea of taking local scenes of current events and then making these views into lantern slides, been suggested by them to the manager?

There have been some. And the plan has proven a success. The wise, broad minded exhibitor will gain much free advertising by encouraging his operator in this direction of adding local color to the show.

Projecting one or two slides only, at the beginning of the show, will suffice to season the program. These slides of local scenes will create much talk from the patrons of the theatre to their friends, and their friends in turn, will be the more tempted to visit the theatre to see these pictures.

Building and Furnishings

The Theatre as a Social Centre

HOW to keep the theatre filled at each performance. This problem is hard to solve in the small town. The exhibitor in the large cities is able to meet the situation by extensive advertising. But the available publicity in small places is limited to the use of heralds, posters and handbills of various kinds. The local paper is hardly effective. It generally comes out only once a week, and where the announcement of frequent changes of bill is necessary, fails to be of service.

How, then, can the manager of a theatre in a small town make every seat a source of perpetual income?

One way is to start a club.

Start a club?

Exactly. A club properly conducted will solve the difficulty for the small community audiences.

But in order to carry out such a scheme a manager must have a club house. He must be able to furnish the conveniences implied in the name.

But will it pay; won’t it cost too much to maintain?

Not if an exhibitor carries out a plan adapted to the peculiarities of his location. Certain general rules obtain in practically every region capable of supporting a motion picture theatre.

The club idea has been made possible as an outcome of the tendency on the part of many property owners to erect a two-story structure when building a photo play house.

INTERIOR, SOUTHERN THEATRE, WHEELING, W. VA.

The upper floor is designed for the use of lodge meetings and other assemblages, and generally the lessee of the theatre is supposed to take the whole building.

The inauguration of a club will in all probability bring in a larger income at the end of a year than the occasional rental of the rooms for these private affairs.

A prudent manager can make his theatre an important center. This is not a hard task in a town whose social activities are limited and where the public mode of entertainment is practically confined to the motion picture theatre.

But there is only one way to accomplish the desired result—the club.

How can it be done on practical lines? Offer inducements to your fellow townspeople.

Broadly speaking, the plan is this: Issue season tickets, which entitle the holder not only to the same seat for every new performance, but gives him the privilege of a club member. Install reading rooms, where magazines and illustrated papers are on file for the use of members. Allow them the use of the ball-room for social functions and meetings of their lodges.

Of course, the charge would have to be above the actual price of admission to the theatre in order to bring the gross receipts on a par with the amount a manager would receive from rentals.

As an additional attraction a bowling alley could be installed in the basement. Charge a fee a trifle below the price generally asked for the use of alleys.

Of course, it would be unprofitable to let members have the use of the ball-room for lodge meetings and social occasions at the bare price of the season tickets. But if the rental is calculated carefully, the manager will be able to let the club members have the use of the rooms at a figure that is an inducement. At the same time, the proprietor will not lose money by putting the rooms at the disposal of members at a rate lower than the ordinary rental.

Patrons cannot expect that. But the happy mean can be struck which will be an inducement on one hand, and on the other, give the lessee a reasonable profit.

A theatre capable of use for such a plan is the Globe, in San Pedro, California, designed by L. B. and A. L. Valk, the well-known motion picture house architects of Los Angeles.

This building has been built bowling alleys, smoking rooms for men, a ball-room on the second floor, and, if located in a

Two Spokane Theatres Nearing Completion

EACH hoping to beat the other in its opening, contractors for the new Clemmer and Ye Liberty theatres, Spokane, Wash., located two blocks apart, are running the prettiest sort of a race. Crews work all night and all day on the construction, and each hopes for a "christening" during Christmas week. The combined cost of the houses will be close to half a million dollars.

Both theatres are to house feature films. The Clemmer previously had announced that the Paramount corporation's products would make up its programs. This week Ye Liberty announced the signing of a contract for Alco service. Ye Liberty has contracted for an orchestra-organ from the WurliTizer Company. The Clemmer has ordered an organ from the Eilers house.

Einar Peterson, a young artist who did the interior paintings for the new million-dollar Davenport hotel, has been engaged to do a series of murals for the Clemmer, which is across the street from the hotel.

Plan Chain of Theatres In Northwest

SAM W. B. Cohn, manager of the Empress picture house and the New Spokane, Spokane, Wash., which uses both pictures and vaudeville, is associated with Eugene Levy of Seattle in a plan to establish a chain of film and variety houses from Spokane to the Coast.

Mr. Levy is announced to have completed negotiations for the purchase of the Cord Theatre at Pasco, and the Queen Theatre at Ellensburg. He already controls the Grand Opera House in Seattle, three theatres in Tacoma, and one in North Yakima. He has named Mr. Cohn as general manager of his houses, with headquarters in Spokane.

Mr. Cohn will assume his duties December 1, and will be succeeded as resident manager of the New Spokane and the Empress by A. D. Myers.

Theatres Here and There

THE Bijou Dream, Buffalo, N. Y., which was recently taken over by the Tiliff estate, the original owners, has been redecorated and a new policy adopted. The management has put in the General Film service, and John Ross, a Buffalo artist, has been engaged to paint posters for the features. The admission price will remain at five cents.

The Globe Theatre at the corner of Main and Ferry streets, Buffalo, N. Y., is again under the control of the original owner, G. Morton Wolfe, architect of the Elliscott Square.

New Theatre In West Manhattan

Another moving picture theatre is planned for the west side of Manhattan as the result of a twenty-one years' lease just obtained by a syndicate headed by Lewis C. Van Riper from the Coe estate of the property at 2162 to 2186 Broadway, fronting 77 feet between Seventy-seventh and Seventy-eighth streets, New York City, with an extension to 227 to 231 West Seventy-seventh street, fronting 50 feet there.

A two-story building, which has been used as a market and a garage, occupies the plot, and it will be remodeled from plans by Thomas W. Lamb for the projected theatre. The aggregate lease for the term will be about $350,000.

The Alpine Theatre, a moving picture house in Cortlandt street, Tarrytown, N. Y., was destroyed by fire recently. The loss is estimated at $7,000. The cause of the fire is unknown.

A motion picture theatre with a seating capacity of 500 seats is being built by Lewis Ahlemp for G. H. Chapman, at Second street Pike and Louden streets, Philadelphia, at a cost of $7,000. The structure is to be 109x100 feet, of fireproof steel and concrete construction.

The old Danish Lutheran church at Troy, N. Y., is to be transformed into a moving picture house. Raymond Schoonmaker, manager of the building, when the present building for $3,100, will begin remodeling the church within a few days.

J. A. Menard has sold the Majestic Theatre, business and building to A. J. Hendrickson, No. 37 West Colton avenue, Redlands, Cal. The consideration was $22,500.

Mr. Menard received $12,000 in cash, local property and Long Beach lots valued at $10,500. The Majestic is one of the largest motion picture houses in the city, and one of the best businesses in that section.

New Wilmington Theatre Under Way

Work has been started on the motion picture theatre building to be erected at Nos. 810-12 French street, Wilmington, Del., for Dr. S. G. Elbert, at a cost of $25,000. Plans for the structure were prepared by Eugene Wallace Hance, architect. The new building will be one of the handsomest structures of the kind in the city.

Many innovations just introduced into some of the largest theatre structures in New York and other cities will be included. Special attention has been paid by Mr. Hance to ventilation, seating arrangements, etc. The theatre will be completed in about five months.

Thompson, Hubman & Fisher have completed the handsome new building at the corner of Broad and Delaware streets, North Tonawanda, N. Y., which will be occupied as a moving picture theatre and bowling alleys. The building represents an outlay of $30,000 irrespective of equipment.

Charles Hetrick is building on Spruce street, Cedarhurst, L. I., a theatre to be occupied by Arthur Silverman, a Far Rockaway moving picture exhibitor. The new theatre will be a modern building, fitted with stage and balcony. It will accommodate 500 people, and will be opened before New Year's Day, it is expected, and will be devoted to the movies.

Hyman Gerson has bought the Brunner hair factory property, 18-30 Garrison Lane, south of Baltimore street, in West Baltimore, Md. It is 130 by 350 feet, and contains several factory buildings and dwellings. Mr. Gerson will build a moving picture theatre, bowling alleys and dance hall on the site. The deal was made through the office of William Martin & Co.

Announcement is made that the title of the property on South Broadway and Prospect street, Yonkers, N. Y., the site of the new theatre now in the course of construction, has been transferred from the Edgar Allen M. S. Epstein company to the A. E. R. Corporation, of New York City.

The Western Amusement Company has taken over the old Swischer Opera House in Morgantown, W. Va. It has been remodeled and christened "The Strand." John P. Harris is managing director. This new theatre has signed for the Alco service.

Goldfinger & Berkowitz have been granted a permit by Fire Marshall Haynes to erect a moving picture house on Sixth avenue, north of Glen avenue, to cost $5,000. Work on the building has begun.

Village Offers Reduced Fee for Exhibitor

In an effort to have a moving picture theatre open in Falconer, N. Y., this winter the village board has just passed a resolution abolishing a license fee for such theatres. In 1911 the same board passed a resolution charging $500 license for picture shows. The next year it was reduced to $50 and in 1913 the fee was brought down to $25. Each year the theatre has had several different proprietors and each season it has closed down in the middle of the winter.

It has been suggested that next year the village board give a bonus to anyone with nerve enough to start the enterprise.

The remainder of the property of Jefferson and State streets, Perth Amboy, N. J., belonging to the McDonough estate has not been disposed of by Isaac Alpern, who is the trustee. This will probably be held through the winter and it is rumored that in the spring a moving picture theatre will be erected there. Jonathan Compton, of South Amboy, who is erecting a house at Melvita Park, on the South River road, has already sold it to Mrs. Louisa Price, and is contemplating the erection of another residence at that tract.

It is practically assured that the Keith vaudeville interests will have a new theatre in Grand Rapids, Mich., by next season. John J. Murdock, head of the Keith Circuit, has made several personal visits to Grand Rapids of late looking over various sites, and it is understood he has about closed for one. The Keith vaudeville is now playing at the Columbia Theatre, owned by Messrs. Gillingham and Smith. In the event that the Keith circuit has its own house, the Columbia, would, no doubt, go to high-class motion pictures.

Contracts have been let for the remodelling of the brick building at the corner of Woodward and Harper avenues, Detroit, Mich., which will be changed into a moving picture theatre to be known as the Harper. It will have a seating capacity of over 300.

Work is progressing unusually fast on the new Knickerbocker Theatre at Jefferson and Grand avenues, Detroit. The walls are up and the roof is now being put on. The owners plan to have it ready for occupancy not later than May 1, 1915. Adjoining the theatre will be a hall called "Hunting in the Ozarks" which will have booths selling various articles.

Rosedale Opening in Detroit Postponed

The new Rosedale Theatre opening in Detroit, Mich., has been postponed from Thanksgiving day (the date originally planned) to December 15. The seats have been ordered for December 10 and it is fully believed that the theatre will be completely finished and in readiness to open by the 15. The Rosedale is located at 2295 Woodward avenue, and will seat 1,200 people; it will have a large foyer capable of holding at least several hundred people more. The Rosedale belongs to William F. Klatt, who now operates a chain of theatres in this city. His newest venture, the Jewell Theatre, at 448 Gratiot avenue, seating 600, formally opened November 14.

Others have been opened at 2033 Dime Bank building, Detroit, Mich., by the Grand Boulevard Theatre Co., which plans to erect a large picture theatre on the Grand Boulevard, near Woodward avenue. The property has been purchased and the plans completed; all that remains now is for the money to be raised, when contracts will be let and the work rushed. The company has increased the capital stock from $100,000 to $150,000, and the stock will now be offered to the public. Fuller Claffin is the architect.

B. Harlan Starr, manager of the New Empire Theatre on Woodward avenue, Detroit, since the house opened, has resigned and has been succeeded by H. W. Smith, formerly assistant manager.

Pierre Lindout, architect in Grand Rapids, Mich., is preparing plans for a theatre to seat 450, to be devoted to pictures.

Looking Over Michigan Theatres

Robert G. Pellet, owner of the Bijou Theatre in Mt. Clemens, Mich., is erecting a new home at a cost of $5,000. It will be 32 by 45 feet in size, 1½ stories high.

The Alladin Theatre in Bay City, Mich., opens November 20 with Ethel Barrymore in "The Nightingale." This is Bay City's newest picture house, and it is up-to-date and modern in every respect. The management has arranged for the use of the Alliance program.

The Kerridge Theatre in Hancock, Mich., Ray Kerridge, manager, has secured the exclusive rights for Hancock and Houghton to Paramount films. An admission price of 25 cents will be charged.

Capt. W. D. Ament has disposed of the Bently Grand Theatre on the Pike at Long Beach, Cal., to W. H. Kuhn and several associates. Mr. Kuhn will act as manager. Capt. Ament, who was formerly in vaudeville, is again appearing back of the footlights, and will soon depart for the east over one of the large circuits. The new manager of the Grand has made a contract with the Nat A. Magnin company of Los Angeles through local manager A. H. White for four days feature service weekly, including all the Alliance program releases.

Manuel V. H. Rivas, of the Auditorium theatre, San Bernardino, Cal., will hereafter show Alliance program features three days of each week.

Bernstein & Shephard, proprietors of the Capitol and Casino theatres in Springfield, Ill., are to open another theatre in that city. The new motion picture house is being erected at Eleventh street and South Grand avenue by J. J. Scanlan, who has leased it to Bernstein & Shephard. The new theatre is to be of brick and concrete and will be thoroughly modern in every respect. It will cost complete, approximately $8,000.

Buys Turner & Dahmenk Theatre

The Berkeley Theatre, conducted for the past four years at Berkeley, Cal., by Turner & Dahmenk, who conduct a circuit of seven houses in the San Francisco territory, has been disposed of to C. A. Reavis, who is to assume the management before the end of November. Turner & Dahmenk are just completing the construction of a new house in this city with a seating capacity of about 2,000 and will open this early in December, the opening attraction to be "Neptune's Daughter," according to present plans of the house. A. H. Moore is now the resident manager of this firm, having succeeded E. V. Clover.

Active construction work has been commenced on the new moving picture house to be opened in the Spring at Eddy and Fillmore streets, San Francisco, Cal., by the Kahn & Greenfield Circuit. It is planned to have this ready for occupancy about the time of the opening of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

Boston Theatre Installs Austin Organ

A $25,000 Austin organ has been installed in the New Park Theatre, Boston, scheduled for opening December 1. Special arrangements have been made to supply the theatre with an orchestra which will render the best music in an efficient manner.

The theatre will be devoted exclusively to the Paramount program.

W. E. Green, Moe Mark and several other associates operate the Park Theatre Company.

One hundred thousand dollars was spent in renovating and remodeling the theatre. The old gallery was taken out and supplanted by a modern balcony. It has every convenience, even to the filtration of the air.

When it is remembered that Boston is the individual and sole market for all of New England, and that most of its advantages and individual interests and social customs emanate in the Hub, the fact of such a house running Paramount features will be apparent.
Music and the Picture

Editor's Note.—This department is prepared to answer all questions from exhibitors relating to the use of music in connection with photoplays, and to suggest suitable music for current pictures. Correspondence will be welcomed.

Fitting the Words of a Song to the Picture

By H. S. Fuld

From time to time we have advocated in these columns the use of popular songs and melodies for the pictures wherever they might, in the judgment of the player, fit the scene on the screen. And yet while the suggestion still stands, it seems there are times when it is overdone. Witness the following letter from a player at one of the better class of motion-picture theatres:

"I am enclosing a letter I received at the theatre from a friend of mine that is self-explanatory. You may use it any way you want, but please give me your idea on it. The letter follows:"

"Your playing pleases in the main, and you follow the pictures, and the audience is very much pleased with that part of it. The part that the patrons and the management of the house do not like is where you "kid" a dramatic picture."

"Another criticism is that you do not play recent tunes. As far as I remember, this has always been one of your faults. And you go back too far for your old tunes."

A dramatic picture must be played straight drama, otherwise, if you try to "kid" and play tunes with a suggestive meaning, or tunes to convey a meaning other than the action calls for, it detracts from the story or action on the screen.

While you do not deserve the first criticism, and probably "killed" a scene by kidding it—maybe you played "It Looks To Me Like a Big Night To-night" when a couple were getting married, or something equally suggestive—nevertheless the last one about old songs I do not agree with your friend.

No matter how old a song or melody, if you know it and it fits the picture, play it. There are in all probability others in the audience who will recognize it.

For instance, the old songs "She Was Happy 'Til She Met You," "Bird in a Gilded Cage," "Hello, Central, Give Me Heaven," "Alice, Where Art Thou," and so on, are still known by the present generation, and if fitted to their proper place for the scenes calling for the particular words in a particular song, nothing would be more in place than the playing of that song or melody.

Take the words of "In the glowing. Best for you and best for me that we should part." 'Tis old, but what is more fitting for a parting scene than it, or "Oh, my darling, Nelly Grey, they have taken you away, and I'll never see my darling any more?"

As long as the words fit the situation or action on the screen, use the song of those words, no matter how old the tune. But in a serious drama, if an old woman puts on an outlandish hat, don't play "Where Did You Get that Hat," even though the words do fit. In such a place "kidding" is out of place, and it was no doubt some such "fauex pas" that brought you that criticism in the first place.

While on this subject it might not be amiss to state that another party writing for the same department page on one of our numerous contemporaries, agrees with us, in that "playing a lot of classic stuff regardless of its fitness may please the music lovers, but it does not help the show as a whole." Stick to the popular and catchy numbers and save your overtures for before shows, between shows, educational films, or exit marches.

"Piano-Orchestrians" versus Orchestras

From time to time in these columns we have had occasion to refer to the accomplishment of pictures in various ways: piano, or piano with drums, full orchestra, Photo-player, and Orchestrians, such as the Wurlitzer. We have frequently expressed the opinion that one of the best ways to find arguments in favor of these Orchestrians, or piano-orchestras as they are most commonly termed, is for a person to visit one of the numerous theatres where one is being used and played by a fairly capable performer and hear it accompany the pictures.

The gradual perfection of these instruments has made it possible for one person to supplant an entire orchestra, and not only obtain the same results, and retain the same advantages, but have the additional advantages in the shape of organ tones, Vox-Humana and so on, that would be impossible for an orchestra to render.

It seems to us that the logical solution of the problem of proper musical accompaniment for the pictures, lies with one of these instruments under the immediate control of one person, and that person a competent pianist.

In the hands of a competent player we listen to the music, and it is not so obtrusive as to destroy the musical effect, because the music is so blended with the action of the picture as to make a most desirable combination. The entire musical accompaniment is directed and controlled by this one performer on the instrument, and the atmosphere required in a musical sense to improve the picture is never lacking.

With an orchestra it is only possible to play selections, and on most occasions these selections are rendered so creditably as to detract the audience from the picture in favor of the music, and close attention to the photo play is out of the question.

Of course, it is hardly possible for an orchestra to follow a picture closely, though in a few instances where a theatre runs a picture for a week there is ample time to arrange a program that will fit the picture. And this is the exception rather than the rule. One would be hard put to rehearse an orchestra every day so that the proper music be selected so that the picture could be followed closely.

Where there is a sudden and extreme change of treatment in the picture, an orchestra could hardly make the quick change to follow this action, consequently, the selection being played would be entirely unsuited for this particular part of the photo play. And right here is where the great advantages of the Orchestrian comes in. Whether it is a sentimental scene in a heavy drama suddenly changing to comedy, or a humorous situation suddenly becoming serious the music changes on the instant, to suit that particular scene.

The different instruments that go to make up the Orchestrian, violin, flute, horn, cello, bass, clarinet, chimes, are all at the command of the one operator either singly for solo, or in groups, or in entirety. Also kettle, bass, and snare drums, bells, whistles, auto-horn, fire or locomotive bell, tambourine, and so on, in fact almost any sound effect called for by the action on the screen is immediately available.

An overture played on one of these instruments, whether it be operatic or only a popular melody that is being rendered, is always a treat to a music loving audience.

Well Known Singers Accompany Montreal Pictures

For the first time in Canada there is being shown at the Tivoli, Montreal, motion-picture songs. Mr. English, manager of the house, who is always to the fore in securing the latest successes for his theatre, engaged one of Montreal's leading vocalists to sing in conjunction with the pictures.

The attraction has drawn some record houses, and the opinion was generally expressed that the whole effect was very charming, and as great an improvement on the old stationary slide pictures as the present-day feature compares with the old-time flickering one-reeeler.
Perfumes and Disinfectants

The use of either one or both as air deodorizers has become almost universal. It is estimated that 90 per cent. of the motion-picture theatres in the country are users of perfumes and disinfectants. For example, in St. Louis, 97 per cent. of the houses are said to be constant consumers. The amount spent by each theatre averages from $50 to $200 each year, the average being about $75. It is interesting to note that throughout the South and West a higher class of goods and perfumes is used than in the East, where quantity and not quality seems to figure.

The various forms of disinfectant contain a certain amount of formaldehyde, together with the essence of the perfume desired, as well as a percentage of menthol. This is distributed ordinarily by means of a sprayer of one-quarter capacity.

This is the disinfectant in the finest kind of spray which reaches every corner of the house when applied. The life of one load of the sprayer is, under ordinary circumstances, four days; for, by continuous pumping, it takes more than two hours to empty a full load. The odor of the high-class disinfectant is refreshing and always pleasing.

In some states, the authorities absolutely compel theatre owners to use disinfectants regularly, and in several of the mining districts, the local authorities take matters in their own hands and see that the disinfectant is used in all public gathering places, which, of course, include the picture houses.

The perfumes, which are in no way disinfectants, are applied by several methods, cone sprayers or electric fans being the most popular. The cones, which are made of a porous material and are hung up about the theatres, are filled with the perfume, which is allowed to evaporate. From six to eight complete equipment for a 300-seat house. In order to make these receptacles attractive aside from their neat designs, artificial flowers are often decorated over them so that they resemble a jardiniere, and rather than being an eye-sores are a decided attraction to the house.

For example, wisteria can be draped from a cone which is filled with the wisteria perfume. This may be also applied to lilacs and various other flowers. In the summer, when fans are used, sponges or other porous material which are saturated with perfume are fastened in front of the fan, thus distributing it throughout the house.

In the case of perfumes, they are composed of a portion of alcohol which forms the evaporating substance, together with the essence of the perfume which is desired. There is one use to which perfumes can be put which is not universally known. This is in dispelling and neutralizing tobacco smoke, and in all houses where smoking is allowed, perfume should be used abundantly in order to keep the fumes from becoming objectionable.

PAULIS GENERAL MANAGER OF COAST CAMERA FIRM

H. PAULIS, for several years with the camera firm of Keuel & Esse, New York City, and since connected with the Adolph Freese company in this city, is the new general manager of the Los Angeles Motion Picture Company, manufacturers of Angelus motion picture cameras, tripods and other equipment for camera-men. The company is weekly increasing the output of their factory to meet the demands of the trade and in addition to many orders from professional camera-men and exhibitors in America, are making many foreign shipments.

Carl Sterlnov, formerly manager, found himself too busy in the management of a studio and a 120-acre orange ranch, to superintend the factory, and is now connected with the sales department only.

THEATRE BUYS GIANT MIRROROIDE SCREEN

THE Regent Theatre at Paterson, N. J., has just installed the largest screen in any theatre in the state of New Jersey. The screen is “MIRROROIDE,” made by J. H. Genter Co., and is 17 feet and 8 inches high by 22 feet and 6 inches wide. This screen replaces the one destroyed by a slight fire in the theatre last week, and was sold by Mr. Morrell, of the Center Co.

smaller town, would be ideally constructed for carrying out the club plan.

The Globe is a tribute to the skill of the designer. The building is of brick, with concrete for the foundation walls, having cement for the exterior put on over the brick. Staff composition is used for the ornamental work on the front. The ball room extends the length and breadth of the building, which is fifty by one hundred feet. The ball-room has all modern conveniences such as cloak rooms, and toilets for men and women. There is a handsome music platform at the end of the ball-room.

The main entrance lobby to the theatre has tile floor and marble wainscoting all around the sides, including the box office. There is plate glass in the entrance doors and the front of the box office.

The building has proved exceedingly popular on account of the bowling alley in the basement, the theatre on the main floor and the ball-room over the theatre. It is packed nightly from top to bottom and brings the owner an income of $95 for the basement, $325 for the theatre, $125 for the lodge rooms, a total of $545 per month.

The building complete without the opera chairs, carpets, curtains and draperies and stage scenery and the apparatus in the operating booth, cost $30,000. The ground is valued at another thirty thousand, making a total investment of $60,000. The owner receives a little over ten per cent. on the investment as rent.

The theatre and ball-room and the basement are ventilated by means of two intake and two exhaust electric fans, supplying the proper amount of fresh air, and exhausting the foul air at all times.

The operating room is equipped with two Powers 6-A projection machines, one dissolving stereoptican, one spot light, and a mercury arc rectifier.

There has been installed an indirect lighting system, consisting of six staff bowls containing three 100 watt tungsten lamps with filament reflectors on three circuits, so that it is possible to have at will, one, two, or all three lights. The ceiling lights as well as the foot and the border lights are all controlled from the operating room, and also from the switchboard from the lobby.

The entire front of the building is outlined and illuminated with electric lights. The lamps are arranged on circuits so that any part can be extinguished at will.

The total seating capacity is 480, including 88 loge seats, surrounded by a brass rail. Ceiling and side walls are decorated with hand-painted emblems. There are neat stencil borders in the ceiling panels. All the ornamental of the staff work are high-lighted with gold leaf.

MOTION PICTURES PART OF CAFE CABARET
CAPT. JAMES CHURCHILL, who owns and operates one of the largest restaurants in New York, has instituted something brand new in the entertainment line to augment the regular evening cabaret entertainment offered.

On Monday night, November 16, Mr. Churchill began showing pictures for the benefit of his patrons, who had begun, so it was reported, to lose interest in the dancing. Capt. Churchill has fitted up his hall with a Johns-Manville booth, a Powers 6-A and a machine and a day and night screen, which last enables him to run his pictures while the lights are still on. Universal service is being shown, with special emphasis placed on the comedy end of the program.

NEWMAN PUTS LACQUER ON THE MARKET
The Newman Manufacturing Company has just put a new preparation on the market known as lacquer. This is a transparent liquid which, when applied to metal surface is guaranteed to prevent tarnishing.

It not only keeps and preserves the metal, but insures the luster for years. A pint will cover ten one-sheet brass frames.

Use Clean Posters

Using raggedy, torn, dirty posters is like putting on a torn dirty shirt on a fine Sunshiny Sunday Morning to go to Church. A clean front betokens a clean inside, clean shows and clean management, and this poster question is one of supreme importance to every Exhibitor's Success.

You can trace the tremendous success of the big circuses like Ringling Bros.—and all the other big shows to the tremendous pulling power of Posters. You may not be Ringling Bros., but you are not asked to advertise on this scale, BUT you are asked, advised and urged to use posters on the scale you can afford.

If you will pick out the proper spots in your town and use Universal Posters liberally,—put up artistically, clean and in good shape, these stands will work for you day and night. A powerful poster in a good live spot will bring greater results than a lot of cheap heralds thrown around promiscuously by incompetent distributors.

We have spent and are spending fortunes each year on posters. We don’t know what expense means when it comes to getting out the wonder stuff in this line. If you will use your brains and co-operate with us, following our suggestions about putting up CLEAN POSTERS in clean places the results will amaze you. SUNDAY, DEC. 13

There is a remarkable double characterization in the poetic picture story

THE OLD MAID

A production that should prove itself an artistic creation of exceptional merit, suggested in part by the beautiful poem "DOROTHY IN THE GARRET" by JOHN TOWNSEND TROWBRIDGE. In the cast BLANCHE SWEET, MARY ALDEN, SPOTTISWOODEAITKEN and JACK CONWAY.

THE MAJESTIC AND KOMIC GUIDE FOR EXHIBITORS
(in which we try to tell only the truth about all Majestic and Komic releases)

THE OLD GOOD-FOR-NOTHING. (1 Reel Majestic.) Release date Tuesday, Dec. 1. A delightful character comedy drama in which Spottiswoode Aitken plays the part of the lovable old inventor who is thought to be "good-for-nothing," but who finally wins out gloriously.

A QUESTION OF COURAGE. (2 Reel Majestic.) Release date Sunday, Dec. 6. A strong, virile picture-drama, reasonably well produced, telling the story of a mother who bravely gave two sons to the war but rebelled when it came to losing the third son.

MR. HADLEY'S UNCLE. (1 Reel Komic) Release date Sunday, Dec. 6. This is No. 12 of the famous "Bill" stories by Paul West, published in 20 Sunday newspapers in the larger cities. It is an excellent number.

HER BRAVE HERO. (1 Reel Majestic.) Release date Tuesday, Dec. 8. A fair farce comedy, but not quite up to standard. Hubby becomes a hero under false pretences.

IN WILDMAN'S LAND. (1 Reel Majestic) Release date Friday, Dec. 11. A comedy drama quite out of the ordinary, cleverly produced and acted, telling a weird story of a strange tribe of wild people.

THE OLD MAID. (2 Reel Majestic) Release date Sunday, Dec. 13. An unusual, artistic offering, especially recommended for the higher class houses, featuring Blanche Sweet. The "Old Maid" recalls the story of the youth.

THE HOUSEBREAKERS. (1 Reel Komic) Release date Sunday, Dec. 13. Above the average Komic. Eddie Dillon as the timid sweetheart proves his courage.

Attendance Records Shattered AGAIN!

ZUDORA
Thanhouser's Greatest Photoplay

AGAIN all attendance records are shattered by a Thanhouser success. This time it's Zudora—the biggest, most elaborate and most unique motion picture production that has ever been offered exhibitors. Although only three episodes have thus far been released, reports of CROWDED HOUSES come from all over America.

Zudora is the creation of Daniel Carson Goodman, author, philosopher and scientist. The novelized version of Zudora has been written by Harold MacGrath and is now appearing in hundreds of newspapers throughout the country. The motion pictures of Zudora will be presented in 20 episodes of 2 reels each. A new episode is being released each week. The cast includes Marguerite Snow, Harry Benham and James Cruze.

Exhibitors: If you want a box office attraction that is bound to draw PACKED HOUSES—Book Zudora. See the Thanhouser Syndicate representative at any Mutual Exchange in the United States or Canada.

REPEAL OF KEYSTONE CENSOR LAW IS NEAR

United States Senator Penrose Assures Pennsylvania Exhibitors in Conference He is Opposed to Censorship and Promises Them Every Possible Aid—Thirty Thousand Dollars a Year Paid to Censor in Film Fees— Complaint of Tax Injustices

Special to Motion Picture News

AS the result of vigorous representation made by members of the Exhibitors’ League in Pennsylvania and the efforts of Motion Picture News in their behalf against censorship under the supervision of Federal, State or local officials, culminating in an interview of a delegation of producers and exhibitors with United States Senator Penrose on November 30, the repeal of the censor law in that state by the next legislature is almost an assured fact.

Senator Penrose made a statement favoring the repeal of the law, after hearing the reasons advanced by the committee and recognizing the justness of the views entertained by exhibitors throughout the state on this important question.

The Delegates in Conference with Penrose

The delegation comprised Fred J. Herrington, representing the exhibitors of Pittsburgh and vicinity, whose work as an organizer is well known; Morris Spiers, of Philadelphia; V. R. Carrick, of the Interstate Film Company; J. H. Butner, manager of the Mutual Film Exchange; Benjamin Zerr, of Reading; George Leavitt, of New York; P. Cropper, of the Exhibitors’ League, and State Senator Joseph H. Thompson, of Beaver county, who obtained an audience for the delegation.

The spokesman of the film men, P. Cropper, pointed out to Senator Penrose the nature of the hardships now affecting exhibitors through the loose construction of the law. As it now stands the censor can determine, on his own volition, rather than through a strict interpretation of the measure, whether managers can display posters outside of their theatres, it was pointed out to the senator. The representative also declared that the law compels the payment on duplicate films, and that with the fees charged for this “service” and the state, federal and war tax exacted from them, cuts down the chances of making a reasonable profit to almost zero.

Senator Penrose was impressed with the arguments presented to him by the delegation, and declared that he would aid the film men in every possible way to remove the unjust conditions, a statement which, coming from such a source, made the representatives feel that the end of state censorship in Pennsylvania is in sight.

Exhibitors Caught Napping

State Senator Thompson stated that when the law was passed the exhibitors were caught napping, not realizing the manner in which the bill had been drawn. He made it clear that the exhibitors wanted no compromise on the situation, and declared in emphatic terms that an amendment of the law would not be satisfactory—nothing short of absolute repeal of the obnoxious law would remove the causes working a grave injustice to managers of motion picture theatres.

V. R. Carrick told Senator Penrose that in six months the censor had averaged 233 reels a week, making an average of $30,000 a year in fees, an onerous charge on the producing companies. Mr. Carrick cited as an instance of the hardship entailed by the law that he had paid $2,627 to date, including a fee on duplicates. In addition to this expense he had been obliged to pay a federal tax of $600. Mr. Carrick, voicing the sentiment of the delegation, as well as the exhibiting body he represented, declared that the public should be the censor of films.

It was brought out at the interview that when the censor law was passed in 1911 J. Louis Breitinger, the present censor, was a member of the House of Representatives, which, according to Senator Penrose, disqualifies him from holding his present office.

Pave Way for Fusion of Keystone Exhibitors

HARRISBURG, Pa., Dec. 2.

AN interesting meeting of the state officers of the motion picture exhibitors’ league of Pennsylvania, held at the Commonwealth hotel, Harrisburg, Wednesday, November 18, for the purpose of conferring with the Motion Picture Exhibitors’ Association as to amalgamating into one organization, proved most successful.

Those who attended the conference included: Ben. H. Zerr, J. G. Hansen, Frank A. Gould, Reading; Gilbert C. Miller, Plymouth; E. F. McAtee, Mahanoy City; Francis E. Devlin, Wilkes Barre. The association, which comprises the exhibitors from Pittsburgh and vicinity, was represented by Fred J. Herrington.

Mr. Zerr acted as chairman owing to the absence of President Sam. F. Wheeler. Chairman Zerr was given authority to make necessary appointments and arrangements for the convention.

Concluding the conference the following Harrisburg exhibitors were authorized to make the necessary arrangements for holding the convention and exhibit: I. Silverman, Clyde D. Klinger, Anthony George, C. Floyd Hopkins, John M. Lenney, I. Marcus and F. Magaro.

Additional names will be added during the next ten days.

TEST SUNDAY OPENING CASE IN KENTUCKY COURT
Louisville, Ky., Dec. 2.

If it is shown that the ordinance of the city of Frankfort, Ky., passed in 1812, prohibiting business on Sunday has not been suspended, the Franklin Circuit Court must grant a writ of mandamus requiring Police Judge W. C. Herndon to issue a warrant at the instance of a citizen for the arrest of motion picture managers operating their shows on Sunday. Judgment of the Franklin Circuit Court refusing the writ has been reversed by the Court of Appeals.

The opinion handed down by the Court of Appeals is the result of a test suit brought by the city prosecutor. The police court has refused a warrant for E. K. Lyon, proprietor of a moving picture theatre, charging him with violating the Sunday law. Lyon came into the case and alleged that the ordinance had been repealed.

Jeup Urges Co-operation In Detroit
Important Amendments to Motion Picture Laws Demand Presence Every Exhibitor at December 15 Meeting, Declares President

Detroit, Dec. 2.

CO-OPERATION was the key-note of the regular weekly meeting of the Michigan Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors at the club rooms in the Equity building, Tuesday afternoon, November 24. A number of matters were brought up showing how some exhibitors were violating the constitution; for instance, one playhouse on the east side was giving free matinees, or had given one free matinee and had intended to give others; another theatre had conducted raffle contests previous to Thanksgiving. The subjects caused considerable discussion.

President Jeup again referred to the coming semi-annual meeting, the definite date of which will be December 15, head-quarters being at the club rooms, 255 Equipt building.

"We have any number of important matters that we want to thrash out, which are of concern to every theatre and manager in the state," he said. "We cannot accomplish anything but having the co-operation of just a few exhibitors, but must have the help of all. The coming convention will be purely for business, no social entertainment being provided. We want the members to come here prepared to talk business and nothing else.

"We must get together before the legislature convenes and find out how our members feel relative to the various new amendments that are proposed to the moving picture laws," said President Jeup with emphasis.

California Will Release Through World Film
Beyfuss Completes Arrangements for Marketing on This Program "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," and Other Important Pictures

THE California Motion Picture Corporation, through Alex. E. Beyfuss, general manager, has effected a plan to release its feature productions through the World Film Corporation. The initial offering will be a five-reel production of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," adapted from the novel by Alice Hegan Rice, as dramatized by herself and Anne Crawford Flexner, and originally presented by Liebler and company.

This feature will be released on January 4. Beatriz Michelena, whose work in "Salomy Jane" has made her famous in filmdom, will be starred as "Lovey Mary."

On January 18, the California Corporation will release "Mignon," in a prologue and four parts, through the World Corporation. Beatriz Michelena's portrayal of the title part is said to be as nearly perfect as the art of acting in pictures can be effected.

The third release will be "The Lily of Poverty Flats," a story based upon Bret Harte's poem "Her Letter, His Answer and Her Last Letter." In this production the California Motion Picture Corporation will try to outdo even "Salomy Jane" for scenic effects and stirring action.

Minneapolis League Is Getting Results

Aggressive Measures Inaugurated by Members Include Establishment of a Bureau of Theatre Sales, Employment Office, an Information and Interstate Relations Bureau and a Vigilant Legislation Committee—
Dues, Based on Seating Capacity May Be Abolished by Organization

Minneapolis, Dec. 2.

A CTING on instructions granted at the convention of the Minnesota Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, which give them a wide latitude, members of the executive committee are putting into operation new business systems which will more than double the service to the individual exhibitors. The aggressive work of this and other committees has already attracted the attention of older and wealthier trade organizations in other branches and by the next convention date there will be a new kind of exhibitors' league boosting the motion picture business.

The committee declares that it will have an organization by May 1 that will not have to have the high fees to keep it going. This point they wish especially to gain to prove the Minneapolis association's side in its contention with the national body.

As most exhibitors know, the Minnesota association, since the start at the national convention in 1915, has not been affiliated with the larger body and the chief contention is that the assessment per capita is too much and is wholly unnecessary.

Plan to Do Away with Dues

By having every theatre in the state run an advertising slide and by careful management of the exhibitions conducted at the times of the annual and semi-annual conventions, the executive committee plans to do away with the fees which are now based on seating capacity of theatres. Each theatre now pays 1 cent a seat.

The association has moved into a new suite of offices on the fourth floor of the Temple Court building, and from the offices the officers will conduct this and other campaigns.

The new work includes establishing a permanent legislative committee, an employment bureau, a bureau for theatre sales, an information bureau and a bureau for interstate relations.

The constant danger of new laws that will work against the best interests of the business will be fought openly, and other trade organizations will co-operate in a large measure. To further, the strength of this department, the executive committee will go to the Wisconsin convention in Milwaukee December 10, and there invite all exhibitors to join the Minnesota association. The Wisconsin men will pay a nominal fee for membership until the fees are done away with.

Next Convention, May 3-7

An interstate agreement by which Minnesota will help Wisconsin and Wisconsin help Minnesota will be worked out. Wisconsin men will be asked to participate in the next Minnesota convention and to come loaded with ideas.

The next convention date has been set for May 3-7, 1915, in Minneapolis, and there will be another exposition in connection.

In the meantime the executive committee is going ahead with its service work. It already has its purchasing department in good working order. Now all theatres which are for sale will be posted in the offices and advertised in the association's bulletins.

The notices of persons who want to buy theatres will also be posted and the buyer and seller will be brought together at a serving to both. The commissions, which are often high, will be eliminated. This service will be free, as will all others.

In the employment bureau there will be kept a list of operators, electricians, singers, musicians, ticket sellers and all others who are available for extra or permanent work.

The information department is already doing good service and this month members are keeping W. A. Steffes, the secretary, informed as to all conditions affecting the business.

An example of the way in which this plan is working out was evidenced by the convention of a year around organization, with offices open at all business hours.

Members of the association have regretted that David Rodgers, of the Niccollet Theatre, Niccollet avenue and Grant street, has been compelled to give up his work as treasurer because of a prolonged trip to California, but they feel also that they are fortunate in having O. C. Stelsner, manager of the Star Theatre, 905 Twentieth avenue N., to handle the finances.

Censors Resign; Urge End of Censorship

Los Angeles Board Sees No Need of Further Service as Manufacturers' Output Is Free From Objectionable Scenes

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Nov. 30.

MRS. E. K. FOSTER, president; Florence Miller, secretary; and George W. Parsons, of the Los Angeles board of motion picture censors, filed resignations with Mayor Rose recently, and at the same time urged that the board be dissolved, as they believed there was no longer need for the members to spend their time viewing pictures, as the manufacturers had raised the standards to such an extent that censorship was not necessary.

The recommendations of the three retiring members was not heeded by the city officers and others have been named to fill the vacancies. Judge A. P. Tugwell, president of the local League, and member of the executive committee of the National League, has been named president of the board until the board is reorganized.

Judge Tugwell and other members of the local league were present at a recent meeting of the city council for the purpose of seeing that the recommendation of the retiring members were not carried.

OUT. He was desirous of censorship.

"Local exhibitors are heartily in favor of a municipal board of censors," Judge Tugwell said, "because it gives us additional protection. We are not in favor of state or national censorship."

Mrs. Foster is a prominent society and club woman and has been president of the censor board since first organized three years ago, and Miss Moore has held the office of secretary for a like period. All members of the board, with the exception of the secretary, who receives $75 per month, serve without pay.

The members take turn at viewing pictures and Friday of each week all go over the ones any members find below the standard.
Film Firms to Have Central Storage Plant

Entire Seventh Floor of Fireproof Building Will Be Devoted to Property of New York Concerns—Corporation Counsel Approves Project

WITH about forty-five tenants of the World's Tower and Candler buildings in trouble with the law because of their storage of film in violation to the fire ordinance and the necessity hanging over the heads of occupants of other buildings in the theatrical center, the need of a central storage place for film has been focused into action. The entire seventh floor of the fireproof building at 32 West 40th street, New York City, is now being made ready for this purpose, and will be ready for occupancy December 15.

The New York City ordinance forbidding the storage of motion picture film within fifty feet of a theatre has for months been giving many motion picture companies anxious moments.

With the heart of the industry located in the theatrical district it is almost impossible to find accommodations in buildings not subject to fire violation visitations.

Film company representatives spent much time in consultation with the assistant corporation counsel of New York City in charge of the cases in point now in the courts, and evolved the project of building a general film storage headquarters in a fireproof building, legally distant from a theatre and yet convenient to the motion picture executive offices.

The exact specifications which would pass the regulations of the building and fire departments have been given out for the installation of vaults of twelve inch concrete, with metal interiors. Double vault doors will give added protection.

The system of charges and handling of the film has been worked out carefully, with the view of bringing the rates to a practical working basis. The film will be doubly protected by fire and burglary insurance. If the subscribing companies want their films called for and delivered this will be done at a commensurately small fee.

The assistant corporation counsel has declared to Joseph R. Mires that there will be no objection to the projecting of films in any building where the rules as to projecting are carried out. He also affirms that assurance to the court by the defendant film firms that they have made arrangements to store their films elsewhere will be accepted as a stay of proceedings, and that upon taken action within a reasonable length of time the suits will be dropped.

Doddgers of the law will be punished, he declares. It is necessary to avoid the appearance of film storage, and inspectors will be entirely within their rights in breaking into lockers, trunks, desks, cabinets or anything they may suspect as concealing the proscribed combustible.

A direct telephone wire will be run to the Fortieth street building from the offices of the Films Lloyds, Inc., in the Candler building, who will conduct the storage operation.

Acme of Photo Artistry for “Runaway June”

Reliance Company Obtains Services of Dr. Genthe, World Famous Expert, to Make Pictures of New Release

IN the new serial “Runaway June,” by George Randolph Chester, now being produced by the Reliance Motion Picture Company, a novel mode of procedure is being adopted.

The Reliance company has realized the necessity of improving pictures from an artistic standpoint, and in its search for a man thoroughly versed in the pictorial side and artistic end of the business, hit upon Dr. Arnold Genthe, whose fame is world-wide as a still photographer.

Dr. Genthe, whose studio is located on Fifth avenue, has made a study for a great many years of light effects and color photography, and he is probably one of the best versed men in America in this particular line.

The minute details of motion picture photography are far too numerous to trust entirely to the average camera man, and Dr. Genthe and his assistants make it a point to study all the conditions surrounding the taking of the various sets used in this production. In other words, before Oscar Eagle, the chief producer of “Runaway June,” even sees a set, Dr. Genthe has had the same in hand and has completed all the details of lighting effects, camera work and such other points as are under his supervision.

HOW LUBIN DIRECTOR AIDED BELGians

Edgar Jones, the Lubin actor-director, hit upon a practical and far-reaching plan by which generous aid could be given the starving Belgians. He personally canvassed hundreds of farmers in his native county in Ohio, and by this means added a full load of foodstuffs to the cargo of the relief ship leaving Thanksgiving Day from Philadelphia.

“SUCH A LITTLE QUEEN” A HIT

Special to Motion Picture News

Mary Pickford in “Such a Little Queen” with a week's run at Moore's Garden did the biggest business that theatre has ever had, going $600 above any previous attraction.

HARRY WOODRUFF SIGNS WITH LASKY

The latest addition to the ranks of the special motion picture stars is Harry Woodruff, who, ever since the days of “Brown of Harvard,” has been one of the most popular actors in America and whose fame has always been especially great with the matinee element. Mr. Woodruff last week signed a contract with the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company whereby he is to play the stellar role in "A Gentleman of Leisure." Mr. Woodruff left for the Lasky studios in Hollywood, Calif., last Saturday. The taking of the picture will begin immediately, as it is already announced for release in February.

“A Gentleman of Leisure,” which is to serve for Mr. Woodruff's entrance into the picture field, had a very successful engagement in its original dramatic form at the Globe theatre about two years ago.

“SHE STOOPS TO CONQUER” A STRONG FILM

The Cosmofotofilm Company was fortunate in securing the London Film Company's four reel comedy, "She Stoops to Conquer." This perennial classic, which has endeared itself to the hearts of millions during the last one hundred and fifty years is well adapted to film presentation.

The producing company has evinced excellent judgment in the selection of a cast for creating the life and spirit of "ye olden time."

Jane Gail, Harry Ainsley and Charles Rock make Goldsmith's famous characters live again. This picture cannot help appealing to the most discriminating audiences. The reader who loves the wonderful old play and has read it time and time again, until the characters seem like living people, will be delighted to see these friends brought to life on the screen.

"SELIB WEEK" IN LOS ANGELES A SUCCESS

ONE of the features that helped to make "Selig Week" at Clune's Broadway Theatre, Los Angeles, a big success was the very excellent photographic lobby display. Three almost life size photographs—actual size 30 x 60 inches—were placed in the frames in the walls on each side of the lobby, while the large frame containing the small photographs designed in an "S" inside the Selig diamond, regularly stood in the center at the front of the lobby.

Manager Harry sticks, of the General Los Angeles Exchange, selected the programme of five subjects and six reels in which all the leading people of the six Selig companies playing at Los Angeles studios appeared. No player appeared in more than one subject.

The photographic lobby display was prepared by the Photoplayer's Studio, of Los Angeles, which makes a specialty of professional photographs, and has one large department devoted exclusively to the preparation of displays for motion picture theatres.

"Selig Week" was originated in compliment to Col. William Selig during his visit to the West Coast studios, and the first evening the program was shown all members of the Selig companies attended the performance in a body, as the guests of W. H. Clune, owner of the theatre.

LOBBY CLOCK PLEASES PATRONS

THE patrons of the Garden Theatre, Battle Creek, Mich., are very much pleased with the management for installing a very fine mahogany clock above the ticket booth in the lobby. Around the sides are beveled glass signs containing advertisements.

AT LEAST FOUR REELS A NIGHT

THE Princess Theatre, Sturgis, Ky., has inaugurated the policy of showing not less than four reels every night. The "Trey o' Hearts" is now running at this house and getting big returns.

PRIZE FOR "AD" DESIGNS

A PRIZE of $25 was awarded by the management of the Delft Theatre in Escanaba, Mich., for the best design submitted to be used on advertising matter.

AMERICAN BEAUTY ROSES FOR AMERICAN FILM

THAT a single reel picture can be featured and made to draw a heavy patronage by clever advertising was proven this week by Joseph Goldberg, manager of the Olympic Theatre, Louisville, who did a big business with "Motherhood," an American Beauty release on the Mutual program. Manager Goldberg, by means of circulars, advertised extensively through his neighborhood that this picture would be shown on a certain day and that to every woman patron an American Beauty rose would be presented. The interest of the women, especially, was aroused and the picture proved a great drawing card.

The Olympic is also conducting a "Missing Syllable" contest which is drawing patrons to the house in large numbers. Several sentences with the syllables of words omitted are shown on the screen and also on the theatre program and patrons are required to supply the missing syllables. A part of the last sentence, with one syllable missing, will not be known until it is shown on the picture screen on the last day of the contest. Tickets to the theatre are the prizes offered.

TWO WAYS OF DOING THE SAME THING; ONLY ONE PAYS

H. ANDERSON, owner of the Clay Theatre, Clay avenue, Detroit, Mich., and the Acme Theatre, Highland Park, has demonstrated the value of making something for nothing cost the receiver a little effort.

Mr. Anderson recently gave pictures of Ford Sterling as souvenirs at each of his theatres. At the Acme the pictures were handed out on a certain night without any previous announcement, and the audience received them languidly.

At the Clay Mr. Anderson announced several days ahead that on a certain night a picture of Ford Sterling would be given to each patron of the theatre. On the night in question the attendance was considerably increased and there was an eager reaching for the pictures on the part of the patrons.

PATRONAGE THROUGH PREMIUMS

THE Gem Theatre at Somerset, Ky., is increasing its patronage considerably by giving away premiums on certain nights of the week.

The only condition attached is that every one receiving a premium shall have in his possession a copy of the Somerset "Herald" of the same date.

Lobby display at Clune's Broadway Theatre, Los Angeles, during "Selig Week"
RHEA HAINES MAKES HIT IN "COUNTRY MOUSE"

Rhea Haines, who plays Nell in the Bosworth production of " Burning Daylight" and Mrs. Van Zandt in "The Pursuit of the Phantom," by the same company, is a young actress who has come into prominence with the series of feature plays released by Bosworth during the past year, and whose beauty and talent have aroused a great deal of favorable comment on every hand.

Miss Haines was born in Indiana, coming to California four years ago to make her home in Los Angeles. A chance visit to the Los Angeles studios with some girl chums resulted in an engagement.

Later she was engaged by Bosworth for Lizzie Connelly, in "Martin Eden," as being an unusually fine type for the role. Her work was so good and her screen appearance so striking that she has continued with the Bosworth company, playing leading parts.

THE UNITED FILM SERVICE IS NOW WELL UNDER WAY

Ludwig G. B. Erb's Company Putting Out Daily Releases of One and Two-Reel Subjects On This Program

THERE United Motion Picture Producers, Inc., which has been organized with Ludwig G. B. Erb as president, has already begun operations under particularly auspicious circumstances.

The United Film Service is distributing the output of the new concern, which is comprised of single and double reel photo-plays. Daily releases are being made and already a month's supply of subjects is ready for the market.

Mr. Erb, it will be recalled, was the first independent manufacturer of films in America. In association with David Forsley he organized, in 1908, the Centaur Film Company.

Mr. Erb next became associated with P. A. Powers, now president of the United Film Service (Warner's Features, Inc.), in the Powers photo-play company and was an important factor in the success that crowned that enterprise.

In 1911 Mr. Erb organized the Crystal Film company, which is one of the units to comprise the newly established program service. The inauguration of the new daily service will not interfere with the United Film Service's feature service, which is being continued as a separate service. The new daily service represents an augmentation of that firm's scope of activities—and a tremendous added responsibility that can be assumed on such short notice and with such complete mastery of detail because of its wonderfully developed facilities.

Among the talent brought under the wing of the United Motion Picture Producers, Inc., are Gene Gauntier, Dot Farley, Ethel Grandin, Charles de Forrest, Natalie De Lontan, Helen Gay, Mary Ainslee, Winna Brown, Florence Gall, Gertrude Graham, Master Gilrod and Grace St. Claire.

Of the above, Gene Gauntier is the leading woman of the Gauntier Feature Players, long a producing arm of Warner's Features, Inc.

Ethel Grandin is the youngest leading woman before the camera. Miss Grandin appeared at different times, in support of Joseph Jefferson, Cecil Spooner and Chauncey Olcott, as well as in vaudeville on the U. B. O. and Orpheum time.

Dot Farley is known to motion picture patrons not only as an actress of superlative qualities, but as a clever devisor of many of the dramas she appears in. Miss Farley is leading woman of the Albuquerque Film Company, producers of the famous Luna Brand.

EDISON PLAYERS SEE THEMSELVES ON SCREEN

An "Edison Night," held at the Regent Theatre, Lenox avenue and 116th street, New York, last week, attracted a large patronage on account of the novelty of the occasion.

Seven Edison players, guests of the evening, enjoyed the curious sensation of seeing themselves on the screen. They were Mabel Tranelle, Gladys Hulette, Miriam Nesbitt, Andy Clark, August Phillips, Herbert Prior and Marc McDermott.

Horace Plympton, director of the studio, and Frank G. Bannon, the press representative of the Edison Company, acted as masters of ceremony.

CHICAGO REEL FELLOWS HOLD DINNER

Chicago, Dec. 1.

The Reel Fellows Club of Chicago held their monthly dinner on Wednesday evening, November 18, in the Italian Room of the Sherman House.

Not only was a large majority of the old members present, but several new names were added to the membership.

President Pearce Addresses the Producers

PRESIDENT MARION S. PEARCE, of the National League, has sent a letter to every film manufacturer in the country pointing out the efficient work of the League and citing the fight against the recent war tax. Mr. Pearce asks for the cooperation of the manufacturers in the efforts being made by the exhibitors in pushing various projects they have in view, and more especially in making the next annual convention and exhibition an unprecedented success.

An opinion is asked as to the selection of the 1915 convention city. The manufacturers were asked to state their preference. Up to date, Mr. Pearce has received replies from nearly all of the leading manufacturers and every letter speaks warmly of the regard in which the exhibitors' organization is held by the manufacturers.

What Exhibitors' League Has Done

A number of suggestions are made as to the choice for a convention city, but the latter will not be made public until after a meeting of the executive committee. This meeting will be held in the very near future, when a city will be decided upon for the 1915 annual meeting of the League.

The letter issued by Mr. Pearce to the manufacturers follows:

"Gentlemen—I feel that I need do no more than remind you that the Exhibitors' League, each and every member of it, sincerely wish the heartiest cooperation possible between you and them. It's a thing you, of course, fully appreciate, and if proofs were necessary I feel that you need but recall the splendid work done by the League at Washington, and the efforts put forth to gain a reduction in the war tax.

"The finance committee (to which this bill was referred) agreed with us that a graded scale was more equitable and fair than a flat rate of taxation, but feared that a graded scale would tend to lessen the revenue from the bill, and that to reap this, in the measure desired, it would be best to include a tax for the manufacturer.

"We fought this to the end, and fought it successfully, as you know, with the result that the League brought out all sorts of influence to eliminate the tax on manufacturers—and it was eliminated!

"The National League will very shortly hold an executive meeting at which one of the important matters will be the choice of the city for the next annual convention and exposition.

Choice of a Convention City

"We want to select a city that will meet the approval of the exhibitors, at the same time, prove agreeable to the manufacturers. We realize fully that in some instances in the past the manufacturers have had honest and just cause for complaint. We're going to avoid all this at our next convention and exhibition. We're going to conduct it along business lines, so it will be a pleasure to every manufacturer to have an exhibit included, and so he will realize some real business benefit from the expense this exhibit has cost him, and make this benefit so large that he'll be glad to have participated in it.

"The convention will be so conducted that it will be a real help; it will be a real budget of helpful information in handy form, and the incidents and various portions of the features of such a nature that an exhibitor may return to his home with valuable information which he can turn into profits in his own business.

"Not the least feature will be the assurance of your having ample time to place your products before him and get in touch with him in a way that is sure to impress him and bring results to you.

"The League is growing! It's growing healthily! Frictions and factions are being eliminated, and amalgamation is going on apace.

"Very truly yours,

"(Signed) Marion S. Pearce, Pres.,

The Censorship Situation in Ohio

"Cleveland, Ohio, Dec. 1, 1914.

"Dear Sir: The elections being over in Ohio, the situation now appears favorable to ridding this free state of ours from the Russianized idea of censorship.

"The proposition to foster this un-American idea through the medium of a proposed so-called 'official trade organ' has been nipped in the bud, at least one of its sponsors having 'backed up' on the official censorship 'medium of communication between the censor and his victim.'

"Just now is the time for the big fellows in New York to 'put up' the necessary funds to scotch and kill the Ohio law by repealing it during the coming session in January.

"We know what the sentiment in Ohio is. It took a lot of hard work and considerable money to conduct a campaign to find it out. Cleveland stood for it all and not one cent would the big manufacturing groups in New York contribute, though an appeal was made to all of them.

"The only individual to subscribe was C. G. Thompson, of the Victor Film Company, of Cleveland.

"Exhibitors are entitled to film under contract without having to fight the state to prove that it is 'clean.'

"The producer, after consenting to the 'cleaning' process through the medium of the National Censor Board, should fight off at their own expense the political grafters of Ohio and elsewhere and leave the exhibitor free from stigma and expense to show their goods 'clean' from the studio.

"Heretofore they, each of them, as manufacturers, have allowed a little group of grafters to proceed as they saw fit.

"Beautiful productions have been mutilated shamefully. Hosts of feature and regular film agents have camped at Columbus awaiting the pleasure of the official 'cleaners' to get their film out.

"Scores of valuable bookings have been canceled through delay. It is a daily occurrence yet for green, out-of-town would-be showmen who never subscribe to trade-papers to phone in 'Where's the Ohio censor leader for film so-and-so that you sent me today?'

TENSE MOMENTS FROM SOME OF THE COMING RELEASES ON THE MUTUAL PROGRAM

Mica Plans National Publicity Campaign
Corporation Will Use 1,800 Daily Newspapers, At an Expense of $500,000 a Year, for Making the Name "Kriterion" Well Known Everywhere

Undoubtedly the greatest surprise hitherto announced of the series of surprises which has marked the development of the Kriterion program is the one announced this week by the Mica Film Corporation, the company producing Kriterion pictures.

A nation-wide advertising and publicity campaign will be commenced immediately by the Mica Film Corporation in hundreds of newspapers all over the United States for the benefit of Kriterion pictures, and the exhibitors who are to use them.

This has been made possible by a contract with the National Newspaper Publishers’ Drama Service Bureau, of New York City, of which Myron C. Fagan is editor-in-chief, and which represents the dramatic departments of approximately 1,800 American newspapers.

Exhibitors are already well acquainted with Mr. Fagan since he became identified with the movement for better pictures and commonsense censorship.

The cost of such a campaign as the Mica Film Corporation contemplates will be, it is estimated by the officers of the company, not less than $500,000 a year. But the results to be obtained justify this expenditure, they declare.

To help the exhibitor make a success of the Kriterion program, to share the advertising and publicity expense with him, is the thought underlying the campaign. In every town where the Kriterion pictures are to be shown there will be advertisements in the newspaper which is a member of Mr. Fagan’s service, introducing Kriterion pictures to the public and announcing the name and location of the theatre which will be the home of the Kriterion program for that vicinity.

Accompanying these advertisements at suitable intervals there will appear reading notices in the columns of these newspapers to acquaint the public and keep them familiar with the Kriterion productions, their stars, plays and qualities.

In this manner the producers of Kriterion pictures will awaken and stimulate the necessary demand for Kriterion films at their own expense, of which the exhibitor who is showing them will reap the profits. The exhibitor will pay nothing extra for this service. It will accompany every Kriterion contract, for the Mica Film Corporation considers that such cooperation between manufacturer and exhibitor is the surest, fairest and most practical method of marketing its product.

Lubin Films Five Features at Same Time

To commence four big features, two of them five reel length and one six, and produce them practically simultaneously, is a feat that is seldom attempted or encouraged among producers. Romaine Fielding, producer, author and leading man for the Lubin company, has accomplished this feat, however.

"In the Hour of Disaster," in five reels, "The Disaster" in five reels, "The Brute in the Jug," in two reels, and "The Valley of Lost Hope" in six reels, are the titles of the plays in question.

Gaskill Writes Vitagraph Play

Charles L. Gaskill has written a new play for the Vitagraph Company, to be produced under his personal direction, and calling for a display in full of the dramatic art of Helen Gardner, and demanding sets of striking originality.

Bliss Milford with August at Kinetophone

Edwin August has started on the first picture which he will make for the Kinetophone Corporation, which he recently joined, and for which he will produce as well as star in several famous stories. Bliss Milford, who has been playing leading roles in the Edison Company for three years, will be leading woman for Mr. August and will appear in his first production for the Kinetophone.

Miss Milford comes to the Kinetophone with a fine record and a long list of films in which she has appeared. During the time that she played with the Edison she appeared in 125 different films, and her roles ran the whole gamut from pathos to broad comedy. She was on the stage for five years previous to going into pictures.

Miss Milford was born in Fargo, North Dakota. Her family removed to New Orleans while she was a young child, and she was later taken to Chicago, where she was educated.
Looking Ahead With The Producers

"The Last Egyptian" to Be Next Alliance Release

CONTRACTS have been signed by Andrew J. Cobo, general manager of the Alliance Film Corporation, and the Oz Film Company, whereby all future productions of the latter concerns are to be released on the Alliance program.

The first offering will be "The Last Egyptian." This picture is a radical departure from anything yet produced by the Oz company. It will be released December 7.

The film tells a strong and well constructed dramatic story of modern Egypt. L. Frank Baum, who wrote the scenario and put the picture on, proves that he is as adept and ingenious as a dramatic producer as he is a creator of fantastic romances of Ozland.

Mr. Baum has given the picture magnificent settings. An agreement has been arrived at between the two firms whereby Mr. Baum is to produce popular plays and novels to be selected by the Alliance heads.

Mr. Cobo, in speaking of this clause in the contract, said: "This will eliminate the making of productions for which there are no markets. Through our exchanges we keep a close watch upon the pulse of public demand, and we trust that we will be able to know whether the public want a picture before it is made and not afterwards.

Real Dinosaurs Bones for McCay Comedy

Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Box Office Attractions Company, through the good offices of the directors of the Museum of Natural History, secured the use of the classic museum building as a setting for some of the scenes in the unique Winsor McCay comedy, "Gertie, the Dinosaur.

The skeleton of the dinosaur on exhibition at the museum is an extraordinary specimen. The bones weigh about a ton, and it stretches almost the entire length of the museum floor. There are more than four hundred separate joints to the skeleton framework of this pre-historic monster. Winsor McCay's "Gertie" shows what a dinosaur may have done in the dark past and what it would do were it living in the immediate present.

Besides Winsor McCay, Roy McCardell, the humorist, and George McManus, of Newlywood fame, appear in the picture.

CAST FOR "LAST CHAPTER" IS ANNOUNCED

The cast for the January release of the Favorite Players production, "The Last Chapter," for the Alliance program, has been announced by Director William Taylor, which includes Carlyle Blackwell, Ruth Hartman, Ollie Kirkby, Mrs. Pratt, John J. Sheehan, Henry Korman, and William Brunton.

FAMOUS PLAYERS SECURES BARRYMORE TO APPEAR IN BROADWAY SUCCESS

The Famous Players Film Company has secured two such noted stage successes as "Are You a Mason?" and "The Dictator," in which they will present their popular star, John Barrymore, who made his first appearance in motion pictures in the Famous Players production, "An American Citizen," and who achieved an unusual comedy triumph in that company's recent release, "The Man From Mexico.

"Are You a Mason?" and "The Dictator" were selected as vehicles for Mr. Barrymore for the reason that they represent, more than any other comedies of a similar reputation, the type of dramatic humor best adapted to the inimitable talents of this star.

YACHT SUNK FOR LUBIN PRODUCTION

The sinking of a Herreshoff steam yacht off Jacksonville, Florida, and the plunge of a touring car from a wharf into the ocean are two of the sensational features of the two-reel photoplay "The Man from the Sea," which is released by the Lubin Manufacturing Company, December 10.

"The Man from the Sea" was written by Charles Goddard and Paul Dickey, authors of "The Ghost Breaker" and "The Misleading Lady" and was adapted for the camera by George Terwilliger, of the Lubin staff of directors.

In order to get the proper background for the story, Mr. Lubin sent a special company to Florida.
TERRISS PUTS ON "A MAN'S SHADOW"

Tom Terriss has started work at the Kinotophone studios at Coney Island on the first of the series of famous Terriss plays, which will produce and star in the Kinotophone. He chose "A Man's Shadow," which he wrote for his father, the great William Terriss of the London stage.

ANNA LUTHER

Anna Luther, who has been a Lubin star for more than a year and who previous to that was a member of the old Reliance Company, where she went to leads within two months after having been cast for her first screen drama, has been chosen by Mr. Terriss to play opposite to him in the new piece. She will have the part of the wife in "A Man's Shadow."

Miss Luther is not only known for her beauty, which gained her the titles "The Poster Girl" and "The Fifth Avenue Girl," but also for the many daring things which she has done in pictures. She was born in Newark, N. J., not so very many years ago and went in for pictures about two and half years ago.

BALBOA ENGAGES DOROTHY GRANVILLE

Contract has been made by Messrs. Horkheimer, of the Balboa company, at Long Beach, Calif., with Miss Dorothy Granville, well-known legitimate stage star, to play leads in their feature productions, and the first in which she takes part will shortly be taken up. The company is now having elaborate sets made.

Miss Dorothy Granville's first appearance on the stage was in San Francisco, following her common school education and two years at Wellesley College, in Massachusetts, where she became a member of the Alcazar Theatre Stock Company, playing ingenue and character parts. Later she played with the Kolb & Dill Company at Fisher's Theatre, in the same city. Next she played an important part in the Mort Singer Company's production of "His Highness, The Bey."

THE ALCO ANNOUNCES SCHEDULE OF RELEASES

The Alco Film Corporation, under the guidance of its new directorate, with President Walter Hoff Seely at the helm, announces a long list of high class releases beginning with the Popular Plays and Players production of "The Tigress," which, with Madame Olga Petrova, will be shown Monday, December 7.

Through the producing companies affiliated with the Alco, the following high class plays and acknowledged stars will be introduced to the screen:

December 21, Mack Sennett's production of the exhilarating comedy, "Tillie's Punctured Romance," in which Marie Dressler, Charles Chaplin and Mabel Normand are featured.

"SIGN OF THE CROSS" RELEASED DECEMBER 21

The Famous Players have decided to change the release date of the spectacular film version of Wilson Barrett's immortal drama, "The Sign of the Cross," originally scheduled for release in February, to December 21. The change was made because of the peculiar appropriateness of the subject as a pre-Christmas release.

The Famous Players impressive production of this sublime drama created a furor throughout England, where it was released during the summer in order to fill booking dates secured as early in advance of the production as last February.

"The Sign of the Cross," derived from the symbol which to scores of millions has for many centuries borne so profound a significance, has been filmed by the Famous Players with an extravagance of scenic and spectacular effects and a faithfulness to the original settings and atmosphere seldom seen in motion pictures. For the most part it glows with coloring, as befits a fearless picture of life in the Rome of the Emperor Nero. It would be impossible to over-estimate the emotional power of the film. In the role of Marcus Superbus, William Farnum attains the loftiest dramatic heights of his career. Miss Rosina Henley makes a sweet and womanly Mercia.
AL JOHNSON, for the past year sales-aman for the General Film Company, Los Angeles branch, has been transferred to the Denver exchange, and has departed for that place.

Charles Cochard, who has been manager of the poster department of the Los Angles general exchange, has resigned and will return East, and W. H. Hepburn, manager of the projecting machine department, will in the future superintend both the projection and the mutilion departments.

Arthur Lamb, auditor for Warner's Features, Inc., is spending a couple of weeks at the Los Angeles exchange at 572 West
Eighth street, with Manager G. R. Sirwell.

Leon D. Neter, manager of the San Francisco exchange of the Alco Film Corporation of California, spent the past week here getting acquainted with the methods of Manager E. H. Emmick, and making a general study of the conditions regarding feature films.

Upon the release date of the two latest serial pictures, "The Master Key," Universal, and "Zudora," Thanhouser Film Corporation, Los Angeles exchanges reported very successful booking, both having contracts with thirty odd theatres for the use of these pictures.

"The serial picture has been very successful with us," Dave Bershon, manager of the Los Angeles branch of the California Film exchanges, said. "We are still making booking for the first number of 'Lucile

Love,' and the demand for 'The Trey o' Heaven' is nothing but extra, and we have all our inquirers here booked as good as with the others. Among the improvements is a fireproof vault with storage capacity for about 2000 films.

EMIL C. JENSEN, for three years with the Kinemacolor Company of America, first in New York, and then as branch office manager in Chicago, goes back to the Chicago field, with which he is well acquainted, on November 30, as assistant to Felix Feist, the general manager of the Celebrated Players Film Company.

Mr. Jensen, while still a young man, is pulling himself forward, and recently he was the senior partner in the Feature Booking Office of Brooklyn.

J. G. CONNER, the Thanhouser representative in the Louisville territory has just closed contracts with eighteen motion picture theatres in Louisville for the serial production "Zudora." Simultaneously with the release of the films in installments of the story of the play will appear in the "Louisville Times." The first installment of the play was shown Monday, November 23.

MORGAN BUYS INTEREST IN LOS ANGELES EXCHANGE

O. V. TRAGGARDH, owner of the Union Film and Supply Company, with main office at San Francisco and branch in Los Angeles, was here this week looking after local conditions. Incidentally he made the announcement that W. J. Morgan, pioneer film exchange man of the west coast, has purchased an interest in and will take charge of the Los Angeles exchange, December 7.

Mr. Morgan is perhaps one of the best known men engaged in the film renting business. He engaged in this business here ten years ago, at that time being connected with the Edison Display Company. This company later became the Amalgamated Film Exchange, which was taken over by the General company. When the General took over the business Mr. Morgan went to Australia, where he spent a year, and has since been general manager of the Pacific Mutual exchanges at Seattle, Portland and Spokane.

The sale of film of interest in this exchange was made by Mr. Traggardh, who is president and general manager of the Supreme Feature Film Company, of San Francisco, in order that he would be in position to give more time to the sale of feature films by state rights. At this time the company is marketing "Beasts of the Jungle," a very unusual wild animal picture made by the E. & R. Jungle Film Company, of Los Angeles.

ALLIANCE INVADES CANADA

ANDREW J. COBE, general manager of the Alliance Films Corporation, has just returned from Montreal where he has made arrangements with the Noted Players Feature Film Company, to handle all Alliance releases in the Dominion. J. D. Goldberg, the head of the Noted Players, will shortly have in addition to the Montreal exchange, fully equipped offices in Toronto and Winnipeg. These are to be followed by other branches in the larger Canadian centres.

The projected offices will be located in St. John's, Calgary and Regina. The St. John's office will handle the Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward's Island territory. Winnipeg will take care of the Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia.

UNITED FILM SERVICE OPENS TOLEDO OFFICE

THE United Film Service has established a branch office in Toledo, Ohio. The new exchange is located at 413 Summit street and is in charge of Bert Diener. Expansion of business has dictated the establishment of the new office, which brings the list of United Film Service exchanges up to 43.

WEST WANTS UNITED PROGRAM

C. WOOLF, manager of Warner's Features, Inc., in Kansas City, is wearing the "smile that won't come off." He has accepted the inter-mountain territory for his firm, and reports a big demand for the new United Program.

Los Angeles Exhibitors Fight City Supervision

Proposed Change in Charter of Coast City Would Bring Theatres Under Autocratic Rule of a "Manager"—Slide Campaign Has Begun

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Nov. 30.

In addition to the usual bills relative to motion pictures and theatres to be introduced at the coming session of the California legislature, Los Angeles and Los Angeles county motion picture theatre men are facing proposed local legislation of a very drastic and undesirable character, which means placing all motion picture films and theatres under the supervision of the police department.

On December 31 the citizens will vote on whether the city should adopt the "manager" system, and broaden the scope of the present city charter. Should the proposed change be favored by a majority of the voters, the questions provide that there shall be a manager of the police department who shall supervise all saloons, billiard and dance halls and motion picture theatres, as well as inspect all films to be shown in the city.

The bills as presented to the voters provide further that this manager shall have the power to censor any subject, reel or portion of a reel of motion pictures, and personally regulate the motion picture theatres.

This proposed legislation further provides for the disposal of the moneys and board of censors, which was established three years ago by an ordinance adopted by the city council.

The matter was the principal subject discussed at the special meeting of the local Exhibitors' League, held November 25, and plans were formulated and will be completed at the next regular meeting, for a very strenuous campaign against the measures. Inasmuch as the censor board, of which Judge A. P. Tugwell, president of the League, is president, it is the desire of all that present conditions should continue.

By the time this issue reaches the readers of the News all exhibitors of this country, numbering 150 or more, will be showing at their theatres various slides pointing out the injustice of the proposed municipal and county legislation.

Complaints were made by exhibitors at the special meeting of the League concerning one local film exchange cutting off service and giving it to another exhibitor who offered higher prices, without first affording the first user an opportunity to meet the bid of the second. A special committee was appointed to investigate the charges, and if conditions warrant, members will probably boycott this exchange unless assurance is given that speedy repARATION will be made.

How "Productions Extraordinary" Are Made

Realism to a Startling Degree Attends William Farnum's Action in "Samson," Now Being Filmed for William Fox at Jersey City Studios

MAURICE BRACHARD, William Farnum, star of "Ben Hur," "The Littlest Rebel," "The White Sister," "Ingomar" and countless classical productions, was having his knuckles "taped" in one corner of the big Pathé studios in Jersey City, now leased by the William Fox Box Office Attraction Company, preparing Smashing in with his fists a heavy door. The play, being filmed under the direction of Producer Edgar Lewis, was Henri Bernstein's "Samson."

Three cameras were posted to take the door-smashing stunt for a re-take. Ten of the busiest stage hands employed in the studio braced themselves against the back of the set, representing an upper hall in Brachard's (Samson's) home. Mr. Farnum, with a "house-breaking" matrimonial growth vividly depicted on his features, grimly marched up the stairway to the boudoir door. First came a gentle knocking from importunate hubby on the closed portal, a sort of hint as it were. Then ensued the assault of the big siege guns in the form of an angry battering. This bringing to rest the handle of the bar was violently rattled.

"Now let her have it!" yelled Mr. Lewis. Bing! Bang! "Ouch!" Arnia was sent for and, after his bruised knuckles had been bathed, Mr. Farnum resumed his search for his "wife," played by Maud Gilbert.

The above is just a sample of the thoroughness with which every detail in the William Fox Productions Extraordinary are carried out. The three big studios permit of productions being built with thoroughness. Light, after all the most important element entering into photography, be it "still" or "motion," is a question that has been attended to by artistic executives and as the studios are comparatively new they have the advantage of possessing practically the very latest developments in this science. Recently three big sets were staged at once in the No. 1 studio and three directors worked on as many scenes without conflict over space or light.

Since the Box Office Attraction Company took possession of the studios such famous stars as Charles Richman, William Farnum, Robert Edeson, Edmund Breese, Stuart Holmes, Walter Hitchcock, Dorothy Donnelly, Catherine Countiss, Claire Whitney, Maud Gilbert, Maud Turner Gordon and many others have appeared within their walls.

YOU CAN'T FAIL to find what you want in MOTION PICTURE NEWS because MOTION PICTURE NEWS IS MADE TO MEET EVERY ONE OF YOUR WANTS BY MEN WHO KNOW WHAT YOUR WANTS ARE.
Eighty per cent. of the exhibitors of Los Angeles and vicinity are members, and both Judge A. P. Tugwell, the President, and Mr. Cory, who is also state secretary, expect that every motion picture theatre manager will be one of them before the campaign is concluded.

It is a fact of further significance that before the arrival of Mr. Cory in Los Angeles, there were no less than three exhibitor organizations in that city.

He accomplished a triple amalgamation, working with the officers of the local, and merged the factions into a single group.

* * *

With no fanfare or ostentation, but with a quiet determination of purpose that is irresistible, similar work is being done in many other quarters of the field. The effects of it are already beginning to be felt. The right note seems this time to have been struck.

Well may President Pearce and his associates confidently assert that the League is growing, and growing healthily. Healthy growth is permanent growth. The foundations of an enduring exhibitors' organization are being built upon to good purpose.

The Boycott on Fake War Films

One of the best indications of the healthy condition of the motion picture industry, and the general attitude of those engaged in it—that the days of underhanded methods are passed—is seen in the welcome absence of fake war pictures.

Many extremely interesting views are shown each week on the various news pictorials, but it is seldom that any of these purport to show actual fighting. It is a comparatively easy matter to turn out fake fighting scenes.

In fact, it can be done so well that were ideals in the business as loose as they were some years ago this would be done constantly.

* * *

The film industry is to be congratulated for this stand even more strongly in view of the actions of important newspapers. Only a few days ago a famous evening paper in New York printed a photograph of a Russian battleship which it reported sunk. It was shown immediately afterward that there was never any such a vessel in the Russian navy.

Besides this, nearly all of the papers are publishing views which the experienced eye can see are simply posed somewhere on the outskirts of the armies.

Photography is destined to play an important part in recording the history of this great war, but thousands of spurious pictures will have to be sorted from the genuine. It is a credit to the motion picture industry that it has supplied few or none of these falsified records.

Building a Christmas Issue

In building the Christmas issue of Motion Picture News, it has been our aim to give an artistic issue to an industry in which the artistic rules.

Other trades, in which art production is much less or not at all a factor, are favored with journals often distinguished by pleasing color covers, inserts and pages. In particular, the advertising pages are illuminated by fine color schemes and layouts.

It would seem that the advertisers of quality pictures, above advertisers of almost any product, deserve and should have this decided advantage.

This is the idea back of the Christmas issue of Motion Picture News, dated December 19. It is a good idea and a laudable one; and we are pleased that the trade so regards it. It will be a notable issue.
CLEVER DOUBLE EXPOSURE IN "OUR MUTUAL GIRL"

An interesting bit of double exposure was recently performed in "Our Mutual Girl, No. 43," which has deviated somewhat from the paths of the former reels, inasmuch as Norma Phillips, who plays the part of Margaret, the Mutual Girl, admirably portrays two parts in this insinuation.

The scenes are laid in an actual silk mill located in Paterson, N. J., and deals with a striking resemblance between Margaret and the factory forewoman. Margaret, when she discovers this resemblance, decides to uncover a plot laid to destroy the finances of her sweetheart.

The particularly interesting double exposures are when the forewoman, which is played by Margaret, passes in front of Margaret herself as the Mutual Girl, and this is considered the first time that a double exposure has ever been taken wherein a character passes over the line.

ENGAGE CAST FOR "ARE YOU A MASON?"

The Famous Players have gathered an important cast of Broadway favorites in support of John Barrymore in the forthcoming production, "Are You a Mason?" Leo Ditrichstein's successful farce. This cast includes Alfred Hickman, who created the original "Billy" in the stage presentation of this play, Charles Dixon, Charles Butler, Ida Waterman, Dodson Mitchell, Helen Freeman, Jean Acker, Lorraine Huling, Harold Lockwood, Kitty Baldwin.

OLDEST AMERICAN ACTOR IN WORLD FILM PHOTOPLAY

W. J. Ferguson, who appears in his original role of Pop Clarke in the playhouse version of "The Deep Purple," in which Clara Kimball is starring, under the direction of the World Film Corporation, has the honor of being the oldest American actor on the stage. He is the sole surviving member of the cast that supported Laura Keene at Ford's Theatre, Washington, the night President Lincoln was assassinated.

FAMOUS PLAYERS RE-ISSUE LOBBY BULLETINS

Upon the requests of many exhibitors throughout the country, the Famous Players Film Company have recontinued the publication and issue of the special lobby bulletins which were sent in advance of this company's releases last year. Beginning with the release of "The Conspiracy," exhibitors can again obtain these bulletins by sending a request to the Famous Players Film Company, or at their local exchanges.

Flamingo Prize Film Released December 20

"Without Hope," by Elaine Sterne, One of the Winners of the Chartered Theatres Contest, to Be Brought Out by Comedy Company

THE Flamingo Film Company announces dates for its first releases, beginning on December 20 with Elaine Sterne's comedy drama in four reels entitled "Without Hope." This comedy was awarded the second prize in the Morning Telegraph Chartered Theatres' Corporation National Scenario Contest, which closed September 15.

The dramatic features of the story are built around a conspiracy on the part of spies employed by a foreign government to steal from the inventor his formula for noiseless gunpowder about to be tested by the United States government.

Fred Mace is the producer of "Without Hope," and surrounded himself with a notable company of players. Marguerite Loveidge, one of the best known players for the film drama, was specially engaged for the part of Hope. Mary Charleson, of vitagraph fame, was given the important role of Irene, daughter of the inventor and sweetheart of the playwright, Van Alstyn. Both Miss Loveidge and Miss Charleston will be seen at their best advantage.

The advent of Catherine Proctor, famous as a Belasco star of many seasons in "Paid in Full," "The Easiest Way" and "The Governor's Lady," in each of which she played the leading part, into motion pictures, is made in "Without Hope." William Mandeville, Caroline Rankin, David Andradak, Johnny Doyle, Gertrude Barrett and Harry Kendall were entrusted with the other leads for the comedy in which 104 persons appear.

The settings of the comedy were all manufactured expressly for it. The exteriors, largely taken along the Hudson, present some magnificent views of the river and highlands, both by day and by night.

The second release under the Flamingo brand will be Carolyn Wells' farce comedy Mr. David Miles, of Los Angeles, with a picked cast for its interpretation.

The February release of the Flamingo company will be Roy McDowell's satirical comedy, "A Jay in Peacock Alley," given first prize in the national scenario contest. Under Flamingo brand will shortly be announced a series of single reel comedies, extensive preparations for which are now under way.

D'ARCY LECTURES ON PHOTO MOTION

On Thanksgiving Eve H. A. D'Arcy, publicity man of the Lubin company, delivered a lecture to five hundred members of the National Commercial Gas Association at the Y. M. C. A. Building in Philadelphia. Mr. D'Arcy described "The Origin, the Evolution and Development of Photo Motion." The audience gave earnest attention to the speech and rewarded the reader with considerable applause.

After the lecture Mr. D'Arcy, by request, read his famous poem, "The Face Upon the Floor."

AUGUST AT BOSTON BALL

Edwin August, who is now being starred in features produced by the Kinetophone, attended the Exhibitors' Ball in Boston on December 2, as representative of the Kinetophone, accompanied by Hal August.
In and Out of Los Angeles Studios

Henry Walthall, universally spoken of by members of the Los Angeles motion picture colony as one of the greatest dramatic actors of the celluloid drama, now in the East on a vacation of two months, has accepted an offer made him by E. D. and H. M. Horkheimer, owners of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company, at Long Beach, to appear exclusively in their features for a term of three years, and is to reach Los Angeles to take up his work there by December 15.

Mr. Walthall is to be starred in the Balboa features, according to the plans now being made, and will appear only in multiple reel features from copyrighted novels and well known successful plays, rights on which have been secured by this company.

Just now negotiations are being made for a director for the Walthall company and also a leading woman to play opposite him in some of the features. At this time the parties have been contracted, but owing to orders being given for the preparation of a special dressing room for Mr. Walthall, this will be made as comfortable and cozy as possible and fitted with all conveniences possible.

Isadore Bernstein, besides entertaining President Laemmle, reading all the company mail, giving the official O. K. to all acceptable scenarios, seeing all finished pictures, superintending the construction of the new Universal City, keeping all fourteen companies working at the Hollywood studio, and the nine hundred and ninety-nine other matters pertaining to the management of the U. M. I. interests, has written a two-reel photoplay story, which has been put into scenario form by Bess Meredith, under the title “What a Woman Will Do.”

In his play Cleo Madison is to be the woman, and the direction will be in charge of Wilfred Lucas. Joe King is the juvenile lead, Edward Sloman the heavy, and Ray Hanford is playing the character part.

Filming of “Custer’s Last Scout,” featuring Alfred L. Chapman, the only white man to escape from the Custer massacre, was begun the early part of last week by the Henry McRea company.

Bess Meredith is the cause of Murdock MacQuarrie making hurried changes recently. He played a character part in one and doubled in the juvenile lead parts of another one reeler produced by Charles Gilby. In “The Last Performance” he was the hypnotist of a tank town wagon show when the showman with the lead player’s aged wife was dangerously ill. “The Fulfilling of the Law” is a drama with an unusual story, in which an invalid twin brother takes the place of the other twin being held for trial on the charge of murder, into which a pretty love story is worked and the cruelties heaped upon working girls depicted.

New Features of Rex Company

Five new features are promised in the two-reel subject, “The Game of Chess,” being filmed by the Frank Lloyd Rex brand company, written by Ruth Ann Baldwin, from a suggestion of Publicity Man Bebee of the U studio, who spent five years with a Mexican government surveying corps. Gretchen Lederer plays the character part of a senorita, and other members are Mark Horkheimer previously made agreements they are to finish work in which they are engaged.

The contract with Mr. Walthall was made after four weeks of wiring back and forth across the continent. The exact terms of the instrument are not made known, but friends intimately in touch with the actor, who in fact served as his local representatives, state the salary is larger than that stipulated in any contract of Los Angeles photoplayers.

In Mr. Walthall’s career in pictures he has been far more successful than on the stage, owing to opportunities. He was first featured in the big productions of an Eastern manufacturer. Among his greatest successes of the past year are the lead parts in “The Classmates,” “Home Sweet Home,” “The Gangsters” and “The Avenging Conscience,” all of which have been received by the greatest men of the trade as masterpieces. Especially is this true of the latter named subject. Mr. Walthall’s last work in Los Angeles was that of playing the lead part in the coming release “The Clansman.”

As soon as the telegram accepting the terms of the Balboa owners was received,
American girl. Finding all is not gold that glitter he returns to his own family, who have come in search of him.

The U comedy makers are all busy. Al Christie is making "When His Lordship Proposed"; Eddie Lyons, "For the Good of the Cause"; Allen Curtis, "Christmas Festivities"; and Jack Blystone, "All’s Well That Ends Well," for Nestor and Joker release.

Calder Johnston, scenario editor for "The Master Key," and incidentally chap-erone for the company, arrived home the first of week from San Francisco, where exteriors for fifth, sixth and seventh episodes were made. From photographs replicas of interior scenes of the famous Maux hotel at the Golden Gate city have been built on the U stage and the players are now working at these sets.

At San Francisco scenes were taken at Golden Gate Park, the Japanese Gardens, the famous Cliff House, the beaches, Chinatown, and for a night scene the harbor commission lighted Fairy tower, and in this connection with Market street was taken at the same time.

It has been decided to make the "Campbells Are Coming," the picture of the East India war and incidents leading up to it of but four reels, and to release a week prior to this a two-reel picture introducing the characters and giving a prologue to the war features. The two-reel picture is being made under the title "The Curse of the Chicago after spending four weeks at the coast studios, and witnessing the filming of many of the important scenes of "The Rosary." The last of the Irish village pictures were completed the first of last week and all members of the troop taking part believe the most wonderful pictures of Selig films have been made.

At Portuguese Bend the village was built back fully two miles from the ocean shore, on the tops of Malibu ranch hills, and in all the street scenes the ocean—two miles distant—will form the back ground. Just as the camera was ready to film a scene of the mother of Father Kelly waving goodbye to her son as he departed for America, a big ocean steamer move into sight and added an additional feature to the scene as it majestically moved across the range of the camera. The Selig company has a number of goats, donkeys, pigs and other animals—no snakes—used in the Irish village scenes for sale.

Preparing for Rainy Season

General Manager Edmund Mitchell and players of the Climax company have completed filming the first production, "Lone Star Rush," and the photographic plant is now making the first print, which will have a private showing within the next few days. The laboratories are in charge of Gene Guissart and E. I. Sherman. The former was with the Me.‘s company, and Mr. Sherman recently left the local Majestic studio.

Los Angeles studio managers are making preparations for the rainy season which is due most any time now. On the Lasky lot a glass-steel-concrete studio with floor space for a stage 60 x 60 feet is being built, and when completed will give the company a stage 60 x 160 feet. Other improvements made necessary by the addition of another company are two long rows of dressing rooms.

The Climax company, 1225 Lillian Vay, is having plans made for a glass studio, and this will be completed by the first of the year.

The New York Motion Picture Company studio at Santa Monica, the Keystone studio on Allesandro street, and the Sterling Motion Picture company studio in Hollywood have all been equipped with Winfield Kerner electric lights, which will make it possible to keep busy no matter how many clouds hide California’s Old Sol.

Bosworth, Inc., is also building an additional stage made necessary by a third company, and will have the studio equipped for day and night work.

At the Majestic-Reliance studio two new buildings are being erected. One will contain about one hundred large dressing rooms and another is a two-story structure to be used as a work room for the carpenters and paper mache workers. The latter

Beranger Has Own Company

George A. Beranger, who for two years and a half has been assistant to D. W. Griffith, with the Biograph, and since with the Majestic, has been given a company, and this week began directing. His first picture will be a two-reel Majestic release, "The Baby’s Ride," featuring Wallace Reid and Loretta Blake. This will show the experience of a two-year old, whom the parents believe has been kidnapped, but later found amid pleasant scenes playing with other children.

building is equipped with all kinds of machinery to be found in a saw or planing mill and is modern in every respect.

The first Smalley-Bosworth picture featuring Elsie Janss was completed last week, and has been named "The Caprices of Kitty." The story for this, by Miss Janss herself, gives the popular actress wonderful opportunity to display her talent. Some exceptional features have been introduced in this subject, which will reflect great credit on both Miss Janss and her director, Phillips Smalley, and no doubt prove one of the popular releases of the Paramount program. The company has taken up the filming of the second picture, featuring Miss Janis. The story for this, like the first one, is by the actress, with scenario by Lois Weber (Mrs. Smalley).

Hobart Bosworth, who has been ill for four weeks, suffering with nervous prostration, is again at the studio, engaged in completing the four-reel picture from the Charles Van Loan Western story, "Buckshot John."

Public Opening of Selig Zoo

Plans are now being made for the public opening of the Selig Jungle Zoo, the site of which has been set for January 1, at which time Col. William M. Selig will again come to Los Angeles to see that the event is properly exploited for the benefit of an appreciative public.

Director Tom Santschi and his company were filming last week a two-reel East India story written by James Oliver Curwood, "The Red Blood of Courage." The plot revolves about the kidnapping of an English girl by East Indians and her recovery. There will be a number of big scenes in this, for which special sets are being made. The leads are played by Bes- sie Eyton and Mr. Santschi.

A one-reel drama with an unusual twist is being made under the direction of E. A. Martin at the Selig Zoo. The working title of this is "The Prima Donna's Mother," and features Miss Marion Warren. The story is by Nellie Brown Duff, a scenario writer of considerable power.

"The Van Norton Diamonds" is the name of a two-reel gentleman crook and detective story being filmed by Frank J. Grandon for the Selig program. In this Franklin Hall plays the heavy, and the other leads are Lamar Johnstone and Edith Johnson.

A straight comedy, "The Lady Killer," which has an underlying thought, is being filmed under the direction of Norval MacGregor at the Selig studio. The title promises a treat for the public.

The second release of the Masterpiece company, "The Truth Wagon," a newspaper story, was completed last week. The release date has been fixed for December 21. The company will next film the modern novel "Jack Chanty," by a well known author, and scenario for this is now nearing completion in the office of Elliott Clavoson.

Servant Problem Worked Out

The servant problem has received attention at the Majestic in the making of a one-reel picture, "The Better Way," under direction of Christy Cabanne. Dorothy Gish interprets the role of a servant girl, and Fred Turner is in his familiar character part of Father. In addition to giving light on the domestic help question, the picture will show the troubles of the young girl in reformatting her parent, an ex-convict.

A very unusual mob scene was filmed by Donald Crisp, when he found he had but one more set to finish "His Lesson," a two-reeler for Majestic release. No extras were to be found so he called all the heads of departments and everyone else at the studio in to take part. Included were F. E. Woods, scenario manager; Directors Griffith, Cabanne, Dillon, Mackley, Kelsey and O'Brien; three or four cameramen.

including Billy Bitmeir, who made his first appearance before the lens. Crisp is authorized for the statement that every one of his mob belongs to the class known as "lens lice."

The picture story is one dealing with a young man of poverty, but with an ambition to rise that he may be in position to justify his asking the woman of his choice—surrounded by wealth—to become his bride. In his early manhood days he turned away from his sweetheart because she was poor. When he is overtaken by misfortune, he is brought to realize the fickleness of society, and then learns his sweetheart, though plain, is true. Big George Seigmann, Billie West and Vester Peg play the leading parts—except in the mob scenes. It is a story with a big idea, and will make people think.

"Last of the Line"

A military story, "The Last of the Line," is being filmed at the New York Motion Picture company studio by Jay Hunt. The story is built around an Indian legend, and portrays the craftsmanship of an Indian chief, whose son breaks the father's promise by attacking the white settlers. When the chief discovers this he slays his son, and then to hide his disgrace, convinces the garrison at the fort that the son was shot by the Indians while he was protecting the paymaster. There are none to disprove the story.

The first picture to be completed under the direction of William S. Hart, recent addition to the New York studio directing force, is "The Passing of Two-Gun Hicks," in two reels. This may be classed as a character sketch of a particularly deadly type of gun fighters, now extinct in the West, in which the director plays the title role. A love interest is carried through the story. In the cast are Arthur Maude, Leons Hutton, and Barney Sherry, players suitably cast for the parts.

Inceville Studio's Fire Department

The Inceville studio now has a regular organized fire department and modern equipment of every necessary sort, with the exception of bells for the fire hose truck. Every Wednesday is fire drill day, and the laddies will have opportunity to show their ability in fighting flames when a dwelling house, now being built, will be lighted and burned for the making of a picture. When the camera stops, however, the members of the department have been advised, it will not mean that they may stop. Instead they must extinguish the fire.

Frank F. Woods is the author of "Rays of Sunshine," filmed last week by Director Jack O'Brien, and featuring Mary Alden, assisted by Jack Conway and Spottiswoode Aitken. The story deals with the ups and downs of an ex-convict railroaded to prison. Forced by an adventurer to rob the home of his employer, the ex-convict revolts at the last moment. This incident, staged in a new and thrilling manner, makes a very remarkable climax for this subject.

BOX OFFICE RELEASE A "BEST SELLER"

It is asserted on good authority that these two "best sellers" ran up sales to 2,000,000 copies. Victoria Cross is a nom de plume; her real name is Harriet B. Rogers. Her publishers have instructions not to give out any information regarding her private life nor to publish photographs.

It is generally known, however, that Miss Rogers is well connected in English social life and that she is the head of a private school for girls. She is very active in sociological work.

"CINDERELLA" TO BE FAMOUS PLAYERS XMAS RELEASE

When the Famous Players included in a recent announcement of forthcoming productions, Mary Pickford in a subject entitled, "The Step sister," the company termed it "a genuine surprise." Just how much of a surprise it is, was recently disclosed when it was explained that "The Step sister" is nothing else than a modern and original version of the century-old classic, "Cinderella." The subject is to appear on the Paramount Program December 28, and is described as the Paramount Christmas release.

GREAT NORTHERN RELEASES NEW "GAR EL HAMA" FILM

The picture is especially interesting in that its central character is one which figured in two former Great Northern releases about two years ago, at which time the hero attained great popularity.

THE WHEAT PIT SCENE FROM "THE PIT" (World Film)

The biggest interior scene ever made anywhere was produced at the World Film studio at Fort Lee, New Jersey, on Saturday, November 28, by Director Maurice Tourneur. It was the board of trade scene in the Wilton Lackaye photo-play based on the great stage success, "The Pit."

Five hundred men took part in the picture, and Director Tourneur secured the services of sixty brokers from Wall street, the New street curb, the Consolidated Exchange and the New York Stock Exchange. These brokers were under the direction of P. C. Mullen, 51 Exchange street.

Several of the brokers had bought and sold wheat in the very pit which was being reproduced for the camera in the pit scenes. Forty Western Union and Postal messenger boys were used to add to the realism of the settings.

Wilton Lackaye recently made a special trip to Chicago and took special scenes on the floor of the famous wheat pit there, in order to obtain the exact atmosphere for the spectacle.

"FALSE COLORS" MAKES TRUE PICTURE OF LIFE

"False Colors" is so named from the fact that practically every character of importance in the cast is laboring under false impressions of life. The story affords all the players an unlimited chance for the expression of human emotions. Similar to others of Miss Weber's conception the plot tends to teach a lesson; this one the uselessness of appearing under false colors before the world.

Miss Weber, who appears in a dual role, that of Mrs. Moore in love with the theatrical star Lloyd Phillips, and her daughter. Mr. Smalley is cast for the part of Phillips. Adele Farrington is said to be as good as ever in the role of the housekeeper. Courtney Foote appears as the unprincipled son, and Herbert Standing is the playwright. Others in the cast are Charles Marriott, Dixie Carr, Roberta Hickman, Will Harrison, Fred Wilson and Marjorie Watt.

The camera work under the direction of Dal Clawson is said to be unusually excellent. One scene in particular, showing the interior of a theatre, is well photographed and effective.
"THE SEATS OF THE MIGHTY"
(Colossal-World—Seven Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

SIR GILBERT PARKER'S novel, "The Seats of the Mighty," as adapted for the screen, forms a picture which, according to the standard of historical productions, is far out of the ordinary. In the first place, instead of being mainly historical, with a group of long since forgotten political personages continually in the foreground, it is mainly a story. And in the second place it is a story of the most thrilling variety with a plot often seen nowadays but doubtless quite original at the time of its creation. Handled as it is, it retains all its power.

Unavoidable difficulties are always present in a picture laid in another time, more especially when it is historical in nature, but they have been overcome by the producer of "The Seats of the Mighty." The great number of characters introduced in the first reel is slightly confusing, the more so because their wearing apparel is almost alike. But after the main story has gained headway, which it does soon after the beginning of the second reel, the characters are straightened out in the minds of the spectators, their exact place in the story becomes obvious; and after this they are seen so often that even if their costumes are similar they are no more confusing.

While on the subject of costumes, it may be remarked that they are gorgeous, correct in every detail, and worn with a grace and ease by the players that never betray their true selves nor the actual period in which they live.

The settings, whether they be magnificent or lowly, as the case may demand, deserve praise for the same reasons. In these respects and again in the movements of the players, the entire film will call for none but unstinted commendation.

An exceptionally large cast appears. The three principals are Lionel Barrymore, who gives an excellent account of himself in the role of Monsieur Doltaire, the grasping and greedy lieutenant of Louis XV in the French Canadian possessions. Millicent Evans plays the part of Alixe Duvarney, the girl whom Doltaire desires. She is the figure that attracts most attention as the story progresses. Glen White, who has the role of Robert Moray, the hero of the tale that receives the true affections of the girl, neglects none of the excellent opportunities that have been provided him to exercise his ability.

When Moray is made prisoner by the villainous Doltaire, and from then on until he is released, due to the capture of Quebec by the English, whole hearted interest is maintained. The situations that appear are powerful, well constructed, and procure and retain a powerful grip on the spectator.

The fascination of the story of course is mostly due to the increasing efforts of T. Hayes Hunter, the director. He had a hard task allotted him, to cause the story to be interesting and not dry and meaningless, and he has accomplished it in excellent style.

Photographically the picture is good, too. A little more tincturing here and there would do no harm, but this may be attended to. The picture was shown at the Casino Theatre, New York, during the week of November 29.

"THE LITTLE REBEL"
(Gaumont-Warners—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A DRAMA concerning our own war between the North and the South will, no doubt, appeal to all classes of people for many years to come. Such a subject is one of those which never grows tiresome, and so, unless the feelings and sympathies of the public have changed over night, "The Little Rebel" is bound to be a success. One gratifying thing about it is that it isn't a production of greater length. Directors often think that as long as the picture in hand concerns the Civil War they are licensed to string it out over a great amount of space, and by so doing the charm of the story is lost.

"The Little Rebel" is just the right length. It is interesting throughout the entire two reels; furthermore, it is not wholly a drama. True, the story is largely serious, but there have been some excellent comedy moments injected into the main plot which go a long way in maintaining the interest.

As for the acting, the Gene Gauntier players have always offered us excellent work. Gene Gauntier herself heads the list and re-appears on the celluloid after a prolonged absence in the countries now at war on the other side of the water. Her part is that of a Southern girl, who is the daughter of a Southern commander, and what is more to the point, in love with a Northern soldier. Jack J. Clark is the Northerner, and a fine, daring, reckless soldier he makes. He is sent to spy on the Southern fortifications and is only rescued by his sweetheart, who dresses him as a colored mammy and so takes him through the lines. Arthur Donaldson is a fine Southern colonel. The picture was produced by Sid Olcott.

No scenes of battle appear until near the end. The scenes are not too long then, but short and terrific and most realistic. The fight of the opposing forces on the stairs at only sword's length is most thrilling, and well staged.

The story ends happily for all concerned. As a whole "The Little Rebel" is sure to please.

"THE BELOVED ADVENTURER"
(Lubin—Thirteenth Episode)

THE series of "The Beloved Adventurer" is drawing to a close, but still Lord Cecil is kept busy with opportunities to show his cool courage and to grasp the most exciting situations with good results. In this number, "Through Desperate Hazards," his nerve is taxed to the limit. Aside from his own affair in rescuing his wife, he is drawn into a romance in which he has no concern except that he must take part in the interest of right. In this story he and his wife are rescued from a burning ship, and the arch villain, Carson, meets his end in a fair fight with the heroic Englishman.

The picture is one of the best and very dramatic, and will make many picture fans sorry that only two more numbers remain to tell of the romances of "The Beloved Adventurer."

Emmett Campbell Hall's book has been faithfully illustrated in the Lubin pictures.

"ZUDORA"
(Thanhouser—Third Episode)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

If the succeeding seventeen problems allotted to "Zudora" to solve by Hassam Ali become any more complicated than those he has given her already, she will be more than worthy the right to marry Storm when she has emerged from all of them successfully.

Although we don't desire to slander any denizens of the law, it might be remarked in passing that the two tangles already straightened out by the beautiful heroine of the story would baffle even our greatest detectives and secret service agents. At any rate, the solution of the problems are so well concealed by the producers of the picture that no inkling of the most minute sort is given as to the outcome.

Much of the credit for this should go to Frank Sullivan. Of course, the situations were conceived by the writer, Daniel Carson Goodman, but brilliant situations would be utterly spoiled if the director was not competent and well versed in his art. To put a picture on and conceal its termination is no easy proposition, and it is therefore to Mr. Sullivan that a great amount of praise should go.

Regarding the story of this separate episode, it concerns cheese and diamonds, being entitled "The Mystery of the Dutch Cheese Maker." The cheese maker has the misfortune to own a store directly above the office of a diamond manufacturer. Storm frequents this store, on numerous occasions, purchasing various brands of cheese which he carries home, there partaking of a midnight feast, perhaps with crackers and milk on the side.

Hassam Ali is in league with the diamond maker, who one day finds that his diamonds are mysteriously vanishing from a sealed closet. The two are unable to find the thief. But "Zudora," who finds her way into the den, discovers that a group of mice are the culprits. The mice dine on cheese in the store above, and then neglecting to wipe their noses descend to the closet in which are the diamonds. The diamonds on being smelt firmly adhere to the noses of the mice, who carry them upstairs and in partaking of more Limburger lose them in their repast.

Storm, the cheese maker and his entire family are imprisoned as thieves, until this fact is made known to the police by Zudora. It surely was a deep mystery to solve, as one would never think of associating cheese and mice with diamonds, but such was the case, and Zudora was the person who discovered it. Therefore all the more credit to her. The succeeding mysteries may seem deep and unfathomable, but they can hardly surpass "The Mystery of the Dutch Cheese Maker."

"THE MASTER KEY"
(Universal Special—Second Episode)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

Great things, just delicately hinted at in this episode, are in store for those who are to take "The Master Key" as a steady diet in the future. In the first two reels, the story gave the general appearance that it would be just the villain and the hero fighting it out without a great bit of outside interference.

But here we are given to understand that a mysterious woman, one without a past, or more probably one that she doesn't care to publish, and a youth who was Dore's rival in college, are behind the man, Willerson, the former partner of Gallon, who is bent on taking revenge on him.

Dore Saves the Miner's Life

Alan Forrest is Drake, the young man and Gene Hathaway, the woman. Aside from these two no other characters of importance are introduced into the story. When Wilkerson finally succeeds in locating Gallon he joyfully communicates the good news to Mle. Darnell, and after that he retreats from the limelight for the time being.

Gallon, who it has been narrated, is always in deadly fear of the return of Wilkerson, is terribly shocked when he does appear, and accosts him on the step of his house. He sinks down in fear and buries his face in his hands. Dore and his daughter Ruth seeing him and not the other man, as he has disappeared, runs to his aide, and when he looks up he sees Dore standing where Wilkerson was before, and his natural conclusion is that he has seen a vision, as the poor man is often affected that way.

The big scene in this chapter comes in the latter reel, when Dore, who is taking a ride in a car that runs on a wire, saves Ruth from a runaway scuttle running on the track beneath. Dore hangs on the edge of the car by his knees and pulls the girl out with his hands. The car in which she was riding runs on and ploughs off the end of the track. This is an excellent thriller, and all praise should go to Robert Leonard and Ella Hall, the only two who were concerned in it.

Although not as yet showing any indications of eclipsing "The Trey o' Hearts" in the way of thrills, "The Master Key" gives great promise of equalling it. It contains a different sort of a story than its famed predecessor, one that consumes a greater amount of space in introducing the characters and getting under way. But now that these two things have been accomplished, it is about time that our greatest expectations concerning it be fulfilled.

Engage Cast for Doro Film

The Famous Players Film Company has engaged a distinguished cast of Broadway performers to support Marie Doro in the film version of her greatest success, "The Morals of Marcus," by William J. Locke. This notable cast includes Eugene Ormond, who will appear in the role of Sir Marcus, and Julian L'Estrange, who will play the part of Pasquale, originally created by him in the stage production at His Majesty's Theatre in London.
EIGHT-REEL pictures are often steered clear of, owing to the general supposition that they could have been told in half the length. "Eagle's Nest," an eight-reel subject, could hardly be condensed, as it stands now; there is not a tiring or heavy moment in it. You may question this, as praise has been meted out so liberally of late that it has lost some of its force; an "excellent" picture means only an "average" picture, perhaps. But when we say that this production is excellent, we mean excellent in all the senses of the word.

Adapted from the old stage play of the same name, "Eagle's Nest" is essentially a melodrama, but not melodrama of the exaggerated "blood and thunder" variety. It may have been this sort of a play on the stage, but on the screen, combined with the beautiful and magnificent backgrounds, and these supported by perfectly clear photography, the entire aspect of the picture undergoes a change.

Melodramatic sentences when mouthed by actors on the stage do, generally, seem insincere and grossly exaggerated, overspoken and bad. When we read the lines ourselves in a book they seem better, and when we see screen characters interpreting the lines by concise actions, facial expression and the like, it is even better yet. In other words, all the faults that are present in stage melodrama disappear when the production is handled skilfully on the screen.

In regard to the photography, no room is left for any sort of improvement. Artistic scenes, some of them filmed in "The Garden of the Gods" of Colorado, offer themselves as such beautiful backgrounds to the story, yet do not eclipse the action, that scenically there is no cause for any unfavorable comment. One scene in particular, taken at a great altitude, shows a ridge of light clouds beyond the tops of the mountains, an effect only obtained after the greatest trouble.

Romaine Fielding directed the picture, and was assisted by Harry Chandlee in adapting it from the play, besides playing the heavy of the cast. Taking every side of the picture into consideration, one cannot help but extend to Mr. Fielding the heartiest praise and thanks for the obvious success he has attained in his efforts. In the part of Blasedon, the heavy of the story, the one who causes all the trouble by desiring a girl’s hand who does not desire his, Mr. Fielding seems to be as villainous a villain as one could wish for.

Edwin Arden, who played in the original production as Jack Trail, the western lover of the girl, has the same part. Although slightly old for the part of a young man, this fact is hardly obvious on the film, as the scenes have been carefully arranged, causing him to appear to the best advantage.

When we stop to consider that the picture is eight reels, which, by the way, is the first picture of that length that the Lubin company has turned out, when the supporting cast was almost totally uninstructed in the art of photoplay technique, when so many unseasoned extras were employed, the excellent results achieved warrant extensive commendation. There are punches, too, a most realistic fight between Indians and immigrants occurs in the end, which further our opinion that the picture will make a big impression.

THE END OF THE BRIDGE

There is always something engaging about a story concerning the ways and methods of a band of crooks, all the more so when a detective is after them. These three reels, crammed full of action, make the time fly so quickly that the picture will seem all too short.

One very thrilling event is pictured toward the end of the last reel, when two of the principals of the cast start across a railroad drawbridge on a hand car. When they are almost at the middle, the bridge is raised by their pursuers, and, luckily enough, the car balances on the end. The man runs back, gets the best of his enemies, and lowers the drawbridge and then the two proceed on their way.

The story relates how a detective on the track of a band of thieves, smugglers and other criminals disguises himself as a stevedore, discovers that one of their number desires to reform, and after rounding the others up he saves him and marries his sister.
“MRS. BLACK IS BACK”
(Famous Players-Paramount—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

FOUR reels of clean, wholesome, sidesplitting comedy, with a plot linking the laughs together, is what “Mrs. Black is Back” offers to the exhibitor. From almost the very first scene until the very last, anyone who watches the performances rendered by the players will indulge in laughter, loud and long.

May Irwin appears in the title role of Mrs. Black, who before she becomes the wife of Professor Black, tells him that her age is twenty-nine instead of thirty-six. She also informs him that her son Jack is ten, whereas he is really flirting around the latter ‘teens.

When she is married she finds herself in a great fix, one lie leads to another, and every minute she finds herself in water a great deal deeper than what she cares for. At length after her son on his arrival home has assumed the guise of cook for a time, and when he is seen making love to his valet, whom Mrs. Black informed her husband was the mate of a mythical Aunt Prue, the truth comes out.

Then follows a chase to bring Mrs. Black back, and back she is brought, after having the experience of being blown up in her Ford car. The Professor laughs the whole thing off, and a real family reunion follows.

All the scenes of the picture lead up to the comical climax of the Professor discovering his wife’s deception. They are as funny as one could wish, and never in the least tiresome. When the Professor brings home toys for Little Johnnie, as he calls him, and again when Mrs. Black passes her son off as the gasman, and later on dresses him up as cook of the establishment, no one will be able to resist breaking into the heartiest laughter.

Scenically the picture is excellent. The exteriors were taken on the estate of Miss Irwin on the St. Lawrence River. The interiors are up to Famous Players standard, and all the scenes are supported by excellent photography.

Others besides May Irwin in the cast are Charles Lane, who carries the part of the Professor; Elmer Booth as son John, Marie Pavis as his fiance and Clara Blandick, Wellington A. Pletcher, James Hester and Cyril Chadwick appear in the remaining parts. The cast is remarkably well balanced, in fact, the entire picture should prove as great a success as the play scored while on the stage.

“IN THE NAME OF THE PRINCE OF PEACE”
(Dyreda-World—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

There is one thing that most persons will be glad to hear of in connection with this picture. The director, J. Searle Dawley, has departed from the practice of introducing men obviously dressed in uniform of the warring countries in Europe. It would be insanity to try to pass them off as if belonging to some imaginary country.

The story presented is one of great interest after the first reel, which contains a rather unnecessary but unconventional introduction.

This is the second appeal for peace coming from the Dyreda studio, and if to be peaceful we have to see the horrible results of war, results which we don't like to think of, “In the Name of the Prince of Peace” will make its mark. The story is strong and

NEW PATHE SERIAL WITH SAME CAST

IT is announced that with the ending of “The Perils of Pauline,” Pathe will release another serial with substantially the same cast, but showing adventures of a different sort.

The remarkable success of the “Perils” has been the cause of many requests from the exhibitors for another Pathe serial with the same “punches” that have characterized the last.

PRODUCTION AT STANDSTILL IN EUROPE

BEYRoud & Sons, Regent House, Kingsway, London, W. C., British agents for Motion Picture News, report that there is a dearth of films in Italy, Denmark, Spain and Russia. In Spain and Russia the local producers have shut down; “every thing points to the fact their ‘back numbers’ could be disposed of to a decided advantage, as the houses still fill well.”

“They do not know—never reading the papers—that Judge Sanders discharged the writer last September when I refused to use the leaders in order to test the law and that Judge Lowe discharged Ralph Fitzwater, of the Cozy theatre at Lorain, Ohio, last week for the same thing.

“The average exhibitor stands in fear and trembling of the awful censor and the police who have been ‘egged on’ to get after the showmen and film men.

“The men who represent the ‘censor group’ are received smilingly and graciously at the film offices, as befits their exalted and important positions.

“When they leave the atmosphere is blue with profanity.

“I have seen it and know whereof I speak. Now it is up to the New York producers to finance the legitimate work necessary to repeal the cause of all this.

“Exhibitors are in no mood to be bamboozled any longer. Film service has already taken an upward jump and I am stating publicly what all exhibitors hereabouts are grumbling about and protesting against privately.

NUNNS AND CHILDREN VISIT AMERICAN STUDIO

TWO NUNS and more than one hundred children from the St. Vincent school at Santa Barbara, Cal., were guests at the American studio November 25, where they saw pictures made, developed and projected. But few of the children had ever before seen a motion picture, and it was the first time any of the Sisters had viewed pictures or seen them made.

The film shown was "Beppo," made under the direction of Henry Otto, and in which two children—twins—play an important part.

"FANTASMA"

(Edison—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY CLIFFORD H. FANGBURN

A DECIDED departure from the usual thing in motion pictures is provided in this offering. It is founded on the stage spectacle of the same name put on by Hanlon Brothers, and presents George Hanlon, Jr., in the role of Pico, the clown. In addition to his work in the picture Mr. Hanlon prepared the film version from the original.

However cynical and practical people may be nowadays, the fact remains that nearly everyone likes a fairy story. Although they are generally supposed to be of interest only to children, grown-ups always enjoy a good one even if they will not admit it. "Fantasma" is more than a fairy story. It introduces all the delightful features of the Hans Christian Andersen tales, including the prince and his sweetheart, the princess, the queen of the fairies, the devil and some of his assistants and animals which talk.

In addition to this there is a number of excellent touches of humor, well calculated to keep the audience laughing. Altogether it is a picture which will furnish endless delight to children, and at the same time give their elders a welcome relief from the battle, murder and sudden death which they are so accustomed to see on the screen.

The scenic effects are deserving of special mention. Those which are entirely natural are of an unusual beauty, as they are the result of a careful selection of the most imposing spots about one of the finest estates in Connecticut.

The specially constructed settings are of corresponding excellence. These include the homes of Zamaliel, the prince of darkness, and of Fantasma, Queen of the Good and Light, as well as under the sea views. The mechanical effects introduced during the adventures of Pico in the haunted house are at once startling and funny, and to those unfamiliar with the technique of picture making will seem remarkable.

The story, insofar as there may be said to be any, concerns the adventures of Prince Arthur while in search of Princess Lena, his sweetheart, who has been carried off by Zamaliel. Fantasma sends the clown Pico to help the prince, and also gives him her own aid, even appearing in a mysterious flower bedecked chariot, which careful scrutiny shows to be one of the ubiquitous Fords.

Marie La Manna is seen as Princess Lena, and Edwin Clark as her royal lover. George Hanlon, Jr., as mentioned above, keeps everyone in good humor by his antics as the clown. Others in the cast are William Carlton, George Schrode, William Ruge, Grace Goodall, Richard Neill, Mathilde Baring and William Fables.

"DAMON AND PYTHIAS"

(Universal Six Reel Special Feature)

THERE are many things essential to the success of a feature film. The majority of them will be found in "Damon and Pythias," the six reel special produced by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. Human interest, thrills, novelties, and a moral make an ideal combination on the screen.

The picture was given its premier at the New York Theatre on Monday night. An audience that taxed the capacity of the house greeted the first public showing of the production.

Primarily its chief interest is for members of the Knights of Pythias. The story gives in detail the ritualistic theme of the order. To the general public it presents a theme of good heart interest, well garnished with the spectacular and unusual.

The first of the six reels is given to views of Athens and Greece, which succeeds in creating an atmosphere befitting the production. The story is slightly vague for the first reel. This in part may be due to introductory scenes showing the principals in modern dress, with the difficulty of penetrating disguises and makeups and establishing identities while story names are being committed to memory.

Damon, a senator and one of the governors of the city of Syracuse, is opposed by Dionysus, its chief of generals, who covets the throne. Pythias, the soldier, is a favorite of Dionysus. Damon, the senator, and Pythias, the soldier, are friends. Their attachment for each other is famed in the city.

Dionysus meets Calanthe, daughter of Arrin and a fiancée of Pythias. Her charms attract him, and he sends Pythias to Agrigentum with a body of soldiers to aid in defending that city against the Carthaginians, feeling certain that the young warrior will be killed in battle. But he returns victorious, and Syracuse bestows a wonderful welcome. On the fete day Dionysus pits him against Aristle, the champion of charioteers in Sicily. Again Pythias is victorious, and his popularity with the masses trebles. Dionysus then conspires to obtain the throne.

On the day of the wedding of Pythias and Calanthe, the senators in secret conclave elect Dionysus king. Damon denounces him as a traitor and attempts to kill him, and is sentenced to die. Pythias in the midst of the wedding festivities hastens to Damon's side, and gives himself as hostage while Damon goes to bid farewell to his wife and son.

His return after many delays is fraught with real heart interest. Dionysus, appalled by the depths of their friendship, pardons Damon.

Double exposures add much to the technical interest in the picture.
INTERESTING FILM REVIEWS

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"A Mother's Way." (Biograph, Mon., Nov. 30.)—A young woman who has met with some success in a large city is ashamed of her mother's old-fashioned appearance and manner. She realizes her attitude, but instead of becoming bitter she secretly supplies him with funds from her triumphs. A strong story well acted by a cast headed by Bill Britten.

"The Crossing Web." (Biograph, Two reels, Dec. 1.)—In order to get money to help her father a girl becomes the accomplice of a gambler. Later she falls in love with one of their intended victims, and leaves the gambler to care for the factory. But the工厂主 is in love with the girl, while her own father thinks she is married to the man. As a result, the picture reaches a sad and dramatic conclusion. A beautiful story well told by a cast headed by Alice Joyce.

"The Price of Silence." (Kalem, Two reels, Dec. 2.)—On the death of his father, a young mill owner decides to divorce his wife who is the reason for her marriage to him, as he is acrimonious and has a child. When father dies she former lover attempts to take her away, but he fails with the support of his faithful friend. Alice Joyce plays the role of the factory girl with much effectiveness. A first class film.

"Dobs at the Shore." (Lubin, Tues., Dec. 2.)—A comedy consisting largely of a series of slapstick and funny scenes in which slapstick comedy is so effective that it is all started by a marauder who tries to make his run at the shore. The same reel is "He Made His Mark." A superb comedy.

"The Moonshine Maid and the Man." (Vitagraph, Mon., Dec. 1.)—A touching tragedy of the hilltops of the South. A girl tells her suitor that the money she earns is to be put to a life with, and that she will marry when he has 3,000. The man is a young mill owner and her lover is mortally wounded. The girl forgives him as he dies.

"The Mystery of the Seven Chests." (Selig, Two reels, Mon., Dec. 7.)—A story concerning the strange adventures which took place in the pursuit of seven chests left in a storage warehouse. A valuable old seal is sold for storage charges, and are purchased by a wealthy young man who takes them on his yacht in order to impress his guests. The sister of the crook to whom they had been sold, who had her money when she is convinced that they contain articles of value, and A is a clever detective. The mystery is solved by obtaining possession of them in order to establish the innocence of her father. A remarkable experience is made, and a pretend Manufacturing Co.'s officer is holding the title. The story is quite a good one.

"Crystals." (Biograph, Mon., Dec. 7.)—An interesting split reel of a semi-educational nature. The form of a number of familiar chemical compounds is shown by means of micro-photography. The effects obtainable are remarkable. This is the second reel in a series.

"Through Desperate Hazards." (Lubin, Mon., Dec. 7.)—The thirteenth in the "Beloved Adventure" series, a grand series of serials. A story of success in his own field through aiding someone else who is fighting for his goal. The hero is a young law officer who, because of the poverty of the poor woman's life-long savings, is saved in a duel. He marries her and his wife and her husband are on the train. They follow a circus and rescue at sea, and get involved with the usual happiness. There are many good water scenes in the film. Arthur Johnson and Lottie Briscoe, with the usual cast are seen.

"Swindle and the Hypnotist." (Essanay, Mon., Dec. 7.)—A scumbrovar at a theatre fails and is rescued from a dream in which she becomes a famous prima donna. She is seen with a rich man who is receiving her caress. Wallace Beery is seen as the scumbrovar.

"In Dutch." (Kalem, Tues., Dec. 8.)—A slapstick comedy which illustrates the adventures of a man who attended a prize fight which was raided. He takes out one of the men with him and they have a bad time frustrating attacks by the sheriff and the police. The cast are John H. Westmorland, Ethel Teare, Ford hornsby and Lee Hill.

INTERESTING RELEASE DATES AT A GLANCE—THEN GO AHEAD IF YOU CAN ALWAYS BE SURE THEY ARE RIGHT IF YOU GET

MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Five pages of every issue are devoted to nothing but release dates—the most com- plete and correct list of them ever issued. This makes an excellent news column. Directed by Ashley Miller.

"The Deacon's Son." (Biograph, Sat., Dec. 5.)—A fine story of the life of a little orphan, and the deacon himself a man of sanctimonious bearing. The story is one of pure sentiment and, while the acting is good, the effects are not strong, and the result is a rather weak story. Despite these drawbacks, the story is still one of interest and value. The cast are Bob Harris, Vivian Prescott and Hector Sandoz.

BE SURE TO BE THOROUGH IN YOUR RELEASES

You can always be sure they are right if you get...
"The Mystery of the Yellow Sunbonnet." (Kalem. Two reels. Wed., Dec. 9.)—An adventure comedy, cleverly put together to be a heroine is the leading figure of this excellent melodrama. Her name is Millie Brown and she is played by little Millice Shearer, a pity Millie comes infatuated with a girl, and the couple live together without the formality of a marriage. But when the hero finds out that his sweetheart is a blackmailer, he is forced to take in love with her intended victim, and repents suf ficiently to marry the heroine. Helen Standing is the officer. Of course she marries the officer.

"The Abyss." (Selig. Wed., Dec. 9.)—A tragedy which presents a moral by means of a story of love and murder, taking place in a wireless station, in which two men captives.

"The Man From the Sea." (Lubin. Two reels. Thurs., Dec. 10.)—A ghost story in which a young woman is forced to make her way on a small fishing boat, which her as a crook and murderer when she is seen. She is known to the sea, and the murderer commits suicide. The cast includes H. W. Coghill, Fanny Foy, Grace Duncan, C. J. Deers, and Anna Luster.

"Pure Gold." (Vitagraph. Wed., Dec. 10.)—This story introduces the favorite situation of a man and a woman: the man is married, the woman is t ually women, and has his whole character changed by contact with a woman of high ideals and noble spirit. The man, and the woman is a dancer from the nearby showboat. A wealthy William Duncan plays the difficult parts of the woman and the man.

"One Kiss." (Selig. Fri., Dec. 11.)—A farce comedy dealing with love-making and marriage. The man Pippin finds himself tried by his son and the son's sweetheart, Trudy Iレス. The colonel is op posed to his son's marriage and cuts off his allowance. Trixy has a friend who runs a mani acure establishment, and who induces the old gentleman to become so regular and attentive a patient that Pippin is forced to grant forgiveness as the price of silence.

A STRAND OF BLOND HAIR." (Vitagraph. Thurs., Dec. 11.)—An entertaining comedy in which Bobo, the colored waiter, is found to be a natural blonde. The film excuses the lack of proper college atmosph ere.

"On Moonshine Mountain." (Lubin. Fri. Dec. 11.)—A fast-moving melodrama of the Southern Mountains. A revenue officer and a reporter on, a vacation becomes rivals for the hand of a

"The Bold Banditti and the Rah Rah Boys." (Kalem. Fri., Dec. 11.)—An entertaining comedy in which Ralph, the hero, is caught in a hard situation. He is blackballed out of the one that he marries. The officer is so overcome by jealousy that he seeks to win over by calling the lady, he finds himself tried by a narrow

"The Girl Stage Driver." (Eclair. Two reels. Wed., Dec. 12.)—A very simple and entertaining comedy in which bunny, who is quite innocent and friendly, proves to be seen as bunny, with Flora Finch as his wife.

"The Stenographer." (Edison. Sat., Dec. 12.)—A girl needing money to care for her sick sister comes to the office of a rival of her employer, and acts as a spy. She then reels the fact of her intended victim, and is given false information which leads to trouble for the other men. As a matter of fact, especially when her employer pays her much attention she confesses. He comes her and tells her of his loves.

THE CHRISTMAS ISSUE OF

Out December 19th.

"Adventures of the Ninible Dollar." (Powers, E. C. Dickey, Dec. 11.) - A delightful little comedy with different lines than others in pictures. The Ideas cannot be called original, however, but the performances are strongly marked. Pessimistic blind bandit, captures Dollar and Confidence, and so on. The story is the most thrilling sort. Those who love western melodrama will find in this their hearts' desire.

"The City of Darkness." (Brenocho. Two reels. Dec. 9.) - We are not sorry to have conjured up a little film to this old story of the old man with his daughter, who is the object of her father's affections. The film is not particularly well made, but it is still a good story, convincing, and well acted. The picture has a certain artistic touch.

"The Trail Wreckers." (101 Bison. Two reels. Sat., Dec. 12.) - Acted by Henry MacKeen's company with William Clifford, Sherman Bannidges, and a number of others in the roles of the various grand mariners. A regular rip-roaring western, containing plenty of action and good comedy. A very good story, well acted, and a lot of fun. A very strong and bigustain cast. With educated persons the picture will pass as a first. It may go to the uneducated, although the faults are glaring.

"The Little Grey Home." (Victor. Two reels. Fri., Dec. 11.) - Harry Meyers, occasional Thoby and Bransley Shaw play the leading parts. The story is that of a man who is deserted by his wife for the leading lady of the show (this part of the picture seems improbable as the two women are the greatest of all). The film is a great hit through the good acting and actions of his friend he returns to his wife later. This will surely entertain.

"The Strong of Ten." (American. Wed., Dec. 2.) - This might be termed a tempestuous romance, laid midst the mountains. On the one side are the three men who have often a long and interesting battle with the Indians. On the other is one who drinks nothing but pure mountain water, and who is capable of attacking a line of equals in the ten, when they come to thrust him for priming with the tricks of the old gunsmith. The story is well acted. The one wins the game and reforms the tending. William Garwood and Viviam Rich are the lovers who are destined to meet in the pictures. The story is a high point of the strength of the film.

"The Locky Shot." (Reliance. Wed., Dec. 2.) - A mystery concerning a desperate young man who goes west to the country in search of a great fortune. There is a lot of very good work in the film. The returns are not bad, and the film is a general success. This film is a bit of a wall of sandstone wherein gold is found. It is the subject, slightly artificial, but played well.

"The City of Darkness." (Brenocho. Two reels. Dec. 9.) - We are not sorry to have conjured up a little film to this old story of the old man with his daughter, who is the object of her father's affections. The film is not particularly well made, but it is still a good story, convincing, and well acted. The picture has a certain artistic touch.

"Not of the Fold." (Dominio. Two reels.) - This story is a thoroughly interesting melodrama depicting the reformation of the wild daughter of a saloon keeper, through the kind teachings of a broad-minded young minister, who, besides having the lawless girl to deal with has to overcome the bigoted and narrow minded prejudice of his own congregation. The situations that arise are numerous and are completely carried out by the principals of the cast. Charles Cotesworth plays the role of the young minister, and Eldy Markay plays the role of the daughter. The film is entertaining throughout and teaches an excellent lesson.

"The Hello Girl of Angel Camp." (Premier.) - A thrilling western drama of the melodramatic type. The situation is based on the historical characters of Delany and Franz in the respective roles of hero, heroine and heavy. The effect of anxiety that the train sweeping on toward the wounded girl lying across the tracks of the most terrifying. The Italian gardener, who, because of his reckless ways, takes young girl by stopping her runaway horse, befriends her. While he is soundly abused by the girl's lover he defends her father, and is not for the man. She is usually found in two, and will hold the attention from beginning to end.

"One on Charlie." (Superbox.) - Rather an old idea, this film, is one that will make a big story. It will entertain many audiences. If the picture were called "One on Charlie" it might have a much better name. That the picture is excellently handled is evident. Charles Forrest in his usual comic role is in love with a woman who refuses him because he is poor. The story is just that, and the girl who is so soon after discovers he has inherited a fortune. Then Forrest sets out to win the girl, who, after he captures Charlie and tells her that the girl is really his own, and that he has not seen her in two, and will hold the attention from beginning to end.

"Under Shadows to Sunshine." (Mitzenthal. Two reels.) - Devotes of the old fashioned melodrama may take pleasure in witnessing this production, as it is one of the best that has been shown in the last few weeks. All the characters are the conventional melodramatic types, the villain and the heroine being the most important in the cast. With educated persons the picture will pass as a first. It may go to the uneducated, although the faults are glaring.

"The Heart's Desire." (Selig. Don't be too critical about this picture. We have shot it in the street. The acting is very strong. The story is very interesting, and the scenes are given the pictured a decided artistic touch.

WEEKLYS

"Hearts'-Digs News Pictorial, No. 77." (Selig. Mon.) - The United States troops arive at Paint Creek, Ark., to quiet the miners in the great strike. The story is told by Colonel R. E. Roberts, England's commander, shortly before he died; Admiral Sir Christopher Crabblesh and his son, and the general strike of the miners of the conflagration. The film is told by the news chief, E. W. Fischel, who is the subject, slightly artificial, but played well.

"The City of Darkness." (Brenocho. Two reels. Dec. 9.) - We are not sorry to have conjured up a little film to this old story of the old man with his daughter, who is the object of her father's affections. The film is not particularly well made, but it is still a good story, convincing, and well acted. The picture has a certain artistic touch.

"Mutual Weekly, No. 106." (Thurs., Dec. 26.) - This film is about the State of Pennsylvania, the United States. The story is told by the news chief, E. W. Fischel, who is the subject, slightly artificial, but played well.

in passing these two pictures says:

"A Christmas Carol" Charles Dickens' well-known Classic perfectly given; every detail of costume and English setting has had attention—Fine Acting!"

"The Two Columbines" "An artistic picture—many beautiful scenes."

The Motion Picture News says:

"Many productions of Charles Dickens' most popular story (A Christmas Carol) have been made for the Screen, BUT THERE HAS NEVER BEEN ONE WHICH SURPASSED THIS—It is a film which the great Author himself could view without a shock were he alive today."—Clifford H. Pangburn.

"The Christmas spirit stands out in this attractive picture (The Two Columbines) in a most effective manner—the Stage scenes are well handled and depicted with accuracy and realism—a simple story which should please any audience."—C. H. Pangburn.

MinA Films are being exploited by the most gigantic publicity campaign ever conducted for a single brand of pictures.

Never in the whole history of the industry has publicity been attempted on such a grand scale except by three of the large distributing organizations, and they confused the public by trying to popularize several brands at once. MinA publicity is concentrated on MinA Films alone.

For six months the people in every city in America—THE PEOPLE OF YOUR TOWN—have been reading in the newspapers and magazines of the actors, authors, directors, and peculiarities of manufacture which go to make MinA Films different and better than any one reel comedies they have ever known.

This remarkable advertising to the public and to the trade has been done for you. It means ready made audiences, and a continued ever growing demand because honest quality of product stands squarely back of the advertising. Book MinA Films through all licensed exchanges commencing Dec. 17th and continuing every week thereafter on the General Film Program.

Standard Polystercope Announces Its Plans

Cooper, President; H. C. Hoagland, Vice-President and General Manager of $1,000,000 Company—List of 22 Exchanges to Be Announced Shortly

William P. Cooper is president and H. C. Hoagland is general manager of the Standard Polystercope Corporation, a New York company capitalized at $1,000,000, with temporary offices at 115 Broadway, New York City. The Standard Polystercope Corporation will put out the "Standard Program" in co-operation with the Standard Program Association, an Illinois corporation with main offices at Chicago, and with the following well known exchange men as officers: Joseph Hopp, Chicago, president; Nelson Evans, of Cleveland, and D. S. Markowitz, of Los Angeles, vice-presidents; E. T. Peter, Dallas, Texas, secretary, and Sam Werner, of St. Louis, treasurer. These gentlemen also constitute the board of directors of the Standard Program Association.

In addition to Messrs. Cooper and Hoagland, Herbert Blache, the well known producer of Fort Lee, N. J., a prominent New York lawyer, are among the present directors of the Standard Polystercope Corporation. This directorate will be increased at the next meeting on December 9 by two well known capitalists whose names will be announced later. One of these will serve as vice-president and the other as treasurer of the Standard Polystercope Corporation.

H. C. Hoagland, general manager of the Standard Polystercope Corporation, needs no introduction to the film world. He has been with Polystercope for six years in various and responsible capacities, serving both as advertising manager, assistant to the vice-president and as general manager of Polystercope Freres. He is not only an executive of ability, but also of exceptional experience in all branches of the field.

William P. Cooper is one of the founders of the Moffett studios of Chicago and a photographic expert of wide experience who within the past few years has given himself a practical education in motion pictures. In this connection he has spent a year and a half studying modern methods of productions in the leading studios of Europe and the United States.

It is announced that the Standard program will be backed by a very large advertising appropriation. Newspapers will be used, following the line of distribution of the Standard program.

The names of the manufacturers affiliated with the Standard program will be announced later; also the nature of the program. The first date of release is set in January. The entire list of 22 exchanges will also be announced shortly.

The scheme of distribution and the appointment of the exchanges are in the capable hands of Messrs. Hopp, Evans, Markowitz, Peter and Werner, all of whom have won their laurels as efficient and successful exchange men. G. H. Virbeek will probably handle Buffalo and Boston. Detroit and Cleveland will be in the charge of Mr. Evans.

Mr. Peter will look after Texas; Atlanta and New Orleans will be under separate and central management. Baltimore and Washington will be handled from Philadelphia. The Swanson-Crawford Company of St. Louis will take care of the surrounding section. A separate corporation in California, of which D. S. Markowitz is vice-president, has already been formed, and will handle the coast territory as far east as Salt Lake City. Prominent exchanges will be established in Minneapolis, Omaha, Kansas City, Denver, Pittsburgh and other prominent exchange centres of the United States.

Sextet Grand March for Exhibitor's Ball

One of the features of the ball to be given by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Great New York in Grand Central Palace, New York City, on December 7, will be the sextet grand march. Instead of the old-time formation the front rank will be headed by six couples, well-known photoplay favorites.

These have been designated as follows: Mary Pickford and Francis X. Bushman, Mary Fuller and King Baggott, Marguerite Snow and James Cruze, Anita Stewart and Earl Williams, Clara K. Young and Marc McDermott, and Gene Gauntier and Jack Clarke.

Under the lead of these almost every other celebrity in filmdom will participate.

New York M. P. Company May Buy Willat Studios

It is rumored that the New York Motion Picture Company is negotiating for the purchase of the Willat laboratories and studios, at Fort Lee, N. J. This will mean the production of some of their releases in the East, a thing the company has not done for three years.

Belasco Associate Directs "Runaway June"

Oscar Eagle, Who Was Also in Charge of the Selig Chicago Studio, Spent Last Two Months Casting the Play

"Runaway June," the new Reliance serial which will be released early in January will be produced by Oscar Eagle, who has just finished been at the head of the Selig Polystercope's Chicago studio producing feature dramas, and prior to that was associated with David Belasco, the greatest producer of the age.

Oscar Eagle entered the dramatic profession as an actor in the company of McKee Rankin, was successful and followed with engagements in support of many famous players, including Frank Mayo, Frank Chanfrau, John McQuilco, Fanny Davenport, Mrs. Fiske, Viola Allen, Kylie Belloc, Francis Starr and David Warfield, playing a repertoire of over 350 parts.

Over eighteen years ago he turned his attention to stage direction, and has since made many successful productions, notably for Liebler and Company.

Mr. Eagle has spent the last two months in rehearsing and casting "Runaway June," and at present the stock company for this gigantic production comprises over sixty members, the majority of whom come from the dramatic stage.

Jack Dillon a Graduate of Griffith Companies

Army Officer's Daughter in Films

Dixie Rucker, the youngest daughter of Colonel George K. Armes, U. S. A., is one of the latest additions to the screen world.

MRS. WILCOX VISITS WARNER STUDIOS.

An inspection of the general offices of the United Film Service (Warner's Features, Inc.), in the Leavitt Building, was made several days ago by Mrs. Elizabeth Wilcox, the poetess, who recently became interested in motion picture writing. Mrs. Wilcox was much impressed with the magnitude of the United Enterprise, and the widespread popularity of screen drama.

"I have never realized until this day what a wonderful force in modern life has become this comparatively recent innovation, the moving picture," she said. "I believe the day is near when the screen drama will enlist the services of our most adept playwrights and novelists to furnish the themes and our foremost actors and actresses of the legitimate stage to interpret them. In fact, I think that photoplays will be primarily and exclusively responsible for a new school of acting in this country—a school of acting which will be far more subtle and artistic than that now to be seen on our stage."

"As you may be aware," continued Mrs. Wilcox, turning to P. A. Powers, president of the United Film Service, who was conducting Mrs. Wilcox through the various offices of the film organization, "the art of pantomime, which is so interesting a department of dramatic art in Europe, is virtually unknown in this country. Pantomime, of necessity, is the great requirement of the photoplay."

Mrs. Wilcox has completed a version in photoplay form of "The Price He Paid," one of her most famous poems, which the Humanity Film Producing Company, of which Jack Rose is president, has produced for distribution by the United Film Service (Warner's Features, Inc.) in December.

GNATS AND CAMELS

(No. 60. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talks by Carl Laemmle, President.)

I published an editorial a few weeks ago in which I made the remark that we gave Universal exhibitors such serials as "Lucille Love" and "The Trey O' Hearts" at such a low price that we lost money on the deal. I added that we intended to get more for "The Master Key."

Since then I have been receiving occasional letters from exhibitors, saying that they had to pay extra for the two serials mentioned. They feared their exchanges had put something over on them, as they expressed it.

It is true that in some Universal exchanges an extra charge was made for the two serials in question. But in no case was the extra charge anything like the extra money that the exhibitors made on the pictures. And the only exchanges adopting this policy were those charging so little for their regular service that it would have been folly to add the serials to a measure of value that was already heaping.

One of the exhibitors who made a complaint because he feared he had been overcharged was a man who paid $10 a day for "Lucille Love" and $10 a day for "The Trey O' Hearts". I happened to know that this very same exhibitor has on many occasions paid from $25 to $40 a day for some of the so-called "features" made by amateur concerns in an amateur way. The pictures that he paid such prices for were not in the same class with our serials, nor did they draw anything like the crowds. Nor were they advertised in such a tremendous way as we have advertised the Universal serials. Nothing like the advertising campaign that we have waged for Universal serials has ever been undertaken in the moving picture business. It has been one of the greatest things ever done for the exhibitor, who, by the way, gets the first direct results of the big amounts of money we spend in advertising.

The exhibitor mentioned in the foregoing paragraph strained at the gnat of paying $10 extra for a big drawing card, but he swallowed the camel of paying $25 to $40 for something that didn't get him anything.

I said that we handed the exhibitors our serials on a platter, and I still repeat the remark, even if some exhibitor did pay the sum of $10 or $15 a day for a Universal serial that brought him in several times that amount; or if his weekly service price was increased during the time that he ran the serial.

Exhibitors should not forget that each one of our serials has guaranteed him steady patronage for at least fifteen weeks. If we had skimped on the quality of our serials, or if we had let up in our advertising expenditures his patronage might not have been so steady. But we protected him to the last minute.

When I look about at the many fakirs, in New York and elsewhere, who are marketing pictures that the Universal refused because they were so miserable; when I see such men getting great big fancy prices for their junk; when I see charlatans who have never invested a cent in the business doing a big trade just because they ask atrociouS prices, I sometimes wonder if the Universal's policy of giving the people more than their money's worth is good sense or rank folly.

Then the consoling thought comes to me that the house that gives the big honest value is going to win in the long run; and that the fakir will in time destroy himself, even though there are still some exhibitors who strain at gnats and swallow camels.

(From The Universal Weekly. Exhibitors, regardless of what program they are using, may have the Universal Weekly every week by writing the Editor, at 1600 Broadway, New York.)

BETTER LIGHT

LESS CURRENT

The DC Compensarc lowers the voltage of a direct current supply to that required at the lamp without needless waste.

The AC Compensarc cuts \( \frac{3}{5} \) from your lighting bill if you use alternating current.

The AC to DC Compensarc will transform alternating into direct current and reduce the voltage at the same time without needless waste.

No matter what current you have—Alternating or Direct—or what voltage or frequency, one of the will enable you to secure a light that will give those clear, bright pictures that everybody now demands.

What's the use of paying extra money for special screens, projecting machines, and first run films and then spoil the whole result with poor light? With the Fort Wayne Compensarcs you can get any kind of light you want regardless of the kind or quality of your current supply.

The Compensarcs will give you

STEADY LIGHT. No flickering, no sputtering, even when changing intensities or from one machine to another.

WHITE LIGHT. No yellow streaks, no ghosts.

BRIGHT LIGHT. Three times the light with two-thirds the current.

They are safe, efficient, easy to operate, foolproof and reliable.

I have had a Motograph for two years, to date, have been running steady one day of purchase without one cent of repairs on it. It is actually the best piece of machinery I have ever seen, gives a perfect steady, clear projection. Star Theatre, Zelienpole, Pa.

Permit us to inform you the Motograph gives us entire satisfaction and very much to our surprise was able to project a picture on a screen in broad daylight so that it could be seen by people passing by on the street.

Making a Church Into a Successful Theatre

CHANGING a church building into a theatre building, and entirely losing the "churchy" feeling and instilling a distinct theatrical effect into the same building, is not often done, but from the illustrations shown of the interior and exterior of the Liberty theatre, one can see how completely this change has been brought about, without expending an undue amount of money.

The Liberty is owned and operated by John H. Kunisky, of Detroit, and is one of the most successful of theatres devoted exclusively to moving pictures in that city. Although this theatre is located on a side street, off from the main travel, it is decidedly popular, and the people seem to like its clean defined lines and the cozy atmosphere that prevails throughout the entire house.

In order to entirely lose the church effect on the exterior, the tower, or steeple, was completely removed, the old windows bricked up, and the entire exterior of the building covered with cement plaster. At the point where the entrance was to be located a special design was used and a very pleasing effect obtained with the use of green tile, marble and imposing electric lights.

The marquee, built of iron and glass, extends to the curb and instead of the usual small center box office, a large roomy one has been provided at the side. Ample space has been provided for posters of all sizes, and this space is so arranged that plenty of advertising can be obtained without unduly blocking up the entrances and covering the fronts of the theatre with unsightly frames.

The theatre has a seating capacity of over seven hundred and the interior is very high and spacious, as it was found to be more economical to retain the old church ceiling height than to lower it by putting in a false ceiling. This arrangement makes the theatre ideal in summer and it is very cool and refreshing to sit in the Liberty and feel that there is lots of air for everyone.

A rather elaborate ventilating system has also been installed which provides plenty of fresh air for the patrons and also exhausts the foul air, making a complete change of air every few minutes.

There is a large pipe organ installed at the rear of the theatre, over the operating room, with a keyboard controlling the same in the orchestra pit. This arrangement seemed rather impractical, when it was first suggested, but as there was absolutely no other place for the organ, it was decided to install it in this location. The effects are everything that can be desired and very satisfactory; in fact, the organ and orchestra play together just as well as if the organ were in the pit with the musicians.

The interior effects lean a little to the garden order; that is, lattice work, trellis work and artificial flowers are the principal form of decorations. There is something cool and re-

The Operators’ Wire Gauge And Its Use

Among questions asked of motion-picture machine operators taking examinations for licensed operator, is to gauge wires. Many fail to have gauges of their own, borrowing or hiring one for the occasion.

It is not essential for candidates now to have gauges. Nevertheless it is a wise thing for them to possess one. Perhaps one-half will not know how to use the gauge properly when given a gauge to use. Some may pass successfully, failing in this one point. The question in itself is not of sufficient weight to turn a candidate down when he is qualified otherwise. But, have many successful candidates deficient in this point found out afterwards how to use the gauge properly? A brief review on this subject is well worth a moment’s time.

Unfortunately various standards of gauges have been adopted. The only one the operator need to acquaint himself with is the American Standard or Brown and Sharp, commonly expressed as the B. and S. gauge.

The round holes are not for the purpose of gauging wires. They are there for mechanical reasons in construction of the gauges. The straight openings only are to be used for gauging. There are many that do not this and try to gauge a wire by putting it in the round holes, and even then do not remove any insulating covering the wire may have on it.

The number opposite the slot that “just pinches” the wire passing in is the proper size of the wire. Turn the gauge over and read the corresponding diameter, given, decimally, the area in circular mills may be found by multiplying this number by itself. For instance, a wire is tried and found to just go into the slot stamped 6 on it. It is therefore a No. 6 wire. Turn the gauge over, we find .162 stamped opposite this same slot. The wire is then 162 of an inch in diameter, or 162 mills. And 162 × 162 = 25,244 circular mills.

Gauging of Stranded Conductors

Stranded conductors have to be gauged a little differently. Any one of the several wires is gauged as explained for a solid single wire. Then the size of a stranded conductor is the sum of the individual wires expressed in circular mills. For example, one strand is found to be No. 14, equivalent to 64 mills diameter. Then 64 × 64 × 7 = 26,244 circular mills for a stranded conductor having seven wires.

This stranded conductor of seven No. 14 gauge wires has a current-carrying capacity, for rubber insulation, equal to a No. 6 solid wire, as given above. This size of copper wire is approved for motion-picture machine circuits. Operators should have this fact well in mind and remember these three figures. No. 6 size wire has an allowable current-carrying capacity of 50 amperes, and its area of 26,244 circular mills, or more exactly and a number more easily remembered, 26,250 circular mills.

This size of wire, namely, No. 6, should never have a fuse to protect it from over heating greater than 50 amperes. There is no danger, however, if a fuse of a less number of amperes is used, provided this smaller size fuse has a sufficient rating and a little above the number of amperes being used. The voltage stamped on the fuse casing makes no difference as to its protective value, if it is in excess of the voltage being used.

It is also worth while to know the types of insulation used on copper wires. The several insulating coverings are designated in the trade by rubber-covered, slow-burning weatherproof. For iron conduit, only rubber-covered wire may be used. It should also have for pipe work two braids woven over the rubber.

Watch for Tinned Coating

If it is to be used in open work on insulating knobs, or cleats, one braid only complies with the National Electrical Code rulings. As a quick indicator to tell whether the copper wire has a rubber covering, bare the wire from its insulating cover for a short length at one end, say about one-quarter of an inch, and, without scraping the wire, see if it has a tinned coating. The tinning of the copper is necessary to prevent the sulphur in the rubber from corroding the wire. When the wire has the appearance of copper only, under its insulating covering, it generally can be said to have one of the other than rubber insulations; viz., weatherproof or the slow-burning coverings.

Another Means of Economy

When the European war was a certainty many of the exhibitors and exchange managers made an effort to secure all the available imported carbons that they could purchase at the regular price. Many were satisfied to pay more than the normal price because it was evident that there would be a shortage in this necessary commodity and that the article in a short time would be selling at a premium.

FACSIMILE OF OPERATORS’ B. & S. WIRE GAUGE

Wires are designated by numbers, representing the diameter of the wires in thousandths of an inch, or mills. Its sectional area in circular mills. A mill is equal to 1/1,000 inch; that is, 1 mill = .001 inch.

Circular Style the Best Gauge

The best gauge to use is of the circular style, as represented in Fig. 1. On one side numbers from 5 to 36 are stamped, corresponding to the sizes of wires. On the other side are numbers giving their decimal equivalents in thousandths of an inch, or mills.

To determine the size, or number of a wire, the gauge is slipped over the wire, trying the several slots, until one is found to just touch the wire on each side. That is, the wire will not go into the next slot bearing a number less than the number on the slot the wire has been found to pass into without any feeling of "looseness."

This has come true and at the present time imported carbons are 300 per cent, higher than they were three months ago and those made in this country have also taken a jump in price.

With an article so necessary selling at such an increase it brought to the minds of many the waste that exhibitors have shown previously and some way in which this unnecessary waste of 40 or 50 per cent of a carbon could be eliminated.

This waste has been overcome by the Carbon Economizer which was invented by Claude Talley, former manager of the Regent theatre, New York City, and president of the Regent Theatre Company. Mr. Talley conceived the idea of the Carbon Economizer when trouble first started among the European powers, and at that time he applied for a patent on the device.

Made of Brass Composition

The Carbon Economizer is made of a brass composition. This is a good conductor, will stand excessive heat and will not increase resistance. They are 3½ inches in length, 1⅛ inches is allowed for support in the jaw of a lamp, the other 2½ inches to hold the carbon.

The device is made in ½ inch, 5½ inch and ¾ inch sizes, is round to give perfect contact, and will burn a carbon from 6 inches to ¾ of an inch. The section that holds the carbon is split in the center on both sides to allow for tension on the carbon and will spring back when the tension is released to remove the carbon.

As the carbon burns the tension can be released, the carbon moved up until it is held by ¾ of an inch and then burned until it is from ½ to ¾ of an inch from the end of the Economizer.

In order that the tension screw will not come in contact with the carbon and consequently weld to the body of the device, a collar fits around the top of the economical device to hold the screw in place; the screw passes through this collar to the outer portion of the body.

When the screw is turned it presses the walls of the economizer together and holds the carbon firmly in the container until the screw is loosened. The tension screw is made to allow for expansion of the metal under heat and can be turned without injury when red hot.

The Carbon Economizer can be used a long time if not abused, for it is mechanically correct. It can be used for either upper or lower carbon and will prove to be a great saving on an exhibitor's carbon bill.

This Economizer is being used mostly for burning the carbons shorter after they have been used as much as possible under ordinary conditions. It gives complete satisfaction.

Milwaukee Operators Celebrate Thanksgiving

Special to Motion Picture News

Milwaukee, Wis., December 2.

The Motion Picture Operators' Union No. 164 of Milwaukee, Wis., gave their first annual Thanksgiving party at the Freie Gemeinde Hall, Wednesday, November 25. It was a novel affair, held between 11 P. M. and 3 A. M. A representative crowd was in attendance and many unusual features were supplied by the committee in charge of the affair. Those on the entertainment committee were John Black, C. Colter, Nick Delorenzo, F. Lower, George Wittman and Arthur Weaver.

The affair proved such a success that the organization will arrange next year to hold another Thanksgiving ball.

Plans are also under way for an Operators' Masked Ball to be given at the Auditorium some time in February.

Dan Cupid has evidently picked out the local operators as his special victims in the last few weeks. For this is the only way in which the wholesale marrying among the operators that took place the first week in November can be explained. No less than three operators fell victims to the darts of the sly little God of Love in that week. They were Elmer Klase, the chief operator at the Strand, and George Wittman and Walter Klein at the Modjeska.

Problems That Puzzle Projection People

O. L. D., Rye, N. Y.—What is the difference between moving pictures and motion pictures? What is the thing called a Zoetrope?

Answer.—(a) Obviously the same meaning is intended to be conveyed by these two terms. Motion pictures would seem to be the better form of expression to use to properly express a reproduction of motion by means of pictures. That is, motion reproduced within the picture. The picture itself does not move when being seen. The other expression—moving pictures—is very expressive, and may convey the idea also that the pictures themselves move.

When the reproduction is faulty, or imperfect, from the picture not being steady on the screen, this expression is the more apt one. Animated pictures was a term used in past years. Living pictures were popular then also, and this word animate means to make alive. (b) A Zoetrope was a device having the price of admission to see living pictures, as they thought, they were firm in their demands for refunding the money.

The Wheel of Life

Hence, the good reason for not continuing the use of this word for this branch of photography. (b) Zoetrope, or wheel of life, is the word used for the toy to amuse children and has been for sale in the toy shops for years. The initial principle of moving images was suggested by this simple toy. Not until the celluloid film was perfected and placed on the market did this idea of motion in pictures, so long known to be possible of solution, make any advancement. This little toy was all.

It is made of a cylinder of cardboard, about ten inches in diameter, open at the top. Around the lower and interior rim is placed strips of paper, having drawn on them, by hand, pictures related to each other by separate phases in positions of motion. The cylinder is rapidly revolved by a touch of the hand, and the eye of the spectator is directed to the narrow and vertical slits made in the upper rim of the cardboard cylinder. One then sees the pictures assume motion from the rapid succession of the individual pictures conveyed to the eye through these slits.

The toy is easily made and is inexpensive, except the drawing of the pictures. The drawing of these pictures should afford the operator much amusement and advance his knowledge of motion picture phenomena. The film subject "Heezalia—a Farmer" shows how one mind has developed hand-drawn pictures. To see a reproduction of this film is worth a hundred times the price of an admission ticket.

B. U. M., London, O.—To decide a bet, will you kindly tell me if it is possible to hold an inflammable film still, without the machine being in motion and the fire-shutter raised, and not have it catch fire from the light striking on it? What makes a film catch fire if this is possible?

Answer.—(a) As strange as it may seem, this is possible under certain conditions of the film. This fact was stumbled onto when a fire marshal was having exhibited to him the possible chance of fire from a film catching fire when standing still in a machine and the light on it. The film was threaded in the machine, putting the end, or spacer, in first. This spacer was a piece of film without any pictures on it. This is used to join short lengths of films to make up a reel. Much to the surprise of the demonstrator, the film did not catch fire.

What Can Be Done with a Film

It is possible to have the light on a clean, clear celluloid film (remember the three "C's," not "R's"), and not have the film catch fire, even for a space of time. (b) When there is any color, or black coating, on a film, the light is prevented from passing through. This is necessary to produce the picture on the screen. The high lights—no color or coating—and the shadows—deep coating—produced by photography on the film.

Then what happens to this light prevented from passing through the film medium? You cannot destroy matter. There always has to be a balance. Light heat are very closely related. One is generally present when there is the other. So they both appear as heat and are absorbed till the temperature is at the ignition point of celluloid. In only a few seconds' time it reaches this point.

In the case of the clear celluloid, if only a small area is covered with a little ink, this point will at times become heated and catch fire. Films that have photographs of rooms or interiors with dark colored walls or backgrounds, are subject to fire in a higher degree than the films of outdoor scenes with large sky areas of uncoated surfaces.

M. D. S., Cohoes, N. Y.—Does it make any difference if the condensing lenses are put with the curved surfaces turned out? Are short focus lenses more liable to crack than long focus lenses?

Answer.—(a) Yes. There have been many attempts to improve the arrangement of the condensing lenses. The two lenses with the curved surfaces turned towards each other and inside of the mounting, has not been improved by any other arrangement of them. (b) Short focus lenses are more sensitive to changes in temperatures from the fact of being thicker at the center than longer or less curved lenses. Short focus lenses are therefore more liable to crack from any cold air striking on them when opening the door to trim the lamp. Lamp houses allowing of the lamp to be withdrawn from the back are to be preferred to those that have the side door only.

News of California Theatres

The Majestic theatre, Redlands, Cal., has been sold by J. A. Menard to W. Clyde Henderson, who has taken possession. Beginning Monday, November 30, The Century theatre, 523 South Main street, Los Angeles, became a motion picture house, contract having been made for Mutual service. The Century has 900 seats and has been the home of comic opera stock company for the past few years. By this change the Optic theatre, 533 So. Main street, loses the Mutual program.
Some Official Hints on Fire Prevention

In the last Bulletin issued by the State Insurance Department of Michigan, the following articles on "fire prevention" are contained. They are worthy of consideration by motion picture theatres, and could be used very advantageously by proprietors and managers who get out weekly programs by reproducing them.

KEEP EXITS UNLOCKED

Section 5 of Act 257 for the regulation of moving picture theatres provides that all exit doors must open outwardly, and shall not be locked where the building is open to the public. Recently a representative of the State Fire Marshal's Bureau discovered the exit doors in a Michigan theatre locked during a performance and promptly caused the arrest of the manager.

On June 18 a fire which originated from a moving picture equipment destroyed nearly all of the village of Dollarville, Luce County.

On October 22 a conflagration which started from a moving picture outfit burned to the ground more than half of the village of Walkerville, Oscoda County. A village situated a considerable distance from any railroad and so remotely located that the State Fire Marshal's Department had not been informed of or been made acquainted with the fact that moving pictures were being shown there.

In both of these instances the moving picture outfits which caused the trouble had not been either inspected or approved by the State Fire Marshal's Department, according to law.

An investigation made by a representative of the State Fire Marshal's Department of the Walkerville fire shows that the exhibition was being given in a second story hall contrary to Section 4 of Act 257, of 1913, which prohibits the locating of shows of this kind in any except first-story halls. The operating booth was not constructed according to law, and the entire hall and equipment presented a dangerous menace to the village.

The fires at Dollarville and Walkerville demonstrate two facts: First, chiefs of fire departments, township clerks, owners of theatres and patrons should notify the State Fire Marshal's Department when moving picture exhibitions are being given without the proper approval of the department.

Second, every moving picture theatre or exhibition is a fire menace, unless it conforms to the law, and should either meet with the requirements of the law or be put out of business.

THE PATRONS' DUTY

The moving picture theatre managers of Michigan are compelled by law to have their places equipped and arranged according to certain fixed rules and regulations and to conduct them according to the provisions of the same law. How about the patrons? They at least should be governed by a law of common sense. In most cases where there has been loss of life in theatre fires it has been due largely to panic and not to fire. When a fire is discovered people lose their heads. Here are a few simple suggestions:

If some one yells "fire" in a theatre, or you suspect that there is a fire make sure that there is one before you try to get out of the building. Don't run and scramble when you start to leave the building, but keep your feet and your head. Always learn where the exits are located when you first take your seats and when you try to leave the building use a regular exit and not either a window or perhaps some door which is not an exit at all. Don't try to beat everybody else to the exits, for you cannot all get through the door at the same time anyway. Remember you are a human being and don't fight and try to save your life whether anyone else is saved or not. Don't stand up and yell "fire" unless you know there is a fire.

A "Small Town" House That Measures Up to "Big Town" Standards

It is seldom if ever that one can go into a town of 9,000 inhabitants and find a theatre seating close to one thousand people, a house which can be compared favorably with the largest theatres in the country's metropolis, that is playing pictures at ten cents.

Such a house is the Auditorium theatre at Waukesha, Wis. Though Waukesha is a small town, its theatre-goers have big-town ideas, and the electric line to Milwaukee has placed its exhibitors in almost direct competition with the Milwaukee exhibitor. It is only an hour's ride to Milwaukee, and if an exhibitor wishes to succeed, he must keep his house and shows up to the Milwaukee downtown standard.

This probably is why Manager George B. Frellson has been so successful. The house is modern in every respect. It was built this year and is owned by the Frellson Amusement Company, which is controlled by George B. and Gustave Frellson.

The theatre, 50 x 150 feet, has a most spacious and artistic lobby. The display fixtures are frames, indented in the wall, with a border of electric lights illuminating them. From the lobby one steps into the foyer, completely cut off from the theatre proper by a plate glass partition with doors on each side.

There is but one floor, with seats for 914. The decorations are most tasteful, being in old rose, ivory and gold. The lighting is the indirect system with direct lighting side brackets. The seats are in keeping with the general decorative scheme and are all leather-upholstered and most comfortable and spacious. Music is furnished by a four-piece orchestra.

The ventilating system, which was installed by the Milwaukee Corrugated Company, is the same that has been adopted by the United States Government, and it keeps the theatre sweet and dry at all times.

The operator's booth, in charge of Benjamin Shock, contains two Modograph machines and mercury arc rectifiers. The throw is 120 feet to a specially prepared quartz screen. Two shows of four reels each are given a day, the General Service being used.

Though Waukesha has no daily paper, every method that is open to him is used by Manager Frellson to boost his house.

$60,000 Quaker City Theatre Nearly Ready

When it comes to new motion picture houses, Philadelphia deserves not its reputation of a slow town. Rather is it in the vanguard of the procession. Among several new buildings, a notable addition to the field is the "Tioga," almost completed—in fact, this up-to-the-minute play house will be opened on Christmas day.

The Tioga is owned by the Tioga Realty Company and will cost in the neighborhood of $60,000. Sauer & Kahn, 1112 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, are the architects and have put into the house some very new and original ideas. It will be one of the largest in the city, with seats for about 2,000 people.

New Harper, Detroit, Will Open December 1

The new Harper theatre, at Woodward avenue and Harper avenue, Detroit, was ready to open December 1. It accommodates about 400 persons. Alvin D. Hirsch, attorney at 329 Majestic building, is the proprietor. A Masterlic Screen and a Powers machine, have already been installed. Although small, it is one of the prettiest and coziest playhouses in the city.

Eleventh Allentown Theatre in Operation

Allentown, Penna., now has its eleventh moving picture theatre since the new “Franklin,” on Tilghman street, near Fourth, was opened to the public Thanksgiving Day. This theatre is one of the prettiest and safest moving picture theatres in the city. The theatre is owned and operated by Frank F. Seiberling, of No. 604 North Sixth street, Allentown, former proprietor and present owner of the Forest Inn, located eight miles east of Weissport, Pa.

The building which was erected and furnished at a cost of about twenty thousand dollars, has been in the course of erection for almost a year. It is a single story building with a large shell front effect. The rule of “Safety First,” has been carried out to the letter in the new theatre. There are seven fire exits and when necessary, the theatre can be emptied in less than a minute’s time.

Wood and Concrete Flooring Used

The new theatre has a frontage of 52 feet and is 86 feet deep. It is constructed of concrete foundations with brick side, rear and front walls, laid in cement plaster and finished in white coating. The front of the theatre is 25 feet high and has a truss roof which is finished in herringbone concrete. The floor is of concrete covered by wood.

Ladies’ and gentlemen’s retiring rooms have been built in the front portion of the building. There are also sanitary drinking fountains, and a large business office constructed within the shell in the front. The moving picture booth is of the John-Maxville type, which is thoroughly approved by the underwriters and the kind used in most of the modern moving picture theatres throughout the country.

In the booth are installed two No. 6-A Powers motion picture machines of the latest style.

The interior of the theatre is all in a pure white body with a pale green border, with the woodwork all mahogany. One of the features of the auditorium is the beautiful lighting system. At different points of vantage and suspended from the ceiling are elaborate chandelier electric lights of the indirect illumination system. Little red bulbs are above each fire exit.

Eleven Theatres Now Running in Allentown

The ventilation is of the underground conduit system, such as is used in most of the modern theatres.

With the opening of the Franklin there are now eleven moving picture houses in the city, the Franklin, Hippodrome, Victor, Pergola, Madison, Washington, Temperance, Allen, Palace, Regent and Nedsong.

Cincinnati’s Strand Has Holiday Opening

Thanksgiving Day saw the opening of the Strand, the largest downtown motion-picture theatre in Cincinnati, O. It will be essentially a feature house and its opening marks a new era in the motion-picture industry here. The Strand, which has a seating capacity of 1,550, under the management of Isaac Libson, who has already successfully steered the destinies of two big theatres—the Family and the Bijou—has begun a campaign of newspaper advertising which has placed it on a par with the legitimate houses, as far as publicity is concerned.

This means that advance notices and reviews of its pictures will be printed in the columns devoted to theatrical news in the Cincinnati papers. Exhibitors in charge of the larger theatres of the city are preparing to follow the lead of the Strand in case its policies should prove of material value.

In connection with its newspaper advertising campaign, the management of the Strand has added a press agent to its corps of employees, and the results so far have seemed ample to justify the expense. The first move of the press representative was an invitation to all newspaper men in the city to attend the opening performance.

The theatre, which was constructed only a year ago as a burlesque house, has been transformed throughout. The scheme of decorations and lights has been changed to harmonize with the pictures, and a $20,000 Wurlitzer organ has been installed. This organ is similar to the one which has been used by Libson for some time past in the Family theatre, where its music has been one of the attractions.

$50,000 Theatre Started in Jackson

A $50,000 theatre is to be erected at once on the fifty-foot strip of property just west of the New Majestic motion picture house, Jackson, Miss., by John Livolar, of Canton. This statement was made by Houston Bowers, manager of the New Majestic, who will be associated with Mr. Livolar in the management of the new playhouse.

The work of tearing down an old frame structure on the property has begun, and as soon as the contract for the new building is let work on the erection of the new opera house will begin.

It is planned to erect a two-story building, with a frontage of fifty feet. The plans call for a theatre building that will accommodate the largest dramatic attractions, in addition to motion picture programs.

The new theatre will have a seating capacity of between 1,500 and 2,000 people. Whether there will be one or two galleries has not been decided.

The building will be of brick, highly artistic in decorative features.

When the new theatre is ready for operation the New Majestic will be divided into two store apartments and rented out to retail business firms.

$60,000 Theatre Promised in Detroit

Delray, a suburb of Detroit, is to have another fine theatre that will seat in the neighborhood of a thousand people. It will be a combination theatre, store and flat building, one of the most modern on the west side of the city, costing approximately $60,000. The owner is John Kaczur, who came to this country about 25 years ago with the clothing that he had on his back and the sum of five cents in his pocket.

It will be known as the Pulaski theatre building, and situated at the corner of West Jefferson and Pulaski avenues. The theatre proper fronts on West Jefferson, the corner store on the two streets, and five other stores on Pulaski street. The six flats are above the store building.

Work on the building is advancing rapidly and it is fully anticipated by Mr. Kaczur that the theatre will be ready by the first of February at the latest. The walls and roof are finished, and all that remains now is the interior work, putting on the final touches and installing the proper equipment.

Old Faces at New Detroit Theatres

Eddie Murphy, who tendered his resignation as assistant manager of the Columbia theatre, Detroit, Mich., about a month ago and who went to the Bijou theatre in Saginaw, Mich., will return to Detroit early in December to be manager of the new William Penn theatre, at the corner of Woodward and Philadelphia avenues, which is rapidly being completed.

The theatre will be added to the chain already operated by the Calvert Theatre Company, of which David King is president, and Lester Levey, general manager. Mr. Murphy was connected with the Columbia since it opened three years ago.

A. J. Gillingham, proprietor of the New Empire theatre on Woodward avenue, Detroit, has appointed W. H. Smith to succeed B. Harlan Starr as manager, owing to the latter’s resigning. Mr. Smith has been assistant at that playhouse for the past six months, having come to the Empire from Albany, N. Y.

T. J. McCarron, son of J. H. McCarron, manager of the Family theatre, has been appointed assistant manager.

Theatres Here and There

The Forest Theatre on Burnet avenue, Cincinnati, gains where Keith’s theatre loses in the person of George Schoettle, former treasurer at Keith’s theatre, who has been made manager of the picture house out in Avondale. Schoettle has been in the ticket office of Keith’s theatre for fifteen years and knows the ins and outs of the profession.

F. Brown has leased the Lyric Theatre at Pembroke, Ky., from Mrs. J. R. Paine, and changed the name to the Novelty. A new picture machine has been installed and a show is given nightly at five and ten cents admission.

The South End Amusement Company of Louisville has been incorporated with a capital of $25,000. The incorporators are H. B. Strube, J. M. Keaney, H. C. Peltier and W. C. Dugan. The company is planning to erect a new motion picture theatre.

Work on the construction of the new motion picture theatre in Hollywood avenue, near Long avenue, Elizabeth, N. J., will be started in a few days. The building will be of concrete construction and will cost between $6,000 and $7,000.

Plans are being prepared by Carl P. Berger for a one-story moving picture theatre, 130 by 147 feet, to be built at the north-east corner of Germantown avenue and Venango street, Philadelphia, for Mrs. J. Effinger.

W. H. Linton, proprietor of the Hippodrome theatre, Little Falls, N. Y., has purchased from Mrs. Grace the property on Main street now occupied by the Hagar & Hassell lunch room and cigar stand and which extends to the rear of the theatre. Mr. Linton will build an addition, 43 by 50 in size, at the rear of the Hippodrome. The work will be started in the spring. Carl Haug & Sons, the architects, will prepare the plans.

Shakespeare Theatre, Chicago, Is Leased

A noteworthy transaction in Chicago moving theatre property has just been closed in the acquirement by the United Moving Pictures company, G. G. Schoneberg, president, from the Alfred Amusement Company of the lease of the Shakespeare theatre, at the northwest corner of East Forty-third street and Ellis avenue, Chicago, for a reported bonus of $35,000. The lease has ten years to run and the Moving Pictures company also secured an option for an extension of ten additional years at a reported annual rent of $8,000.

The Shakespeare theatre was opened last June, has a seating capacity of 1,000, and is one of the best appointed playhouses of its kind in the city. Hume & Co. were the brokers, representing both parties.

It is rumored that James Washington and Chas. Wolters have bought the opera house and film business at Ruthven, 1a., from L. T. Clark.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Jeffers opened the Electric Moving Picture theatre at Litchville, N. D., in the old Bowan Hotel building.

The members of the Morningside Heights Improvement Association of Grand Rapids, Mich., may go into the moving picture business if they can get a lease of the old Curling rink in that neighborhood and if the city council will grant them a permit to do that kind of business during the summer months. The members will all take stock in the company and undertake to get some of the financial benefits that someone else coming to that section of the city might get.

The proposed Keith theatre to be erected in Grand Rapids, Mich., was brought one step nearer in the past few days with the visit to the city of George L. Rapp, Chicago, of the firm of C. W. & George L. Rapp, architects for the western district of the Keith interests. Mr. Rapp went over the various sites which have been given tentative consideration. Mr. Rapp returned to Chicago with the preliminary figures and at once will prepare sketches, estimates and plans for the new playhouse.

Doing of Michigan Theatre Owners

The Gem and Electric Theatre Company, Mauisette, Mich., has been incorporated for $3,500.

Stockholders of the Alhambra theatre, Toledo, Ohio, adjoining the Second National Bank building on Summit street, have incorporated as the Citizens’ Alhambra Theatre Company, with a capital stock of $65,000. The principal stockholders are John J. Gardiner, Fletcher C. Hull and Richard D. Logan.

The Delt theatre opened November 16 with vaudeville and pictures at the popular price of ten cents. The house is leased by the Delt Theatre Company, who recently opened a theatre in Marquette. Lawrence Jacobs is the house manager. The theatre seats 700 people and cost $70,000.

Mason Hopper, producer of motion pictures, and who has been working in the western part of Michigan for some time with a company, contemplates the erection of a manufacturing plant at Reeds Lake, Mich., which is also to include the erection of a theatre for the staging of the plays.

J. C. Peterson, of Traverse City, Mich., is drawing plans for a moving picture and dance hall to be erected in Frankfort, Mich. It will be of brick and steel, two stories high, 75 by 105 feet in size.

T. A. Fowler, architect, 7 State street, Hillsdale, Mich., is drawing plans for a theatre to cost $38,000 for C. W. McVane, of the Smith Hotel. It will be of concrete, steel, brick and terra cotta; will be fireproof, three stories high, 62 by 122 feet in size.

It is reported that the Marcus Loew interests are planning to erect a large picture theatre in Grand Rapids, Mich.

Theatres of Kalamazoo, Mich., which opened Sunday, November 22, the first time in seven days, did a thriving business, indicating that citizens are in favor of photoplays on the Sabbath.

$50,000 Theatre for Logan, Pa.

Horace Groskin has closed negotiations with Theodore M. DeHany, representing a moving picture company for a site on Broad, between Ruscomb and Rockland streets, Logan, Pa., upon which the buyers will build a moving picture theatre seating 1,000 persons. They have had plans prepared and work will be begun upon the building shortly. The cost of the structure and site combined, will be about $50,000.

There is talk of building a large moving picture theatre in Garland, N. J. Several managers have been looking the field over the past few days. It is proposed to build a place that will seat at least 600 people, and to get it on one of the main streets, if possible.

Minnesota motion picture theatres generally will aid the sale of Red Cross Christmas seals between now and the holidays. Nearly all of the theatres will run at least one or two pictures that takes a lesson in charitable giving, or will show the ravages of tuberculosis. The theatres are looked on as the greatest aids in the campaign.
Editor's Note.—This department is prepared to answer all questions from exhibitors relating to the use of music in connection with photoplays, and to suggest suitable music for current pictures. Correspondence will be welcomed.

Using the Resources of an Orchestra to Interpret a Photoplay

By H. S. FULD

YOU will have noticed in these columns that my argument has always been against orchestras in theatres for motion pictures. But I will have to retract a bit. I have seen and heard a large orchestra, wonderfully handled, rehearse the musical accompaniment for a five reel picture. Try if you can to imagine an orchestra of twenty-one pieces, follow a picture scene by scene, carry a theme through the entire production, varying the tempo and so on, and really carry the story as it were with melody.

I had heard of the Strand Theatre and its wonderful orchestra under the direction of Carl Eduarde, but as I could never quite grasp the idea of an orchestra playing for the picture, I was under the impression that it was no different from the average theatre with an orchestra, with the probable exception of the music being better rendered. To say that I was astounded would be putting it mildly.

It is the custom of Mr. Rothapfel, the manager of the Strand, to have a rehearsal every Saturday morning, where he personally selects and arranges the different musical numbers to be played the following week for the accompaniment of the picture. It is wonderful, to say the least, to see how and with what apparent ease these scores—and they are truly scores—are arranged. One of the most remarkable facts, if not the predominant one, is that here this large orchestra works with him as though it were a piano player alone.

Mr. Rothapfel paces up and down the floor of the stage, giving directions in a short, snappy tone entirely foreign to his "office behavior." The picture is on the screen and he has a telephone in his hand with which he is constantly in communication with the operator. His stenographer sits at one side of the stage taking down his suggestions, the changes as he directs them in the music, and the fast or slow orders as given to the operator. Watching all this is so fascinating that one is apt to forget that a rehearsal is in progress, but the sudden stopping of the picture for a change from, or repetition of, the selection then being played brings one back to earth as it were. Here a little is added, there a little taken away, here a little slower or a little faster, until the music just dovetails, as it were, into each scene.

At the afternoon performance the next day the music flowed without a hitch or pause as though it had been rehearsed for weeks—never a false move, and to think that this can be done with but two and a half hours' preparation the day previous, and with an orchestra of twenty-one.

The picture that is mentioned in this article is Lasky's "Rose of the Rancho" in five parts, and the theme that is prominent throughout the entire musical accompaniment is "Driago's Serenade," and selections from "Carmen" are continually in evidence. The idea of having a theme carried through an entire production has been advocated in these columns over and over again, but Mr. Rothapfel goes us one better.

He has done what on first thought seemed impossible. These columns have spoken often enough on the proper accompaniment of the picture, fitting the music as it were with each scene separately, and if necessary to improvise. But always the pianist, or Warhitzer, or other one-man orchestras were in mind; never was an orchestra, especially a large one at that, deemed capable of doing. To illustrate:

In "The Rose of the Rancho" the theme as previously mentioned in "Driago's Serenade," and into every scene in which Kearney, of the U.S. Government Service, appears with Juanita, daughter of the Rancho, this melody is prominent. As the other scenes intervene the melody is subdued, with counterpoint or counter melody, thus carrying the story, as it were, by linking the scenes together. The theme being identified with Kearney and Juanita, the idea that they are to be always thought of as being in love and helpless when separated is always in evidence.

Rothapfel from the notes of his stenographer arranges a sort of time-table or schedule, or score—call it anything you will—and this is what is used for the picture's accompaniment. Just as an instance appended here is a transcript from Rothapfel's score for the photodrama.

Play "Middleton Book," No. 4 (a musician's score book) until title "Juanita, Lark of the California military";
No. 5, "Middleton Book," until "Emilias"; Rothapfel's score.

"La Paloma"—D. S. until "Espinoza hasn't registered, you copy the boundaries";
"Carmen" from letter G until Kinsiaik walks into dinner room Introduction from "Carmen" until action commences;
Hurry No. 33, "Middleton Book," until girl stabs herself;
"Carmen" from after Letter F until half-breedlaughs and exits;
Hurry No. 33, "Middleton Book" until Senol, the Indian, enters bedroom;
"Carmen" after letter F again until Indian stakes out of room; and Hurry No. 33, "Middleton Book" until Rosc of the Rancho takes her morning outing, and so on.

The numbers and letters refer to the numbers and letters in the "Middleton Book."

The foregoing article you must remember deals with an exception. There is in all probability no other theatre that has an orchestra playing the pictures in this inimitable manner. In the first place the orchestra must act as a unit and be capable of grasping the ideas of its director on the instant. Secondly, it means lots of practice, but most of all it absolutely requires a master musical mind to direct it.

Theatres that use a picture for a week and have an orchestra that is half way competent would do well to send a representative to one of the Strand theatre's rehearsals, see how the music is fitted to the picture, have a talk with Rothapfel and get his ideas.

Of course where the one-man-orchestras are in vogue this method of "playing to the pictures" is not alone possible, but it is the only way that the music should be rendered.

Tell the story of the picture as it were with the music. Fit in a song or theme where the words or even the melody will fit the unspoken words or the action on the screen. Avoid the long, classical selections that will run through numerous scenes without any possibility of being appropriate or in any way fitting to the action on the screen.

It cannot be advocated any too emphatically: Change your music with each change of action.

To explain: The scene now on is a Spanish love scene; the two lovers are in the garden; you are playing "Senorita"; the next scene shows the soldiers in the barracks for probably two or three minutes, and then reverts back to the garden scene. The moment the barrack scene appears break away from the melody with counterpoint and back again when the garden scene appears. Try and make your music fit.

in direct communication with the operating booth, which is located right next to his office.

This theatre has a stage 14 feet in depth from the curtain line back, which is fully equipped in every particular, including a large stage switchboard, which controls all the lights, both in the auditorium and on the stage. The theatre is so wired so that the entire auditorium can also be controlled from the operating room, thus doing away with all employees on the stage, when pictures only are being shown.

Suitable retiring rooms are provided for the ladies, and sanitary drinking fountains are installed in the lobby.

This building was remodelled and opened to the public in three months from the date that the contractors began work, and from the beginning enjoyed success.

A sprinkler system is installed over the stage, and the dressing rooms, which are located above the stage floor, at the side, are also equipped in a like manner.

A vacuum cleaning plant is one more detail that has been added to make this theatre one of the most complete of its kind.

The theatre is fifty by one hundred feet, and all the material used in its construction is fireproof, such as brick, concrete, hollow tile, metal lath, and plaster.

There are forty box seats, and the two projection machines have a motor control. The length of the throw is about ninety feet. The seats were furnished by Heywood Brothers and Wakefield. A Gold Radium fibre screen is also part of the equipment.

Besides a large pipe organ, music is furnished by the aid of a six-piece orchestra. Hillgreen, Lane & Company, Alliance, Ohio, are the makers of the instruments.

Paramount pictures are shown, and six shows a day are given.

The admission is ten cents at matinees and ten, fifteen and twenty at night. The theatre is located in the heart of the business district.

C. Howard, 2321 Dime Savings Bank building, Detroit, is the architect.

Get Poster Portraits of All The Universal Stars

A word about the pulling power of Portrait Posters when artistically displayed in your Theatre Lobby

UNCONSCIOUSLY, Exhibitors have a most powerful weapon placed in their hands in the shape of Public Hero Worship, but many of the supposedly wise Exhibitors have failed to take advantage of this magnificent possibility. The Public have learned to idolize all the Universal Movie Stars. They want to see their favorites all the time. Why not commercialize this desire by showing in an artistic manner, the beautiful poster portraits of all the Universal Stars in your Lobby? We have beautiful paper in 6 colors of every Universal Star. When well grouped these posters make a rich display.

Write your Exchange and order these poster portraits of the entire Universal crowd. Have someone with an eye for Art, display these posters in your lobby (frame them for your walls, if possible) and note the stunning effect. If you can't get these poster portraits from your Exchange, write or wire the Morgan Lithograph Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, and they will ship them to you direct, BUT FIRST WRITE YOUR EXCHANGE. Do it today.

Another Universal Winner

Three Sheet Posters for Single Reels

From the East-West-North-South—from every point of the compass—letters pour in to The Universal Offices every day, complimenting us on the new and unique ideas always produced first for the advancement of Universal Moving Pictures.

The latest stunt is our production (at immense expense) of 3-sheet posters for single-reel pictures. This is a radical departure from the ordinary routine. One-sheet stands were considered a luxury for single reels, but the Universal stops at nothing.

No idea, no matter how good it is, is good enough for Universal Exhibitors; therefore, without regard to cost, we now have ready 3-sheet posters for from 7 to 9 single-reel pictures every week, allowing you to play up your single reels as strong as the multiple-reel pictures.

You can get these 3-sheet stands from your Exchange, or if your Exchange cannot supply you promptly write or wire the Morgan Lithograph Company, at Cleveland, Ohio, and they will supply you direct. Try this new Universal winner. 'Twill pay you big returns. Write today.

He Coupled Up the Newspapers and the "Movies"

He placed the "Adventures of Kathlyn" in newspapers throughout the country. His latest great successes are "Lucille Love," "Trey O' Hearts," "The Master Key."

For two years he was syndicate manager of the Chicago Tribune and also its Sunday Editor. Then, he made newspaper stars of Lillian Russell and Laura Jean Libby; he syndicated the political writings of Finley Peter Dunne and Sam Blythe; he secured national audiences for Jim Corbett and "Mr. Dooley." To cut a very long list short, a great number of the important new features in American journalism have been nationalized by A. P. Robyn.

The newspapers know he has no use for dead ones. He has kept their respect for his endorsements by giving them service. He will handle nothing except that which is good; and his customers believe in his say-so.

If you have an important idea for a feature, confer with him.

The Monroe theater appeared to be the mecca of all the people in town last evening, the sidewalk in front of the show being completely filled with men, women and children from shortly after seven until long after ten o'clock. At one time the press was so great that Chief of Police Blunt had to interfere. The tremendous crowd, the largest in the history of the show house, was occasioned by the showing of "Zudora," the Thanhouser series picture so extensively advertised in the Chicago Tribune. The management states that over 1,600 people saw the picture, and undoubtedly many hundreds more were unable to get in at all. As it was, the show ran until almost midnight.

1915, As Seen From 1914

AND yet again this has been the greatest year in motion pictures.

A year ago, or, rather, in the early spring of last year, I put this question to an experienced observer of conditions:

"Don't you think that the industry has now over-reached itself—that it is in a boom condition, up to and beyond its normal crest of development?"

"WELL, I might," said he, "except for the fact I have laid this charge against the industry every year for the past seven years and each time found myself in error. Every year I have said to myself: Here, surely, is the apex of development! Now, look out for subsidence. But the industry did not subside. On the contrary, new and greater heights of development were attained. We swerve off at some great angle or angles and, all in all, we keep on growing despite weaknesses and in an amazing way. There seem to be no end and no limitations."

All of which is very true. But, for analysis, I should change the last sentence and say:

"There seems to be no end because there are no limitations."

LAST Christmas, on this page, some prophecies were attempted and some truths asserted. Like most prophecies, many did not come true, within the year; and the assertions all may not have been truths.

But one at least was; and today it is more deeply significant than ever. As a reason, it is at the bottom of this year's, last year's and each year's amazing development of this industry.

It will be the fundamental reason for the surprising growth to come.

It is the elasticity of the motion picture.

THE motion picture is the expression of life itself.

As such, its field of supply, its sources for expression, are only limited by the world and the history of the world. Its appeal is only limited by those of the human race who do not see, or seeing, cannot comprehend.

AT first the picture was only a novelty.

Its appeal was confined to novelty-seekers.

But those who judged that it would remain a novelty were no more hopelessly wrong than are those today who still believe it to be a mediocre form of amusement, whose chief attraction consists of showing things in motion.

This year we have proven that the motion picture is dramatic.

People sneered at this possibility only a year ago. But dramatic success has been accomplished.

Mistakes had been made. Great stars have been miscast, and good looks and plays were spoiled in their adaptation to pictures.

The exasperated public and exhibitor have cried out:

"Cease, gentlemen, and give us just good pictures. We don't want big names for drawing-cards: give us good pictures."

BUT here and there real successes have been evolved; and the achievement is great; it is wonderful.

We know now that we can and will make good pictures of good books and plays—and this on a general scale.

(1914, by Exhibitors' Times, Inc.)

We even know—because it has been fully proven—that the picturization of a play can be made more attractive than the play itself, better in atmosphere, story, construction, artistic presentation, and, at least, as good in acting.

And from this we know that books and plays can now be successfully picturized—many, indeed, improved upon—and through this agency made imperishable and accessible to the inhabitants of the civilized world.

Indeed a wonderful—and a new—achievement!

AGAIN, this year we have increasingly proven the motion picture to be a big, vital adjunct to daily journalism.

The still photographs of the daily newspaper are in motion now, not only in the big centers of population, but wherever the newspaper goes.

A great field, just started!

We have proven the motion picture to be serial fiction, and this with a most varied subject matter and through very wide channels of distribution.

All this progress within a year! All of it along new lines! And yet a few years ago it seemed as though the picture had reached its commercial limit of development.

THE reason is the picture’s elasticity—the fact that so many new lines of development are constantly available and that as each comes into being, a new class of patrons, perhaps millions, are brought regularly to the theatre door.

Thus the potential market is so great, its absorption of what it wants so ready, that the industry races along, surprisingly, overpoweringly, despite over production and poor production along certain lines, despite much faulty exhibition, and a measure of uneconomic distribution.

IT is a fact, which often we fail to reckon on, that several millions more of people see motion pictures this year than last year.

They are not “fans.” They are not tickled with mere novelty or photographic motion.

They go to see the kind of pictures that were not generally produced last year—excellent dramatic, topical and educational pictures—pictures which were deemed impossible but three years ago, and which were called masterpieces but a year and a half ago.

FOR the comfortable housing of this newer and greater audience there have sprung up all over the country—from Broadway to Vancouver—large and beautiful edifices, devoted wholly to motion pictures.

Never in the entire history of the amusement business has there been a building era so remarkable in every way.

The better picture, the better class of patrons, the better theatre—these are the developments of the year past, in so remarkable a degree that 1914 will remain a red letter year in the history of the industry.

JUST what new lines of the ever-elastic picture will develop in 1915—in its production, distribution and exhibition—we do not clearly know: but we do know that new lines will develop and that a much greater market will again spring into being.

There is the unbroken ground of the educational field—the one we talk so much about and do so little for—the utilization of several hundred thousand schools, churches and colleges, for motion pictures.

Here is a field, undeveloped simply because no force sufficiently resourced and organized has been applied to it.

It is the writer’s opinion that the most signal advance in 1915 will be another enterprise, also much discussed but thus far incompletely undertaken—namely, the national advertising of pictures.

Here again is an undertaking which demands adequate resources and organization: but these are not lacking within the industry today.

AS an element in 1914’s progress, however modest, I wish in closing to speak a word for the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

The things we stand for have been made patent in these columns. They need not be enumerated.

Sufficient to say they spell progress within and for the whole industry, in which we consider the exhibitor to be the fundamental factor. We, too, have progressed in 1914—that is as patent as our policy. Perhaps the best indication of our progress is this number, which with some pride, we place before the trade.

WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON.
CHRISTMAS SEASON FINDS HEADS OF PROGRAMS OPTIMISTIC OVER FUTURE OF FILM INDUSTRY

A Banner Year in Sight, Says President Aitken of the Mutual

Harry E. Aitken, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, in response to a request for a seasonable expression to Motion Picture News, said:

"The responsible, enterprising factors in motion pictures are confronted by a season of opportunity and profit which I believe will be the greatest in the history of this tremendous industry.

"Business methods are being applied to business conditions, and the art of pictures has been developed to a point almost undreamed of by those who began with motion pictures in their earlier stages of development.

"There are bound to be disappointments for those who have entered a technical field without first having mastered its requirements, but the experienced organizations will not be among those to share in their failures in the future.

"In this connection it may be the proper time to sound a note of warning to those of the public who regard the motion picture business as presenting the same sort of possibilities offered by the gold mining and oil opportunities of a few decades ago. Those who seek the profits of the motion picture industry should remember the large amount of capital essential to successful operation under present conditions, and they should exercise care in choosing only those of ripened and successful experience in the industry to handle their investments.

"I have had occasion before to call attention to the fact that isolated concerns cannot hope to compete with the large companies in presenting features, because the larger companies can present them as by-products and at a price which the smaller companies cannot hope to meet.

"I merely make mention of these circumstances to discourage reckless investment in an important business, which has a technique which must be learned and which requires tremendous capital to operate.

"Motion pictures are better today than ever before—millions are interested in their presentation.

"Astounding Development"—Hodkinson of Paramount Pictures

W. W. Hodkinson, president of Paramount Pictures Corporation declares:

"It is interesting to trace the development of the film business as step by step it has progressed from the stage of being a toy or scientific novelty to where it ranks fourth in the industries of the United States where it has superseeded largely the entire field of theatrical activities, and to where it rivals the printing press itself in shaping opinion and providing education and pleasure for the public.

"The motion picture industry has been the wonder of the financial world, because it has been able to reach its present stage of development without enticing outside capital, as has been customary with all other new enterprises of similar magnitude.

"The limited capital of individuals combined with their energy has been ample to develop the business to its present stage. In the future, however, the motion picture industry must be conducted along conservative business lines rather than in the haphazard manner that has prevailed. A few of the thinkers have long realized that this was necessary.

"The Paramount Pictures Corporation was the first recognition in a large way of the necessity of proceeding according to definite business principles in the distribution of films.

"The efficient distribution of the supply is the problem of the future, and Paramount is devoting and will continue to devote every energy along this line."

Powers, of United Film Service, Sees Big Business Ahead for Producers

"It is wrongly argued that periods of general depression bring stringency or disaster to enterprises that have for their prime object the mission of relieving the mind of its unpleasant burdens," says P. A. Powers, president, United Film Service.

"In other words, the 'business' of entertaining should, by a rule of inverse reasoning, which, nevertheless, is correct reasoning in this instance, be in its most flourishing condition when other lines of endeavor are adversely affected. Therefore, it is apparent that the moving picture industry is not subservient to the general panic feeling that now exists in the markets of the world on account of the war.

"Instances which seem to prove that my above deductions are incorrect cannot be traced to general conditions. Rather are they the manifestation of organic weakness as regards individual enterprises in this field. Where sound principles of business are applied and where methods dictated by experience are in vogue, a corporation embarked in the manufacture or marketing of photoplays cannot fail of success.

"I figure that the coming year will be a period of solidification in the motion picture business. I feel that much knowledge will be derived during that period which will tend toward the systematization of the business. I also believe that a genuine literature of the screen is being gradually developed, and that the grade of offerings during the season now approaching will be of a much higher grade than has generally been the case.

"I see in the present lack of stability in financial circles nothing more than a natural readjustment which, logically, will result in a firmer foundation on which to base future administration of business affairs."

The day has really gone by when a slight fluctuation in general business conditions brings about depression in the film industry. The public insists upon being amused come what may.

Seely of Alco is Pleased With Bright Outlook for the Coming Year

With calamity blowers on every side, the average producer and distributor proclaiming the ruination of the business, upheaval of present-day methods, the losing game of the exhibitor and the impossibility of securing consistently good material, President Seely, of Alco, "sits tight" and speaks in glowing terms of the outlook.

"There is not a day passes," says Mr. Seely, "during which a new batch of contracts does not arrive.

"Our temporary clients are fast becoming permanent, and the Alco program slides majestically to the heights we originally aspired to.

"Within the past two weeks, nineteen new houses have contracted for Alco service. The managers of these houses are tried and true picture men and are not experimenting.

"The veriest tyro of an exhibitor realizes the advantage of a feature program over an ordinary run of pictures and are, according to our results, acting accordingly.

"Our exchanges report improvement in the financial condition of their various territory. Our peculiarly constructed contract, which eliminates all hardships, in so far as the exhibitor is concerned, has struck a most popular chord and we are reaping the reward.

"Our original idea of allowing the exhibitor to try our program, then, if he found it a burden, to discontinue it, proved salt on the festive table. It is the seasoning with which the exhibitor can temper his futures."
Cobé a Firm Believer in the Feature

Andrew J. Cobé, the director of the destinies of the Alliance Film Corporation, while admitting that the single reel has a place to fill, believes that the great possibilities of the motion picture art will and can only be realized by the film that is in multiple reels.

"The feature is here," says Mr. Cobé, "but if it is to stay and be a source of entertainment and inspiration to the spectator and a source of profit and prestige to the producer, it will have to be more than the average feature is today.

"The ideal feature is a mixture of art, sentiment, action, suspense, good acting and intelligence. I believe that this type of film is on the way, and when it arrives the public will welcome it. There are pictures that are made intelligently but lack sentiment, and pictures with sentiment that are ridiculous because the intelligence is missing.

"It was this faith in the public and faith in the real feature that prompted me to launch the Alliance program into the already crowded waters of the film industry. The success that has attended the venture has substantiated the faith. The features on my program all conform in a more or less degree to my ideas and ideals."

Clements Enthusiastic Over 1915 Prospects

B. E. Clements, Kriterion Service Mica Film Corporation, says:

"You can put me down on record as having said that I predict that the year 1915 will be a banner year in the moving picture business. I have heard people say, and I know myself, that business in general throughout the United States in the past year has been nothing to brag about.

"This has been due to several things, including the tariff revision, unsettled conditions in financial circles, the turmoil in Europe and the tendency of big business to sit tight. This, however, has not been the case with the moving picture business, as this year has surpassed all previous years in prosperity.

"I believe these very things that have affected the business world adversely in the past year are permanently and effectually straightening out, and there should be no reason why business in general should not experience a most successful year in 1915.

"This, of course, will have its effect in the film business and give it increased prosperity. You ask me regarding the Kriterion Program? I will sum it up in a few words: Good stories, good photography, and co-operation with the exhibitor. And these, I know, are absolutely essential. The people demand quality, for they are educated in this line, and we manufacturers must give it to them.

"Allow me to join the others in wishing everyone a very Merry Christmas and a most prosperous New Year."

NEW YORK ASSOCIATION HOLDS MASS MEETING

A MASS MEETING of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York was held at the Marlborough Hotel on Wednesday morning, December 2.

Matters relative to legislation for the coming year was taken under consideration and a legislation committee was appointed with Mr. Rosenson as its chairman, for the purpose of drafting a bill for the admission of minors in motion picture theaters and also a bill permitting standees, which the exhibitors will endeavor to have passed during this legislative term.

The matter of the ball was taken up and much enthusiasm was shown by the exhibitors for the hearty co-operation which the manufacturers and tradesmen have extended to them.

After matters relative to the ball have been straightened out the entire Association will be reorganized in accordance with the new constitution and by-laws and its principles will be strictly adhered to.

Selznick Predicts Disappearance of Daily Changes of Programs Everywhere

Lewis J. Selznick, vice-president and general manager of the World Film Corporation, is very enthusiastic over the prospect for good business in the film field.

Mr. Selznick declares that the demand for features is larger than ever. The public has taken to the idea of multiple reels for the development of a story that the popularity of these pictures is increasing with leaps and bounds.

At the same time Mr. Selznick has observed that the people attending motion picture theatres are impatient with the pace.

He says that the days of mere yardage will pass and a feature in order to take well must be a real feature—every foot of film must help tell the story of the plot effectively.

Mr. Selznick also declares that the day of the daily change of program is going by. A producer cannot do any picture justice if it must be turned out in a hurry to meet the demands of the daily change plan. Time, thought and money must be spent on any production to make it acceptable, according to the high standards now set for motion pictures by the public.

He expects to see the day not far distant when there will not be any daily changes. All theatres will have a few good pictures showing at least several days, and probably a week.

ITALY A MARKET FOR AMERICAN FILMS

THE war has not only opened the South American film market to producers in the United States, but has made Italy a possible user of American made pictures. This is the result of the sudden curtailment of production among English, German and French studios.

Italy has been a generous buyer of films manufactured in these countries, but in the present crisis is forced to turn elsewhere for pictures. America thus benefits by the situation.

Our producers in supplying the present need of Italy may open up a permanent market for American photoplays in the highest class.

Letters from abroad recently received by Motion Picture News indicate an opportunity in Italy for films made in this country. One in particular from Aldo P. Zacchi, Milano, 23 Viale Bianca-Maria, follows:

"I am a large user of films and wish to communicate with a few important American firms. Formerly I obtained a large proportion of my reels from Germany, England and France, but on account of the war, the supply is now practically cut off.

"I might mention incidentally that there is an excellent opportunity for American manufacturers of high class pictures and accessories in my country. They would find this market a very profitable one. It will certainly pay such firms to investigate the situation here."

FIREPROOF FILM BUILDING FOR MINNEAPOLIS EXCHANGE MEN IS CONTEMPLATED

A MODERN fireproof building built especially to meet the needs of film companies and which will house practically all the agencies in Minneapolis is now practically assured. The plans call for a five or six-story building with foundation for other stories to be erected in the heart of the business center of the city.

A Minneapolis business man who so far has requested that his name be not given out has met the distributors and asked them to agree to take leases in the proposed structure. Many have already agreed to and the promoter believes all of them will sign.

The plans call for a building that will rank with any in the world built for the motion picture business. There will be an exhibition hall, club and reception rooms, facilities for entertaining the visiting patrons and an abundance of room and light for all kinds of work.
THE NEED OF STRONG CO-OPERATION

BY MARION S. PEARCE,
President, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

National Executive Board Desires to Conduct Affairs of the Organization with the Idea of Laying a Good Foundation for Making the Association a Gibraltar of Strength, and, While Recognizing Excellent Work Already Done by Earnest Members, Issues Call for More Concerted Effort.

With the half last of the year 1914 gone, the outlook for the League is very encouraging. The exhibitors all over the country are awakening to the absolute need of a strong state and national organization, realizing that it is through this, and this alone, that they may enjoy every advantage that is their right.

And that when it comes to the regulation of legislation that concerns and affects the motion picture interests, the law-makers, politicians and censors are destined to find we have something to say that commands attention and gets results.

I am sure you realize that the exhibitors' league is being run by exhibitors who have the welfare of every exhibitor in the rest of the world at heart, who are doing that which will accomplish for them the greatest good, as it is the earnest desire of the National executive board to conduct the affairs of the league in such a way that a good foundation will be laid for the building of one of the strongest organizations possible—an organization that will be a pride for every member to be a part of.

Yet it is true, that a comparatively few exhibitors are carrying the burden for the advantage and benefit of the many.

It's a good deal like an incident I once heard of, when a ship's crew were making their way from an abandoned ship to the nearest land. Each man had a rowboat. Every man served his allotted time at the oars, pulling for all he was worth to gain the mainland, with the exception of one. And this fellow, for one reason or another, wouldn't get in and do his share. He wanted his life saved in a rowboat of his own, but depended on the efforts of his fellows. That man was a "boarder." Exhibitors' Shoulders to the Wheel

Throughout the country, I'm mighty glad to say that a great many exhibitors have their shoulders to the wheel—doing things—working hard—showing results. But there are some "boarders" in the boat. And there are a number of exhibitors who are not putting out this sort of effort, with the result that the league is denied the efficiency it might so fully and so easily enjoy, if every man would only do his fair share.

Cooperation—that's the one thing that is nearest your hand right now. It doesn't make a bit of difference whether you are the largest or the smallest exhibitor, the league must receive your cooperation in order that it may wield the influence you have a perfect right to expect of it, and which it will have if every exhibitor will give it his hearty cooperation.

An absolute need for a national league was never more plainly proven than by the reduction accomplished in the war tax. Just imagine how much greater a reduction might have been realized had we but had a proper organization.

Do you realize the absolute necessity for the national league to receive promptly the per capita tax from the various state branches? We know that nothing can be accomplished without money.

And do you realize that the officers have advanced hundreds of dollars of their own money to further the interests of a league that is trying to be of a great benefit to you? Do you know that a number of states are crying for a national organizer to assist them in organizing, and re-organizing their states; and that the only financial resources we have is through our per capita tax?

Of course, we could probably get all the money we need from our precious sources, but should this happen we would cease to be an organization that was working for the interests of the exhibitors and the exhibitors alone. The national executive board is giving their unifying efforts—the very best that is in them—and don't you think that they should at least receive your encouragement and support through your cooperation?

Strong Enough to Aid All

I don't want to continually urge the payment of money. I don't want to harp on financial needs to a degree that proves unpleasant.

But I never want to see a time when some exhibitor, no matter how small he may be, turns to this league of ours for advice, assistance, or aid of any sort, in times that are to him of the utmost importance, and for help that may prove vital to his individual business, and find that the league is not strong enough, or influential enough to give that exhibitor every good thing he expected of it.

The only thing that will make this true will be lack of friends, which the exhibitor himself may have failed, in the past, to provide.

It isn't lack of interest—it isn't that the average exhibitor doesn't realize that some day, under some circumstances, he may want to ask of the league something of tremendous importance to him and his own individual business, that prevents him from doing his part to provide the league with the necessary equipment, financially; but it simply amounts to the fact that it isn't worth the effort of a man who means well, intends to do his part—excepting the fact that he merely wants a bit of friendly urging to make that "sometime."—NOW.

Fischer Elected President of Milwaukee Branch

Olinger Is Made Vice-President, Harry Graham, Treasurer—Frank Cook, William Jacobs, Henry Trinz, E. Langwack Become Board Directors

At the annual election of officers held at the regular meeting at the Plunking Club rooms, Friday afternoon, the Milwaukee Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association elected George Fischer, president; J. B. Olinger, vice-president; Sam Trinz, secretary, and Harry Graham, treasurer. Frank Cook, William Jacobs, Henry Trinz, E. Langwack and Bert K. Fischer were elected to the board of directors, and Oliver Brefield as sergeant-at-arms.

The meeting was a record one and the election was distinctly undisturbed. The election of Sam Trinz as secretary to succeed himself was in recognition of the splendid work he has done for the association during the past year in that office.

Owing to the fact that it was impossible to secure a definite date for the use of the Auditorium, it was decided to call off the ball which had been announced for January 30. It was discovered that an error had been made relative to the date the Auditorium would be available, and, rather than accept a later date, it was decided to call the bell off. This action has caused a great deal of regret among exhibitors and their friends, as the members of local film circles have looked forward to the affair with considerable interest.

This move on the part of the Milwaukee exhibitors will come as a distinct disappointment to the photoplay world as a whole, as well as the local exhibitor, but circumstances were such that no other move was possible. J. W. Martin.
SUNDAY OPENING CASES DISMISSED
Special to Motion Picture News
Nashville, Tenn., Dec. 8.
The cases of W. H. Wassman and William Hartman, proprietors of local motion picture theatres, charged with operating their houses on Sunday, were dismissed at a hearing in police court. Mr. Wassman is proprietor of the Crystal and Rex theatres on Fifth avenue, while Mr. Hartman owns a motion picture playhouse on Cedar street.
The defense attacked the constitutional-ity of the ordinance prohibiting the operation of places of amusement on Sunday. The disposition of these cases, it is believed, will result in the opening of a number of other motion picture theatres and places of amusement on Sunday.

Great Northern Picture Filmed in Sweden
“The Adventures of Gar El Hamar,” Staged Amid Beautiful Scenery of the North, Features Hertz, Continental Star

THE Great Northern Film Company’s latest feature, entitled “The Adventures of Gar El Hamara,” is an unusually picturesque production. It was staged amid the beautiful rugged scenery on the southern coast of Sweden, on the high seas between Denmark and Sweden, and on a deserted island in that vicinity. That section is unsurpassed for scenic splendor by any other coast locations.

AN UNUSUAL SCENE FROM “THE ADVENTURES OF GAR EL HAMA” (Great Northern Feature)

Many novel and spectacular scenes were thus secured. Three different kinds of seagoing ships were utilized in producing this photoplay, namely, a schooner, a tug and a yacht. The latter belonged to the American magnate, Mr. Singer, of the Singer Sewing Machine Company.

Mr. Singer visited Denmark last summer, and while he was there the Great Northern Company arranged to use his handsome yacht in the picture. Many diferent views of the yacht were photographed, including a picture of the engine room. Some very thrilling incidents were enacted on the yacht.

The title role in the photoplay is portrayed by the prominent continental dramatic star, A. Hertz, who also essayed the name part in the two former Gar El Hama pictures. This actor recently distinguished himself by his wonderful acting of a difficult character part in the recent Great Northern feature, “After Thirty Years.” In the present production, he is surrounded by a strong supporting cast.

THE Kinetophone has just completed arrangements with the Hollandia Film Manufacturing Company, Haarlem, Holland, which will result in the opening of a new theatre in that city. Such films as the Kinetophone takes over will be released through the K. C. Booking Company, Inc., in the United States and the K. C. Booking Company, Limited, of Montreal, as well as through the exchanges affiliated with the K. C. company.

Jan Leendertz, representative of the Hollandia company, arrived in this country on the Rotterdam a week or more ago, bringing with him 23,000 feet of film, a part of which was accepted by the Kinetophone as being of sufficient merit to take with American audiences.

Mr. Leendertz, who is an expert in the land of dykes on the question of motion pictures, is stopping at the McNab, in New York, but expects to return to Holland on the Nieuwe Amsterdam when that ship sails on December 12. Mr. Leendertz knows the film game in Holland from start to finish and talks most interestingly of conditions in the business there which have arisen as the result of the war.

“Our company is the only company in Holland manufacturing films and we find an excellent market for our output. We do not, however, market any of our films ourselves; we sell through the oldest agent in Holland, who distributes films all over Holland and Dutch colonies.

“But we do not have the proposition of a feature every day in many motion picture theatres, such as you do here. In Holland a theatre books a feature for one week or, at the most, two each week.

“After the war broke out there was a great boom in the motion picture trade because so many of what you call the legitimate theatres were closed. At once there was a demand for a cheaper amusement and the motion pictures supplied it. However, prices were lowered a little in the film houses, due to the depression caused by the war, and because there was a fear that Holland might be dragged into it. Now we know that we shall not be implicated in the controversy, and things were brightening up to a considerable extent when I left Holland.”

BLACKWELL MAKES THOROUGH PREPARATION FOR EACH PLAY
Carlyle Blackwell, of the Favorite Players, has his own way of preparing for his photoplays. There is virtually a committee of four to discuss productions. The scenario writer prepares the script and it is then discussed by Carlyle Blackwell, William D. Taylor, his assistant, Henry Kerman, and the writer of the photoplay. The script will probably be altered and another evening spent in licking it into shape, two if necessary. The costumes and sets are then discussed and decided upon and numerous drawing made. Finally, the company is picked, types being selected, and the photoplay is read to them, after which every member of the company is furnished with a copy of the script to study. Many rehearsals are then held before the play is started.
THE TRANSFORMATION OF A NICKEL TOWN
By Louis Marcus

EDITORIAL NOTE.—Louis Marcus is the pioneer film exchange man of the intermountain territory, being one of the first to establish himself in the business and one who has watched the growth and development of the industry from its infancy. As president and general manager of the Notable Feature Film Company, with head offices in Salt Lake, there is probably no other man in his territory who is better posted on conditions past and present.

CONDITIONS in Denver are improving. Exhibitors in the Queen City of the Plains have long held the reputation for being the most aggressive and tenacious showmen in this intermountain country, whose struggle for existence has been accompanied by cut-throat methods and a suicidal policy, while the slogan has been, “No matter if you lose money, don’t let the other fellow get any patronage.”

This short-sighted course has resulted in Denver being universally known as “the Nickel City of the West.” Newspaper writers unacquainted with the inside workings of the film business apparently glorified in this dubious distinction for their city, while numerous other conditions contributed to this unenviable quality.

In vain did the various exchanges operating in the territory endeavor to arrive at a solution of the problem. The proposition was seriously discussed at one time of a gentlemen’s agreement whereby the distributing agents would decline to provide more than a certain number of reels to an exhibitor operating a five-cent house.

It was proposed to establish a clearing house on bookings so that this agreement could be maintained. However, as the Denver Street Theatre District is not a market that the exchanges might look upon such a move as being one in restraint of trade and bring to bear upon the exchanges the Sherman anti-trust law, this was abandoned.

Now the situation is beginning to adjust itself. The ice has been broken and the writer predicts that the day is not far distant when the nickel theatre will give a nickel show, and the better class house will cater to the classes, as it should be.

No Ten-Cent House for Years

For years there has been no ten-cent house in Denver. True, occasionally when a manager has advertised a special feature he has advanced the price for the time being. His competitors promptly have put in the strongest subjects available and kept the price at a nickel. A case in point occurred last spring when one house presented “Les Misérables,” and the Ilios promptly put on “Million Bid” at a nickel! The Plaza, it is true, started in on a ten-cent basis. Unfortunately it was unable to get a suitable program; it was summertime, business was poor and everything was against the successful operation of the proposition.

Today a great number of the theatres in Denver not on Curtis street are running one or two nights each week on a ten-cent admission. Too often can one be a happy one, for it confuses the public, and people coming down town for an evening’s enjoyment never know what they are going to pay or see.

The constant changing of programs, inadequate advertising that always is associated with the frequent change and the sandwiching in of mediocre productions with productions of merit, all contribute to placing the business in Denver on a chaotic basis.

Denver will pay ten cents. That was proved recently when the Isis turned over to the Red Cross Association a sum in excess of $400, which represented the box office receipts for the day.

Both theatre and exchanges realize that the advent of a new era in the motion picture business, as far as Denver is concerned, is at hand. The opening wedge came with the capitalization of the neighborhood houses, and now the advance is closing in on the Curtis street citadel. It was hard work to convince the neighborhood houses that they could get ten cents—provided, of course, they furnished their patrons productions of merit.

York Leads Way to Ten Cents

The first to see the light was the York, a pretty suburban house, which started to exhibit the Isis five-cent productions for a dime. Judiciously advertised, the experiment proved an unqualified success. The Colfax, Bide-a-Wee and Rex, which at first would not listen to the proposition of a ten-cent night, fell into line and are making money out of Lasky, Famous Players, Bosworth and other productions of similar caliber.

Now the opening gun has been fired on Curtis street at the Princess Theatre, by George H. Greaves and his associates, who can be justly named the pioneers of the ten-cent show in Colorado, and whose experience has been that when you have the wares you can get the business. The Princess Theatre has been redecorated and a number of improvements instituted, including the installation of an orchestra of twenty musicians. Paramount, World and Alco subjects are shown exclusively, and the public apparently is recognizing a good thing.

The Princess is one of a string of motion picture theatres in Colorado operated by Mr. Greaves and his associates. In Colorado Springs, Pueblo and Cheyenne they were the pioneers in advanced prices, and Mr. Greaves’ success has encouraged others to follow their example, but the moral fight, as always is the case in pioneering.

The newspapers in the past have been an obstacle, because to the newspapers all motion pictures look alike, but the press, too, is seeing the light and the flippant writer who used to scoff at “the movies” now is beginning to wax enthusiastic over “motion picture productions.”

Importance of Films Recognized

Where they hurt the game a year ago, they are now paving the way in educational fashion, and when the Denver “Post” concedes that there are lots of good pictures worth more than a nickel, times verily are changing.

When men of the calibre of F. W. White, the veteran dramatic critic of the “Post” and Richard Milton, of the “Times,” take up motion pictures seriously as they have done, and segregate them into classifications to assert that the best and most pretentious productions warrant better prices, the dawn of an equitable adjustment is at hand.

There will always be room in Denver for five-cent houses, but even “the Nickel City of the West” is beginning to concede that it has outgrown part of the ways, and the big production with its huge initial outlay in scenic effects, salaries for great artists and the hundred and one expenses connected with the modern production merits an advance in prices, even if only to uphold the good old adage of “live and let live.”

Movement for Higher Prices in Washington

Leader Has Ten Cent Scale on Sunday, Garden Raises Gallery Prices, Penn Gardens a Ten-Cent Feature House—Patrons Offer No Objections

Special to Motion Picture News

Washington, D. C., December 8. A RISE in prices is becoming more general in the Capital City. The Leader, which has always offered an excellent five-cent program, asks ten cents for its Sunday day shows, now on an extra festive cut-added. The week days continue at five cents, except on occasions of exceptional productions.

Moore’s Garden Theatre has raised its gallery prices to ten cents, with no diminution in attendance. In the residential sections the Sunday admission has almost become universally ten cents, and a mid-week performance is also of the same price. The Auditorium asks fifteen cents on feature nights.

The opening of the Penn Gardens offers an exclusive feature house in the residential section with a ten-cent program that is well worth the money.

The encouraging aspect in this condition is that there is small complaint on the part of patrons, and more encouraging still is that there is no appreciable decrease in attendance at these theatres. The public is demanding more elaborate photoplays, which are more costly and should bring a higher price of admission.

It appears that the public is ready to meet this demand and are satisfied with the performances offered. Of course there are still the nickels shown for those who cannot pay more or who will not pay more, and in these houses patrons certainly get their money's worth.

TWO ST. LOUIS THEATRES RAISE PRICES

Special to Motion Picture News

St. Louis, Dec. 8.

H. Steinmeyer, proprietor of the Chippewa Theatre, at 3807 South Broadway, is gradually raising the admission prices of his house. When the place first opened, ten cents was charged, but competition arrived and the prices were forced down to five cents. Mr. Steinmeyer managed the place for a long time at that price, and then, as an experiment, he began charging ten cents on Sundays and holidays.

There was no falling off in patronage; the people seemed just as willing to pay ten cents as they did five. Of course this was not done until a reputation was established by the theatre which guaranteed that a good and well-selected program would be shown.

Ten cents is now the rule for Sundays and holidays, and in a very short time that price will be the standard for all performances.

The Carroll Theatre, at 1500 South Broadway, has raised the admission price to ten cents on Sundays, when a six-reel program will be given instead of the regular four reels that are used ordinarily.

LIMITS FIVE CENT PROGRAM TO THREE REELS

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Dec. 7.

Believing three reels is sufficient for a five-cent theatre program, W. W. Dunlap, manager of the Comedy Theatre, 542 South Broadway, which was formerly the "Exclusive" for women and children only, has smashed precedent in that respect, and furthermore will run all future programs two weeks. The smallest program in Los Angeles and surrounding cities consists of four reels, while the average is six reels. Some of the retail district theatres show as many as nine reels for five cents. Comedy pictures will constitute the program at the Comedy.

This new plan has been used for the past four weeks and is a winner. The Saturday and Sunday receipts are almost as large as those of the other theatre owned by the same company, diagonally across the street, where ten, fifteen and twenty cents are the prices and six reels are shown. The larger house has more than 800 seats, while the Comedy has less than 300.

WASHINGTON THEATRE OWNER KILLED IN ACCIDENT

Dr. W. H. Wunder, former owner of the Maryland Theatre and member of the syndicate which built the Imperial Theatre, now operated by Tom Moore as the Garden Theatre, died in Washington, D. C., last week as a result of an automobile accident.

"False Colors," Produced Under Supervision of Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley, Contains Striking Theatre Interior Scene

A FEATURE film unusual in plot and strong in dramatic action is "False Colors," by Lois Weber, and produced under the personal direction of Mr. and Mrs. Phillips Smalley. It is a daring story, unfolded in a dexterous manner, and is sincere in her interpretation of a woman who loves. The rest of the cast includes the well-known screen artists, Adele Farrington, Courtenay Foote, Charles Marriott, Herbert Standing and Dixie Carr.

One of the spectacular scenes is the interior of the theatre, for which 1,200 people were engaged. Credit must be given to Dal Clawson, the camera man, who has achieved some remarkable effects in the numerous pictures produced by Bosworth, Inc.

Keystone Wins Marie Dressler Injunction Suit

Justice Newberger Denies Application of Actress to Restrain the Company from Disposing of "Tillie's Punctured Romance" to Alco Corporation

JUSTICE NEWBERGER, of the Supreme Court of New York State, on Tuesday denied the application of Marie Dressler for a receiver of the picture, "Tillie's Punctured Romance," and an injunction restraining the Keystone Film Company from disposing of the picture to Alco Film Corporation, her claim being that both parties jointly owned the picture, and that she had not been consulted about the disposition of it.

The defendant, through its attorneys, Graham & Stevenson, exhibited the contract to the court, which, while giving Marie Dressler a right in the negative, gave the Keystone Film Company the right, so that company claimed, to handle the picture and dispose of it as it thought best, and Justice Newberger denied the plaintiff's application and said:

"Plaintiff claims that under paragraph fourth of her contract between her and the defendant, that the pictures of the play in which the plaintiff acted as star should always remain the joint property of both parties, and should not be sold, only rented and leased; that the defendant has threatened to sell and dispose of the same. The defendant denies that it intends to sell or dispose of the films, but proposed to lease the same for certain territories on what is known as 'state rights' basis. I can find nothing in the moving picture papers that would warrant this court in holding that the disposition proposed by the defendant would be a sale, or that the plaintiff would be injured by any such act. The application for a receiver and an injunction pendente lite must be denied."

The new Pathé serial, which will succeed "The Perils of Pauline," and the first number of which will be released on December 29, is to be called "The Exploits of Elaine." Those who say that there is nothing new under the sun may be correct in the strictest sense of the word, but the fact remains that there occasionally appears something which if not absolutely new is such an ingenious combination of things already known as to appear actually novel.

ARTHUR H. REEVE

To look for such a state of affairs in serial films might seem unduly optimistic, since these productions have appeared on the market in such large numbers, but there seems to be every reason to believe that the new Pathé serial, "The Exploits of Elaine," will be decidedly unusual, to say the least.

In the first place, there is the strongest possible assurance that the stories will be good ones. This is a most important point, and one that manufacturers are too likely to overlook. The mere throwing together of a series of events, however exciting they may be, can never be as effective as a carefully worked out plot written by someone who knows story construction.

"The Exploits of Elaine" are being written by Arthur B. Reeve, author of the "Craig Kennedy" stories which have been running in the "Cosmopolitan Magazine" for the past four years. Mr. Reeve is without any question one of the foremost short story writers of the present day, and in the field of detective stories probably has no equal, unless it be A. Conan Doyle.

REEVE STORIES UNUSUAL

Mr. Reeve's stories are of an unusual sort. The episodes on which they are based and their plots are of a nature which hold the readers' attention closely, but an added value is given to them by the fact that his hero makes use of genuine scientific methods in the detection of crime.

The author keeps so closely in touch with the newest discoveries in all branches of science that he is able to solve mysteries by means which are as genuine as they are startling. An example of this is furnished by the case of the detectivephone. In some of his earliest stories of the exploits of "Craig Kennedy" Mr. Reeve had his hero make use of the detectaphone, an instrument which at that time was known to only a few persons.

Not long after the Detectaphone Company of America wrote to Mr. Reeve saying: "We feel that to 'Craig Kennedy' is due the fact that Mr. Burns has adopted the detectaphone for all his work, at present having nearly 100 machines at the disposal of his offices."

Story Will Be Widely Spread

So effective is the use which Mr. Reeve makes of new devices which might be of value in detecting crime that many such instruments have been sent to him by the manufacturers with the request that he make use of them in his stories.

This is Mr. Reeve's first work for the screen, but there is no danger that the scenarios will suffer for this reason, as he is collaborating with Charles L. Goddard, the author of the "Perils of Pauline." Each installment will be written out by Mr. Reeve as a short story, and these will be published not only in all the Hearst newspapers throughout the country, but also in leading newspapers in almost every city or town of any size.

This widespread publication of the story will give it a great amount of advertising, and should make it an easy thing for an exhibitor to keep his patrons posted.

The cast of the picture is another feature which deserves special comment. In the title role Pearl White will be seen. Miss White's work in "The Perils of Pauline" has made her very popular with all of the followers of that picture, and she should prove equally attractive as Elaine.

A most important change from the preceding serial will be made in the matter of the leading man. Arnold Daly will appear in this part. Mr. Daly, who is one of the most widely known legitimate actors in this country, has appeared only once before in motion pictures. Judging from his work on that occasion and his established reputation as an actor, Mr. Daly should do much to increase the popularity of the new serial.

Leo Wharton, who has been directing Wharton films for some time, will be the director.

The general scheme of the serial will be to present a series of high class scientific detective stories. Instead of thrills created by smashing property, there will be those caused by tense situations and marvelous achievements of science. The first picture will be called "The Clutching Hand." There will be fourteen episodes of two reels each released weekly.

Hill Explosion Thrills "Zudora" Episode

Earth Mound, Domicile of Two Inventors Who Make Contrivance for Setting Fire to Distance Objects, Blows Up in Part Five

An entire hill more than one-quarter of a mile in circumference was blown up in episodes of "Zudora," Thanhouser's big serial. This hill is the home of two aged inventors who have given to the world an instrument which makes a "perpetual glare." This contrivance, too, can set any object on fire at a distance of several miles. Hassam Ali, played by James Cruze, uses this invention to further harass his niece, Zudora, given admirable portrayal by Marguerite Snow.

Harry Benham, in the role of John Storm, traces the source of this mysterious power, after he and Zudora have almost fallen victims to it. Hassam Ali, seeing he is about to be discovered and his treachery made clear, decides to do away with Zudora and Storm at the same time. The hill is mined and the master fuse laid to a safe spot where Hassam Ali and the inventors watch.

Storm destroys the "perpetual glare" machine and Hassam Ali gives the signal to touch off the charge. It goes. And with such force that the big hill is sent skyward, clouds of earth flying hundreds of feet.
Screen Magnetism Distinguishes Blanche Sweet

Eighteen Year Old Star, Who Signs with the Jesse Lasky-David Belasco Forces, Gains Reputation for Variety of Achievements at Early Age—Her Versatility Exemplified in a Wide Range of Plays

Calling for Exercise of Rare Artistic Judgment

BLANCHE SWEET, the announcement of whose engagement to star in the new series of Jesse Lasky-David Belasco picturizations of Belasco successes, has been one of the most notable news events of the past few weeks in the moving picture field, is famous among picture artists for the variety of her achievements at the age of only eighteen. Her picture appears elsewhere in this issue of Motion Picture News.

Of course, it must be remembered that Miss Sweet began young, and under the most expert direction—but even making all allowances for youth and instruction there can be no questioning about her versatility. From "Judith of Bethulia" to "The Escape" is a far cry indeed; and from "The Escape" to "The Warrens of Virginia," "The Woman," "Sweet Kitty Belleair" and other Belasco offerings means a series of even greater contrasts.

In the quest of artistic judgment it is interesting to note that David Belasco and Cecil B. De Mille, who directs the Belasco productions for the screen, should have chosen a girl whose reputation has been made solely and entirely in pictures.

MISS SWEET was once on the legitimate stage for a short period, but it was at the very beginning of her career. She was discovered by D. W. Griffith, who was then at the height of his fame as a producer, because there was something about her type that was obviously suitable for photography and because she had that responsive temperament so essential to obtaining realistic effects.

It has been said of Blanche Sweet that she does not act; she merely does things. Weeping, laughing and the other extreme emotions cannot be faked, even in part, for the screen, as they can be faked for the stage, with the turned back and the hearing about it—of the artist all the time. In thinking of something quite different in no way connected with the drama itself. In pictures, on the contrary, the audience demands direct visual evidence of the emotions, and crying must be obvious, and to be obvious it must be real. The same is true of laughter, and of the expressions of love and hate. Just as the picture screen is no place for a stage kiss, so the screen is in almost all respects far more important in realism than the stage.

And Blanche Sweet has in her beautiful face, her fine young body and her expressive hands a wonderful instrument on which to play the gamut of emotions. The underlying spirit is willing, curiously quick to respond to suggestions of all sorts, and the secret is a mirror of what passes in soul or brain.

THE wonderful fact of Blanche Sweet is that she does not act; instead, she lives through the experience of the stories which she is made to interpret with such fervor that the audience correctly believes it is not witnessing the illusion of life but life itself.

Personal magnetism for the screen is one of the most puzzling of all qualities. Half of the men and two-thirds of the women—those who have magnetism for the stage somehow lack it when only the shadow of them appears before an audience. Magnetism is a mystery; some people contend it is a sort of electric connection linking artist and audience and that a picture, moving or otherwise, cannot properly be magnetic.

Yet Blanche Sweet absolutely proves this not to be the case. For the man doesn't live who could watch a good Sweet picture without feeling a sense of her actual presence—without almost believing that he could reach flesh if only his hand could come in contact with the figure on the screen.

In other words, the personal magnetism that is screenable is a rare and unusual attribute, for, with many women, so much of personality is conveyed by intonations of the voice and oddities of enunciation and articulation.

To speak of the personality of a picture may seem almost an essential contradiction, but Blanche Sweet proves that the artist trained to the expression of emotions in silence and naturally gifted in that manner may acquire a photographic personality in motion pictures.

YOUR imagination conveys to you the sense of touch just as if the picture were a woman in the body. What she "says in silence" is so real that, though she has marvellously mastered the difficulty of suppressing lip movement, you almost hear the voice.

It is even possible for the millions who have seen her for the last three or four years, always seeing her in silence, to imagine what her voice would be like; for her actions indicate a fullness of youthful charm which would seem to make a rich voice nature.

Nobody is aiming to make Blanche Sweet just a pretty girl on the screen. On the contrary, she will have the widest range of opportunity in the Belasco dramas, and the ambition of Mr. De Mille is that she shall not only great in appeal but supreme as an artist in her field of endeavor.

For there is less place on the screen than on the stage for the ingenuous, and Miss Sweet is too vital with personality herself to be or to consider being the sweet little thing of the sort that has won Broadway dramatic success in high comedy of a certain domestic sort.

LOTS of big scenes, hundreds of thrilling incidents, a wide variety of great emotional opportunities are waiting for the eighteen-year-old Lasky star. But this does not mean that her name is to be connected with the dramas of the unhappy side of life. On the contrary, youth and sympathetic appeal make her particularly adapted to interpret the happy and joyous emotions, and the new Blanche Sweet will be the star of sunshine.

Crown City Studios Teeming with Activity

Company Making Two Paragon Reels and One Thistle a Week for the Kriterion Program at Pasadena

THE producing companies of the Crown City Film Manufacturing Company at Pasadena, Cal., making two reels of Paragon drama and one reel of Thistle brand comedy weekly for the Kriterion program, are hard at work getting out the first releases.

The dramatic company is under the direction of Donald Macdonald, with a cast of Dorothy Davenport, Ben Horning, Lee Hill and Felix Modjeska are now engaged in filming "The Adventurer," a Raffles story, after having completed three others each of two reels. The title of these are "His Brother's Wife," a society drama; "The Crystal Globe," an East India mystery story, and "The Doctor," a character study featuring Ben Horning, of San Diego Mission Play fame. All of these subjects are from scenarios by Anthony W. Coldwey, head of that department and studio manager.

The Thistle brand company is under the direction of Bruce Mitchell and Rena Rogers, and Allen Fralick will be featured. The stage for the company's studio will be 60 by 60 feet, and is nearing completion. The laboratory building is being constructed of concrete, is 30 by 60, and will contain a large and spacious projection room.

The officers of the company are: M. Spero, president; F. A. Ryan, vice-president; D. E. Baird, secretary; H. A. Parker, treasurer, and R. D. Sorver, auditor, all of Pasadena and Los Angeles.

A LESSON IN CO-OPERATION

Special to Motion Picture News

Detroit, Dec. 9.

Co-operation is to supplant competition among the three moving picture theatres of South Haven, Mich., located on Lake Michigan in the western part of the state. Their owners have agreed to try for a month the closing of two of the houses and holding all shows at the O. K. Theatre, the largest.

If the trial prove satisfactory, the plan will be continued until June 1, when the other two houses will re-open to provide for the crowds that usually come during the summer season.

Managers of all three houses will get a share of the O. K. Theatre's receipts during the winter months.
If I Were An Exhibitor

A few friendly "words to the wise" from the patron who always has ten cents to spend in the right theatre, spoken, not in a spirit of criticism, but to give the man on the inside the benefit of the outside point of view.

If I Were An Exhibitor, I would not stay in any little cubby hole of an office tucked away under the balcony stairs any longer than was necessary to give an extra shine to my shoes, or a little touch that might serve to spruce me up and make me more pleasing in appearance to my audience. I would be in the lobby, in the box office, up and down the aisles, everywhere, that I might know everything that was going on, and always at the instant call of attaches or patrons of the house.

If I Were An Exhibitor, I would make friends with every man, woman and child that visited my theatre, and when I noticed a stranger, I would do like all the popular preachers do—I would lay for that fellow and I would say a pleasant word to him. I would ask him how he liked the show, and I would invite him to come again, and send him away with the feeling that my theatre was a pleasant place to visit.

If I Were An Exhibitor, and the doormen or ushers encouraged their friends to stand around the door or in the aisles talking to them, I would fire those ushers or doormen bodily if they did not stop the practice.

If I Were An Exhibitor, I would try to impress on every one around the place that loafing, by either the employees or patrons of any business, is fatal to the business. I would have it understood that there must be no loitering in the lobby. There are only two things people should be doing around a well conducted theatre, they should either be standing in line at the box office waiting for a ticket, or coming out of the exits with a pleasant reminiscent smile on their faces.

If I Were An Exhibitor, and had to close my theatre during the hot months, I would give the place a thorough scrubbing when I opened up in the fall, and I would save all the soap wrappers and all the empty cans of cleaning compound used in the process, and I would make a display of them with a neat card calling attention to the public that my theatre had been treated to a good old-fashioned bath, and I would point to the number of pounds of soap and speak of the thousand gallons of water used, and I would thereby get myself and my theatre talked about. Folks would say, "They are clean down at the Cinematograph Palace, or the Theatorium, or the Dreamland Auditorium."

If I Were An Exhibitor, I would demonstrate that I had gray matter enough to pick a sensible, appropriate name for my theatre, instead of behaving as foolishly about it as the light-headed woman who lives on paper-covered novels and names her daughters after her heroines.

If I Were An Exhibitor, I would think twice before I plastered the front of my theatre with posters until it looked like a cross between a cut-price drug store and a subway excavation. German students glory in faces scarred and seamed with sabre-cuts, swathed in bandages and stuck with court plasters, but that is no reason why an exhibitor should apply the same principle to the front of his theatre.

If I Were An Exhibitor, I would beat everybody to it on the censorship proposition, and prove to them all, from manufacturers in the trade to city officials out of it, that I could do my own censoring better than anyone could do it for me. I would show them that I could give a clean show, no matter how humble my theatre and the people to whom it catered. And I would start a new kind of censorship that would be as merciless against the cheap, badly produced picture as against the flauntingly immoral and suggestive one.

If I Were An Exhibitor, I would decide in my own mind, once and for all, just what kind of a show I wanted to give my patrons, and then charge them a price that would yield me a profit and be justified by the pictures. It might be a nickel. It might be a quarter. But if I made up my mind that I couldn't charge more than five cents, I wouldn't lay myself open to the charge of insanity by loading myself with the costliest features I could find, knowing I could never break even on them, in a mad endeavor to beat my competitor down the street. I would give my patrons the best five-cent pictures to be had for a nickel, and when I couldn't resist the temptation to rent a film that ought to bring ten, fifteen or twenty-five cents, I would have the sound horse sense to charge the right price for it.

If I Were An Exhibitor, and had a gum-chewing cashier, and she was too valuable to discharge and I could not break her of the habit by moral suasion, I would buy a large supply of jaw exerciser and give her a night off with instructions to do all her chewing in a lump, and get it over with. Under no condition would I allow her to Fletcherize in the box office.

If I Were An Exhibitor, and a photoplaywright were to ask me to show a picture that had been made from his scenario, I would run a slide announcing the fact that "Mr. Ferdinand Umph, of 1415 Neighborhood Avenue, will have a film at my theatre on a given night," and I would pretty near pack the house that night, because nine out of every ten people who come to the theatre are trying to write plays, and they all want to see what the other fellow's stuff looks like; and I would make an everlasting friend out of the writer and all his friends.

If I Were An Exhibitor, I would study my audience. I would find out what kind of pictures they want, and to do that I would use the method that I will use to count the words in this article when it is finished. I will not count each word, space writers' time is too valuable for that, I will just count every tenth line and average the rest up by that standard, and I would use the same method in measuring up my audience. I would stop every tenth patron some night and ask his or her opinion of the show, and when I had talked to about six or seven, I would have a pretty fair notion of what the people in the neighborhood wanted, and then I would give it to them.

If I Were An Exhibitor, and a patron were to tell me that there were pictures shown in my theatre that he did not like, I would not go into a long-winded explanation of how I was tied up with an exchange and did not know what my program was to be till I got it. If such were the case, I would be ashamed to admit it.

If I Were An Exhibitor, I would preach organization to my fellow exhibitors. I would forget trying to beat my competitor; instead, I would get in touch with him, organize with him, fraternize with him, and in a short time, instead of being enemies, we would be brothers, fighting and overcoming most of the evils that now beset our industry.
FLORENCE LA BADIE IN "CRAFT VERSUS LOVE"

"The Million Dollar Mystery" fans will have an opportunity to see their favorites in "Craft Versus Love," a forthcoming two-reel feature release by Thanhouser.

Florence La Badie, the heroine of the famous serial in the lead, has an unusual chance to display her great historic ability so wondrously set off by her girlish charm. Supporting Miss La Badie is Sidney Bracy, known country-wide as Jones the Butler.

Mr. Bracy offers a remarkable contribution to the silent drama in "Craft Versus Love." The combination of Miss La Badie and Mr. Bracy has brought scores of telegrams of congratulations to the Than houser management, which shows how these two stars stand with the country's motion picture fans.

CHANGE OF DATE IN EDISON RELEASE

The Edison company have found it necessary to substitute for "Mr. Daly's Wedding Day," announced for release December 28, a comedy drama, "The Calico Cat," wherein the droll comedian, William Wadsworth, is at his best as the eccentric old man whose hatred of cats involves him in a criminal case. Unable to resist a shot at a calico cat, he apparently shoots an Italian stealing chickens.

The lawyer fastens the charge on a young boy. The amusing situation is complicated by the old man being drawn as one of the jurors, whose conscience continually bothers him, finally forcing him to confess to find that the injury was trumped up, the exposure coming by a woman's detective work. The one-reel photoplay is an adaptation of the story by Mr. Charles M. Thompson.

EDITH STOREY AND HUGHIE MACK AT BOSTON BALL

Edith Storey and Hughie Mack, of the Vitagraph Company, were in evidence at the Exhibitors' Ball of Boston, Mass. Hughie's imposing presence and expansive smile were notable features, and Edith Storey's popularity was evidenced by the recognition she received when she entered the Boston arena.

Pike's Peak Company to Make Westerns for United Colorado Company, Newly Organized, Will Produce Pictures Depicting the Life of the West Under the Brand Name of Lariat.

NEWS has just been received of the organization of the Pike's Peak Film Company at Colorado Springs, Colo., as a unit of the recently-organized United Motion Picture Producers, Inc. The new firm is to produce Western pictures for the daily program being released by the United Film Service. In keeping with the character of its output the firm has adopted the brand name of Lariat.

Oties B. Thayer is the producing director of the new company. Thayer will be remembered as the producing director of the Colorado Motion Picture Company, which filmed "Across the Border," released by the Warner's Features, Inc., now known as the United Film Service, in its augmented form, last July, and in the making of which the leading woman, Grace McHugh, lost her life, while attempting to ford a stream.

Charles Gebhart, whose appearances in the past as leading man with the Bison, Vitagraph and Edison companies had made him possibly the most familiar leading man of the day, and who recently was general director of the Ramo Features, will appear in the leading roles of the new series, acting, also, as assistant of Mr. Thayer.

The leading woman of the Pike's Peak Film Company is Josephine West. Miss West is an adept horsewoman, versed in the use of the lariat, and a hardy mountain-taineer.

A. H. SAWYER, INC., INCREASES CAPITAL STOCK

Company Files Papers for Authorization to Raise Figures from $500,000 to $500,000 and Change Name to Sawyer Film Corporation.

Keen interest has been excited by the announcement that A. H. Sawyer, Inc., has filed papers for the increase of its capitalization of $500,000, making the total capital stock issue $600,000. There was also filed a change in name, and hereafter the Sawyer interests will be called the Sawyer Film Corporation.

Six months ago A. H. Sawyer, known as one of the brilliant men in flim-flam, started his film mart with a relatively small capital. His idea in starting was to progress only on a firm business basis, and to try out his marketing ideas before going too heavily into the investment. This was just at the critical period when, it is said, the bottom dropped out of state rights selling propositions, and Sawyer was the first in the field to start establishing a chain of branch or zone offices to handle an output of feature films from an international basis.

Today the Sawyer field organization comprises twenty-six zone offices in the best feature film distributing points in the United States and Canada, and these zone office affiliations are with the leading feature film exchanges of the country.

The New England territory is handled by the Phoenix Film Company, of Boston; the Chicago district by the Union Film Company, of which Joe Hopp, president of the Standard Program Association, is the leading spirit; in Montreal the Allied Features has the main Canadian office; and in Philadelphia the Interstate and Fairmount exchanges handle the Sawyer business.

Representative men are in charge of the other twenty offices, making the Sawyer marketing forces as well represented as that of any company in the field.

Contracts were recently concluded by which one of the largest English film concerns will handle the Sawyer pictures on the other side of the Atlantic.

The increase of capitalization has been forced upon Sawyer by the expansion of business which the last few weeks have witnessed. A syndicate of downtown bankers are all ready to take the new stock issue, and it was on their urging that the increase was made.

The Sawyer Film Corporation will inaugurate a new policy, inasmuch as in addition to its system of marketing films for manufacturers, with increased capital it will be in a position to purchase feature films negatives outright, and will also finance producing companies releasing exclusively through it by giving cash advances on royalties of negatives turned over to it for marketing.

DYREDA SIGNS DE BELLEVILLE

The Dyreda Art Film Corporation has signed Frederick De Belleville to act in a feature motion picture which will be produced under the direction of J. Scarfe Dawley.

Mr. De Belleville is one of the best known actors in this country and has long occupied an important place on the Ameri-
A PLEA FOR HIGHER PRICES

S. SHAFFER, manager of the Empress Theatre, Montrose, Colo., has raised his prices, says "Real Reels," the house organ of the Notable Feature Film Company, of Salt Lake City, and in a neatly printed announcement to his patrons says among other things: "Some people say that a picture show is not worth more than a dime."

"To claim that there is only one admission price due on a moving picture is worse than foolish. It is an open statement that whatever they paid for clothes twenty years age is the price they pay today. And it may be so. But if they pay no more today than they did twenty years ago, their appearance will tell the story."

"The twenty-cent picture means no more to us than the ten-cent one from a standpoint of profit. If we charge you more to see the picture it is a sure thing that we pay more to get it. The respect of our mental development demands that we get the best."

"Nothing would give us greater pleasure than to be able to present nothing but the great productions made in moving pictures, featuring the great actors and actresses of our day. The prestige gained for this theatre from showing the best is worth more than the ten or fifteen dollars we may ever hope to make. Remember, we are trying to please you, but to do so we must have your help and friendship."

HOW A WOMAN PLANS TO RUN A THEATRE

A NEW theatre that has just been opened in Washington, D. C., is the Elite, situated in the residential northwest section. It is a neat and attractive house, with a seating capacity of three hundred and fifty. This is a ten-cent theatre, with five cents for children, and the program will always include a feature, which is at present being selected from the General Film specials. Arrangements are being made to include the big productions of other corporations.

The Elite is equipped with two Edison simplex projection machines, which permit the showing of pictures without interruption. This theatre is under the management of C. W. Madert, who speaks encouragingly of the outlook for business.

From the attendance and the aspect of the theatre outside and in, the observer is aware that the Lafayette has changed hands, and this to advantage. The present manager is Mrs. A. C. M. Sturgis, who had this to say about her policy: "I mean to keep the Lafayette clean, comfortable and well ventilated. By the frequent use of the big exhaust fans, the air in the theatre is changed in four minutes, and by the hourly spraying of a perfumed deodorizer the atmosphere is kept healthful and pleasant."

"It is attention of this nature that is a strong point in a woman's management of a picture house. Already I have been able to increase the attendance of women and the young folks. My program will include the best that can be afforded by a five-cent house. I am making arrangements to show the suffrage play, 'Your Girl and Mine,' and I mean to do all I can to interest the women in the Lafayette, and I am inviting suggestions from my patrons as to what they want. That is the best way to create good fellowship between manager and patrons and an effective manner of studying your attendance."

Mrs. Sturgis claims her pianists are among the highest paid, as she believes this is an important asset to a house.

The music is in the able hands of George Emmonds and A. L. Oehmann.

CONVERTING BIRTHDAYS INTO CASH

MANAGER FRED SEIGERT, of the Columbia Theatre, 2117 West Jefferson Street, Los Angeles, has a semi-annual feature for his theatre that is a winner.

Six months ago his little daughter celebrated her birthday anniversary, and Mr. Seigert invited all the children of the vicinity to attend the "party" at the Columbia, where it took two separate performances to entertain all as the seating capacity consists of only 400.

The other day he gave a "party" for his little son's birthday. At each he had motion pictures made of the children, which are shown for several evenings, in addition to the regular program, and at regular prices, ten cents. More than a thousand children attended the son's "party."

"ANNIVERSARY WEEK"

THE Family Theatre, Cincinnati, recently decorated its lobby by drawing it with smilax and hunting and a neatly printed card hung from the middle of the lobby, announcing that the theatre was celebrating "Anniversary Week."

Manager Libson strained every nerve to give his patrons something unusual in his programs the week in which he celebrated the fourth anniversary of the theatre.

THE PROPER ATTITUDE

The Manhattan Photo Play Theatre at 109th street and Manhattan avenue, New York City, has sent out a circular letter to its patrons, that has some very good points in it. In fact, parts of it are especially worth mentioning. One paragraph contains the following:

"We ask you to help us make this theatre—the popular theatre in this section—it should be YOUR theatre—for without your co-operation we cannot hope for success."

"On your patronage depends our financial future and we hereby solicit your support. We will aim to please, and if by chance we fall short of our mark—tell us, for we are but human, and if we do make mistakes, they are of the head and not of the heart."

"We invite criticism and solicit your hearty co-operation."

The communication is signed, "Yours for 'Manhattan Success,' Gertler & Halpern."

Herman Gertler, formerly with Warner's and World Film Companies, is the manager and on the programme issued by the theatre he states, "We aim to present an assorted entertainment of plays, accompanied by and interspersed with selected musical numbers.

"We may find it necessary at times to change our programme or make substitutions, in which case, we will be pleased to refund admission fees if our patrons are disappointed with the substituted pictures."

SUCCESSFUL RESERVATION OF SEATS BY PHONE

AN arrangement whereby patrons may phone for reserved seats has been instituted at the Butterfly Theatre, Milwau-kee. The Butterfly contains long rows of box seats on each of the aisles. Although the general admission fee is ten cents, double that amount is charged for the box seats. Patrons phone that they want a certain number of seats in a particular box.

As the box seats are not numbered the cashier puts away the correct amount of tickets and then tells the usher to reserve the desired seats until a certain hour. When Mr. and Mrs. Patton arrive their seats are awaiting them. Mr. Graham, the manager, believes in making his audience feel that an effort is being made to add to their comfort, and consequently realizes that the plan is well worth the small amount of trouble his employees are put to. A slide announces this convenience, and Mr. Graham hopes to win over the regular theatregoers to the realm of film drama.
CHECK YOUR CIGARS

THE Washington theatre, at Delmar avenue and Kingshighway, St. Louis, has an absolutely new wrinkle designed for the comfort and convenience of its patrons. At the side of the box office is a rack holding eight neat and attracively decorated porcelain cigar containers, each with a number at the top; to the right of this is a rack with eight metal rimmed checks, each bearing a number corresponding to the one on the container. A neat sign invites patrons to check their cigars before going in the theatre.

The patron needs no help or attention from any one; he simply takes a check from the rack and puts his cigar in the container bearing the duplicate number; on coming out he takes his cigar and hangs the check back on its proper hook. A large, generously filled match box is kept hanging in close proximity to the cigar check rack.

E. V. Dittlinger, Jr., son of the manager of the Washington, is the inventor of the idea.

HE WANTS PHOTOGRAPHS, NOT GLARING POSTERS

HARRY CRANDALL, proprietor of Crandall’s Theatre, is the first man in Washington, D. C., to possess and display the life-sized portrait of Alice Joyce before his theatre. This is a work of art, “a symphony in green,” and it at once attracted the passers-by.

The picture shows Miss Joyce of the Kalem Company wearing a $3,000 gown with a million dollars’ worth of jewelry.

“I consider this one of my biggest advertising assets I have yet ventured into,” said Mr. Crandall, “and if I could get all the photoplay stars in pictures of this class, I would do away with glaring posters.”

LOOKING AFTER THE KIDDIES WITH CHILDREN’S DAY

HOW to attract afternoon crowds to his two theatres in an outlying residence section beyond the shopping district is a problem that J. M. Lenney believes he has solved, at least in part.

Mr. Lenney is proprietor of the Lenney theatre, 5 to 7 South Thirteenth street, and the Grand, a new house he has just constructed at Fourteenth and Derry streets. Both houses are in a part of Harrisburg where motion picture theatres depend on neighborhood patronage rather than on transient patronage, as is the case with theatres in the business sections.

A “neighborhood” theatre, Mr. Lenney finds, has no trouble attracting large houses in the evenings, but to run it in the afternoon under ordinary circumstances is far from profitable. The theatres in the business sections are patronized in the day time by people who find them convenient resting places during shopping trips or sources of temporary relaxation from business cares, but the theatres beyond the region of the office buildings and shops are likely to be empty in the afternoons unless some special inducement is provided to attract the neighborhood folk from their homes before evening, when they turn out in large numbers.

The overhead expenses of a motion picture theatre in these days of city taxes, state taxes and—what may come in the near future, federal war taxes, are very heavy and make it almost essential to devise a method of attracting profitable afternoon crowds. With this in mind, Mr. Lenney has hit upon a plan, the details of which he is now working out, to give matinee shows twice a week in his two theatres, the performances to be designed especially to appeal to children.

Mr. Lenney believes that he will be able to obtain enough films on subjects of interest to little folks, such as fairy tales or similar pictures, and with this in view he is now in communication with various film dealers to learn whether he can regularly obtain enough pictures of this class to make his project possible.

If he finds that he can get enough children’s films to fill out programs twice each week he is going to open his theatres each Wednesday and Saturday afternoon and advertise special children’s shows. He expects in this way to attract not only the little folks, but also their parents or other grown-ups who will go along to “look after” the youngsters.

Mr. Lenney proposes to advertise his children’s shows extensively, not only in the newspapers, but by sending circulars to the parents of all the school children in his section of the city, and, if possible, to interest the school authorities.

WORKING A BOOSTERS’ NIGHT

“BOOSTERS’ NIGHT” proved a big success for the Broadway Theatre, 204 North Broadway, Los Angeles. Manager D. S. Mitchell induced ten merchants—one of each line—to give one dollar in trade to patrons, once each week, of the theatre who held the lucky numbers, in exchange for a mention on the screen at each performance, and a 28 x 42 card with all names on in the lobby.

“The ten dollars’ worth of merchandise orders bring the people to the theatre on Booster Night,” Mr. Mitchell said in telling of his new business-getting plan, “and the scheme is one of the best bunch of boosting merchants for my show of anything I have ever heard of. Everyone of the ten merchants sends their patrons there.”

A Sextette of Stars Identified With Productions on the Mutual Program

Lillian Gish  Flo La Boldie  Rhea Mitchell  Winifred Greenwood  Marguerite Snow  Mabel Normand
THE THREE OF US RELEASED DECEMBER 14

Mabel Taliaferro has just completed her first work before the camera in B. A. Rolfe’s production of the famous play, “The Three of Us,” in which Irving Cummings, Creighton Hale, Edwin Carewe and Madam Claire play important roles.

Miss Taliaferro, best remembered from her work in Frederick Thompson's production of “Polly of the Circus” and Klav & Erlanger's production of “Springtime,” created so favorable an impression upon the occasion of her most recent appearance here in “Young Wisdom,” in which she was supported by her sister, Edith, that a prominent producing concern commissioned a famous English author to create a part for her, equal to that of Maude Adams in “Peter Pan.”

Miss Taliaferro is now working at the Rolfe studios, Yonkers, N. Y., and her first effort, “The Three of Us,” will be seen on the Alco program, Monday, December 14. The actress is contracted for by B. A. Rolfe for appearance in several other picture productions, announcement of which will be made later.

THE SHADOW, AN EXCELSIOR RELEASE, WELL ACTED

The next Excelsior release will be entitled “In the Shadows.” This story is taken from the book “The Shadow,” by John B. Hymer, and is a story of the loyalty and friendship of two men starting in their college days and continuing through a series of incidents, in which one of them is suspected of murder.

Through it all runs the love of the hero for the sister of his chum and companion, and she by her grit and ready wit aids in unravelling the chain of circumstantial evidence which tends to the false conviction of her future husband. Throughout the story the breath of open-air life, and the sweet purity of true affection are strongly characterized in the actions of all the principals in the story.

The competent players of the Excelsior Feature Film company aptly portray the stirring events that occur throughout the five-reel story of this photoplay.

JESSE LASKY ENGAGES EDITH TALIAFERRO

Samuel Goldfish announces that a contract has been concluded between Jesse L. Lasky, as president of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, and Miss Edith Taliaferro by the terms of which Miss Taliaferro is to be seen in the near near in an elaborate photo-dramatic production.

Miss Taliaferro will be remembered as a leading artist in such widely-known Broadway productions as “Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm” and “Young Wisdom.”

For Miss Taliaferro’s photo-drama debut Mr. Lasky has selected a play entitled “Young Romance,” which is by William C. De Mille. The production will be directed by Cecil B. De Mille, brother of the author.

ROUNAN IN NEW YORK WITH ANIMAL FILMS

John Rouan, of the E. and R. Jungle Film Company, who recently came to New York City from Los Angeles and is now stopping at the Hotel Hermitage, intending to remain in the city for several days, has brought with him two two-reel, one three-reel and one one-reel animal pictures taken at the Los Angeles studio of the company.

The zoo contains one of the largest collections of rare animals in the country, enabling the company to produce pictures of extraordinary interest. The E. and R. Jungle Film Company announces the near completion of other unique animal pictures of great educational value. The studio is located at 1720 North Soto street, Los Angeles.

EDNA GOODRICH ON WAY FROM EUROPE FOR LASKY FILM

Edna Goodrich, equally famous as dramatic star and stage beauty, is at last on the way home from Europe to fulfill her contract with Jesse L. Lasky to star in one of the leading productions of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company.

A FEW OF THE STARS TO BE FOUND ON THE SCREEN IN FAMOUS PLAYERS FEATURES

Miss Goodrich was unfortunately in Europe at the beginning of the war and had some very thrilling experiences in Ostend. When she finally managed to get to London she was so exhausted that she had to recuperate under medical treatment. After a few days in New York City, Miss Goodrich will leave for the Lasky studios in Hollywood, Cal.

"GARDEN OF LIES" COMPANY BACK FROM FLORIDA

Jane Cowl, the widely successful dramatic star, who makes her screen debut in the Alco release, "The Garden of Lies," has just returned from St. Augustine with the party which the All-Star Feature Corporation sent to the old Florida city for the making of the exteriors in the Justus Miles Forman story.

The party was under the general direction of John H. Pratt, chief director of the All Star, and Assistant Director George Kline. Members of the supporting cast included William Russell, David Wall, Philip Hahn, Claude Cooper, Ethelbert Hales, Adele Carson and Volpt Horner. The party left New York on November 22.

"The Garden of Lies" was successfully produced in the legitimate in London by Sir George Alexander. The scenario was written by Louis Reeves Harrison.

MARIE LA MANNA, A YOUNG STAR

Less than a year ago Marie La Manna, an eighteen-year-old schoolgirl, had no theatrical aspirations, but today she is a stellar attraction of the Edison company. She has been selected for the principal part in the company's new five-part feature spectacle, "Fantasma," released December 19.

Miss La Manna is possessed of rare beauty, made more appealing by a girlishness, vivacity and sweetness that no acting can simulate. A mixture of French and Irish blood, she represents the charm of the beautiful Irish colleen and the vivacious French girl.

Following her success in "Fantasma," she was cast for the lead in "In His Father's Footsteps" soon to be released, and is now in the South working on a Southern play.

ROSSMAN IN CHARGE OF WATKIN CIRCUIT

Earl Rossman, Gloversville, N. Y., is at present in charge of the circuit of theatres controlled by the H. W. Watkins Enterprises. He was manager for William Morris at the New York theatre.

Los Angeles Screen Club Plans Charity Ball

Occasion Scheduled for Early Part of January in Shriners' Auditorium, and Twenty-five Per Cent. of Receipts Will Be Devoted to Worthy Causes

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Dec. 7.

THE gratifying news that the San Francisco Screen Club cleared more than $2,300 by a dance given there Saturday evening, November 28, has served to revive the desire of members of the Los Angeles League, and at the meeting held Wednesday the initial plans were made for the biggest event of the kind ever pulled off on the west coast.

When the question was brought up the reason stated for the need of funds was the proposed legislation which California exhibitors must try to keep off the statute books. Already five bills are prepared for introduction and it is probable there will be others.

The committee selected to make all arrangements for the ball will be composed of Seth D. Perkins, of the Optic theatre, chairman; J. S. Lustig, Starland; Bert Lustig, National; Vick Parks, Photoplay, all of Los Angeles; and H. W. Warner, Pasadena, Cal.

While plans have not been definitely made, it is the intention of the committee to invite President Pearce, of the Exhibitors' League of America, to lead the grand march, and in all probability his partner will be selected by a popularity contest either conducted by the theatres of Los Angeles and Southern California or through the sale of tickets.

Arrangements will be made for all the leading photo-players of the west coast, fully 90 per cent. being engaged at Los Angeles studios. Between the number of the dance it is planned there shall be vaudeville acts given by actors and actresses. The date will be set for early in January and the ball will be held at the Shriners Auditorium, the largest building of its kind west of Chicago. Twenty-five per cent. of the net receipts of the ball will be given to charity, the organization to handle the fund to be announced later.

Another important matter brought before the exhibitors at this meeting was what is termed unjust treatment of an exhibitor by a local exchange. At a recent meeting a committee was appointed to investigate the charges made by Seth D. Perkins, manager of the Optic theatre on Main street. After hearing the report of this committee, a motion was made providing that resolutions giving details of the treatment accorded the theatre manager, the view the members of the league take of the treatment, and their recommendations be prepared by the local officers and copies be forwarded to the president of the company in New York. The motion was carried unanimously.

"AD" AIDS FOR "MASTER KEY" EXHIBITORS

The Universal Company besides bringing out clever pictures taking instantly with the public and assured of long runs by their appeal to all tastes, aids the exhibitor with unique advertising matter.

For the "Master Key," its latest serial, a thirty-reeler, the company has prepared for the theatres of man handbills which will conduct an effective publicity campaign, a cloth herald in the form of a pennant. The pennant is made from substantial blue felt on which is pasted a white cloth key. At the base of the triangle appears the name of the theatre booking the film.

It is a clever device which cannot fail to attract attention, and will act as a constant reminder to patrons taking it home as a souvenir.

SELIG ZOO OPENING IS PROMISED FOR FEBRUARY

It is probable that the great Selig Jungle-Zoo at Los Angeles will be opened formally the early part of the new year. Just how near February 1 this can be effected still is a question, but it will not be far from that date. First, there will be a special exhibitors' day, when theatrical men from far and near will be guests of the management. Next will be the official opening for waiting Los Angeles. Mr. Selig will be present upon both occasions.

Motion Pictures Should Have More Sub-titles

New York City, Dec. 4.

Editor, Motion Picture News, New York City.

Dear Sir.—Why do so many producers imagine that they must bring out pictures practically without sub-titles? By some curious kink they have become obsessed with the idea that a screen drama cannot measure up to the highest standards of the motion picture art unless the story is told only in pantomime.

The reason—and in the opinion of the vast majority of patrons, this is a mistake. And it is a serious mistake, for if the practice is carried to the limit people will begin to lose interest, due to the impossibility of keeping track of a plot without the extreme of fatiguing concentration.

People go to see pictures to be amused, and not to be compelled to keep their attention glued so hard to the story to find out what it is all about, that they use as much gray matter as if they were trying to solve a mathematical problem. Such compulsion is far from relaxation. It is a hard task. Nobody wants to go to the theatre in that spirit.

Consequently, if the "tired business man," who wants to divert his mind, finds that his evening's entertainment is going to defeat such a purpose he will soon get out of the habit of dropping in the nearest motion picture house for recreation. He will feel that solving chess problems to win the prizes in the Sunday papers, or trying to dope out their "strategy" editorials on the war, means less work for his jaded brain.

Producers should not lose sight of the fact that an audience expects to be amused. No one expects to see a play on the "legitimate" stage with the dialogue left out. No manager would ask his audience to sit through the four acts in a dead silence, depending upon the gesticulations and facial expressions of the players to follow the story. Why then should any one expect the same sufferance from motion picture audiences?

Sub-titles in motion pictures correspond to the speeches of the legitimate drama for a complete understanding of the development of a plot.

I have been told that some producers are influenced by the supposition that pantomime is the logical model for photoplay acting. On the face of it, this appears to be true. But on a closer inspection it will be found that this idea is based on a half truth.

I grant that a story told solely by pantomime is the best method for effective work in motion pictures—if it were possible. But, unfortunately, it is not possible.

An important part of pantomime is facial expression. Human passions are best shown through the lineaments of the features. Without it there would be no pantomime, but it must be remembered that on the legitimate stage the audience can see the faces of the players from practically every angle. Thus nothing necessary to carry on the action is lost on the spectators.

But in the case of motion pictures the moment the actor tries to convey the emotion felt by the character he is portraying solely through grimaces the player is compelled to look directly into the camera. This action is generally accompanied by a feeling of self-consciousness which spoils the effect. Hence pantomime is impracticable on account of the camera's limitations.

Let us have more instead of fewer sub-titles. A continuance of the popularity of motion pictures depends upon this vital matter.

Force vs. Persuasion

Detroit, Dec. 4.

Editor, Motion Picture News, New York City.

Dear Sir.—It seems to me that the best way to get theatres to live up to the rules of the association is not by using "strong-arm" methods, or to do anything antagonistic.

For instance, if one theatre offers four or five reels for five cents, the theatre nearest him feels that it has to do the same. If this complaint would be referred to the association and then a committee appointed to call on the proprietor or manager, that would, in a diplomatic way, point out the evil that comes to the industry by giving more than the standard number of reels for the price, I am sure that the theatre proprietor or manager in question would gladly change his tactics and "give in."

Some theatres do things because they do not know any better, not because they deliberately want to be contrary to the general rules or understanding.

No man in business likes to have a club held over his head and told that he must or must not do certain things. I don't want to say that such tactics have been used in Detroit, but I just want to call attention to the fact that a personal talk with the wrongdoer will do more good than trying to force him to come your way.

A Prominent Exhibitor.

The News Release Pages

Dec. 7, 1914.

Editor, Motion Picture News, New York City.

Dear Sir,—Just a line or two to let you know that I have at last secured through Motion Picture News what might seem small in your eyes, but looms up in great proportions in mine. My newspaper page presented me the other morning a copy of your paper and pointed out to me the release pages, and to say that I was pleased would be putting it mildly.

It was just what is needed, in my mind, for an exhibitor that wants to keep tabs on his show. You no doubt know that the film exchanges designate all their reels with numbers, and I was delighted when I saw these numbers attached to the titles of the releases on the pages specified.

It seems to me the ideal way of giving the exhibitor the information as to coming releases, and no doubt I am not the only one to have so voiced my appreciation. It certainly fills a long felt want, and I am going to have a special holder made so that I can file them in order.

The pages will go far to speak for the enterprise of your paper, and, coupled with the page designated as "Ready Reference" on which the different features are listed by companies and programs, there is no better help for the harassed exhibitor.

This letter is rather longer than I had intended it, but I feel that I cannot thank you enough for the release pages of the Motion Picture News. With best wishes for the paper that is really a paper for the exhibitor, believe me.

Gratefully yours,

A Jersey Exhibitor.

Hoboken, N. J.

MINNIE DUPREE SIGNS WITH LIFE PHOTO

The Life Photo Film Corporation has secured an option on the services of Minnie Dupree, the vaudeville and legitimate star, to appear in a forthcoming five part feature release to be produced by that company.

The Life Photo will shortly announce a succession of five part feature releases, adaptations from stage plays, options having been secured by them on twelve of the greatest dramatic successes produced in this country.

The Life Photo Film Corporation, beginning with January, will produce two 5-part features a month. It is possible that the additional program will be released under another name.

ARLINE PRETTY ACTS AS BRIDESMAID

Arline Pretty, who at present is supporting King Baggot in "A Five Pound Note," was recently bridesmaid for one of her nearest friends, a moving picture person well known in filmdom. Miss Pretty plans to spend the Christmas holidays at home.
PLANS for Christmas festivities are being made by the photoplayers practically every studio in the Los Angeles district. Every studio will be closed on both Christmas and New Year's Day, and in some instances extra work is being done on Sundays that vacations of several days may be taken by players.

Daily, scores of actors and actresses are taking part in benefits for raising money to spread Christmas cheer, working with club and social workers in raising money for such funds. For two weeks leading players have been taking part in productions at the local theatres, where a portion of the receipts go to this or that fund, or for the children's hospital, where over 700 children, under six years, are daily treated free.

Managers of this institution a few days ago announced that it would be necessary to close the hospital about the first of the year for want of funds. Many of the leading people of the studios immediately offered their services, and it is expected that the first of the year sufficient money will be in the treasury for another year's expenses.

Romantic Story of Mission Days

Elise Janis is now appearing before the Bosworth camera for her second release, this being a picture from another story by the actress herself, produced by Phillips Smalley. The title is "Bettv in Search of a Thrill," and in this four-reeler, of the order of a comedy-melodrama, the international star will pull off a score of new breath-shortening stunts on land and sea. Owen Moore, late of the Famous Players, will play opposite Miss Janis, and the cast will be made up of the star players of the Bosworth stock company.

Lois Weber Smalley last week took up the filming of "Captain Courtesy," from the story and play by Edward Charles Carpenter, in which Dustin Farnum played the leading role. This is a very romantic story of the nature of Robin Hood, with scenes laid in California and Mexico in the year of 1846—the Mission days.

Macklyn Arbuckle has finished his engagement with the Bosworth players, and returned to the East. This feature, which was made under the working title, "Hi Judd, Old Sunshine," was from a story by

MR. ARBUCKLE (Bosworth)

Mr. Arbuckle, and included in the cast are: Phillips Smalley, Adele Farrington, Frank Elliott and Myrtle Stedman.

In the making of one of the last scenes for "Buckshot John," Hobart Bosworth, playing the part, and effecting an escape of a convict, dashed across the track in front of a fast approaching limited train, and so close did the front of the locomotive come to hitting him that members of the producing company expected to find him along the right of way after the twelve coaches passed. The camera was stationed so near the tracks that it was impossible for the crank turner, George Hill, to operate in the usual way, but instead he pushed the handle with the tips of his fingers.

Manager Albert Kaufman, Allan Dawn, cameraman H. H. Broening and Jack Pickford, of the Famous Players company, have arrived here and begun the production of "The Pretty Sister of José," with Marguerite Clark in the leading part.

For the present the company will work at the Bosworth and Lasky studios, but ultimately will lease or build a studio which will be used permanently by one of the producing companies, it being the intention of the managers to keep at least one producing company in Los Angeles all of the time. James Kirkwood and Mary Pickford and others will come to the West Coast about the first of the year. John Mason will come here to play in "The Fatal Card," and Hazel Dawn in "The Love Root."

There are several new faces at the Sterling studio, Johnny Brennon and Lloyd Ingraham both having been signed by Manager Fred Balshofer.

"Innocent Dad" Burlesque

Director Frank Griffin has filmed "Innocent Dad," with a cast including Gus Erdman and Dot Gould. This is a burlesque on Father, who is taken into speedy society by his son.

Lloyd Ingraham is playing the role of a temperamental French chef, filmed under the direction of David Kirkland for the Sterling brand, and to be released under the title, "The Chef's Revenge." And even though the papers are daily telling stories of the expected shortage in beef because of the mouth and hoof disease, the props for this film consist of great juicy steaks, roasts and tempting chops, all of which take the place of cannon balls and bullets in the battle that is staged.

The juvenile company has made "Caroline's Romance," featuring four-year-old Billie Jacobs, under the direction of Robert Thornby. All the parts are played by children.

Director-General Cecil de Mille, of the Lasky studio, has decided that Blanche...
Sweet shall make her first appearance under the Paramount banner in "The Warrens of Virginia," the Belasco legitimate stage success by William C. DeMille, and the work of filming this was taken up last week. Included in the cast will be House Peters and James Neil.

Edward Abeles has returned to the Lasky studio and is playing the featured part in "After Five," by William C. and Cecil de Mille, under the direction of Oscar Apfel.

"Golden West" Finished

Harry Woodruff is expected at the Lasky studio from the East within the next few days, but as yet it has not been decided what picture he will appear in.

The "Girl of the Golden West" was finished during the past week, and after projection at the studio was sent to the factory at New York. Edith Taliaferro has completed her work in "Merely Mary Ann," the stage success of Eleanor Robson, and has returned to New York to take an engagement in a new play.

Director Henry McRea, of the 101 Bison Universal Company, is preparing a scenario for "Ridgeway of Montana," from the successful novel by William McLeod Raine, which will be filmed in four reels with members of the McRea company playing the leading parts, as soon as the present production, "The Governor's Lady," is completed.

This picture will be completed in two reels, depicting a romance in which capital, labor and politics play important parts. In the four-reel production will be the third of the big features released on the regular Universal program. Arrangements have been made with George Hume, millionaire owner of the big timber reserve at Hume, Cal., for exclusive motion picture rights, and all exteriors will be made there.

The mountains in that section are now covered with deep snow, and some of the big scenes will be those of the snow slides and snow storms. The first of the story is laid in the western mountain country, one portion in Wall street, and another in California mining district.

Six Reeler by Colin Campbell

"My Lady Peggy Goes to Town," from the story by the same name by Frances Aymar Mathews, will be filmed in six reels by Colin Campbell and company of Selig players, following the completion of "The Rosary." The scenario is being prepared by Lanier Bartlett, and the picture will consist of six reels. It was originally intended that Mr. Campbell and players should go to the Panama Canal zone for the filming of exteriors for "The Ne'er Do Well," from the story by Rex Beach, but it is found necessary to delay making of this picture because of climatic conditions in Panama at this time.

The Thistle Brand comedy company, of Crown Film Manufacturing Company, of Pasadena, took advantage of the Corona 301-mile road race Thanksgiving day and secured exteriors for "The Booth's Racing Career," in which Frank Moore, Rena Rogers and Allen Fraulik play the leading parts. Donald Macdonald's Paragon brand dramatic company of the same firm this week filmed "The Witness," featuring Dorothy Davenport, supported by Ben Horning and Lee Hall.

This picture is of a semi-western character in which the title character prevents the conviction of innocent parties by circumstantial evidence gathered by the prosecutor and his aids. Both subjects are for the Kriterion program.

The Rex Universal company has completed the scenes for the fifth, sixth and seventh installment of the serial, "The Master Key," from the story by John Fleming Wilson, and scenario by Calder Johnston. Number seven shows many of the beautiful scenes of San Francisco when the two leading characters, John Dore and Ruth Gallon (Robert Leonard and Ella Hall) make a trip over the city in a taxi-cab.

In the eighth episode, which will be taken up the first of the week, some of the principal scenes will be made at Southern California mines, where the destitute condition of the miners, following a close-down of the mines, will be depicted.

Busy Nestor Companies

Both companies of Nestor comedy makers were busy last week. Al. E. Christie made "When His Lordship Proposed," a burlesque on royalty, with Lee Moran, Jack Dillon, Harry Rattenberry and Miss Billie Rhodes; and Eddie Lyons, with Victoria Forde and Stella Adams were filming "For the Good of the Cause," in which Mr. Newlywed has troubles in riding his household of his mother-in-law, who is an ardent suffragette.

The Joker company produced two single-reel comedies by Phil Walsh. In "The Butler's Baby," a pug dog of the housekeeper, an elderly spinster, and the infant of the butler and housemaid, who have been secretly wedded, cause many trying moments for both the master and all members of the household when they get mixed in companion compartments of a large sideboard.

A persistent salesman, who wishes to be attentive to a nurse in charge of a demented man being taken to a hospital for treatment, is made the butt of a joke by the nurse, when her patient escapes, in "All's Well That Ends Well."

The Wilfred Lucas Gold Seal Universal company is engaged in the production of "Their Hour," by Bess Meredith, which deals with a man and a woman whose home lives are everything but pleasant, and who meet while on vacations. During the hour they are together both come to realize they love each other, but in the end sacrifice their future happiness and return to their respective families. The leads are taken by Cloy Madison and Joe King.

Max Davidson and Fay Tincher are playing leads in "Cupid and the Pest," in which a printer, by a transposition of lines in the marriage license column causes embarrassment to the two pairs of lovers; and incidentally sees a way of causing his own temperamental sweetheart to fall for his line of talk. Tod Browning and Billie West also take part and the production is under the direction of Edward Dillon.

Irene Hunt as a Newspaper Woman

"The Exposure" is the name of the "sob sister" story in which Irene Hunt is playing the part of the newspaper woman, being filmed for the Mutual program at the Reliance-Majestic studio. In this the reporter shows up the detective and police force and finally brings the criminals to justice. For two days the producing company made scenes at the Los Angeles central station and receiving hospital.

Frank E. Woods, manager scenario department of Reliance-Majestic studio, dropped the remark that he occasionally enjoyed an auto ride. Within an hour there were salesmen calling on him from local bus car agencies. The number of callers increased, and their persistency finally drove the scribe to prepare a statement to the effect that he was filing a petition in bankruptcy. This is not a scenario, but all rights are reserved.

Dark Cloud, the Majestic Reliance Indian actor; his wife, Dove Eye, together with Fred Burns and Vester Pegg, are playing parts in "The Navajo Maiden," a one-reel Western being filmed by Arthur Mackley with Irene Hunt in the name role. In this subject the unscrupulous acts of the white people in taking advantage of the native Indians is shown in a new and decidedly novel manner.

Production of "How Hazel Got Even" has twice been stopped. First, Director Donald Crisp, in charge of making this two-reel Majestic comedy, was taken ill with pneumonia. George Seigman was initiated as director. While on her way home from the studio Dorothy Gish, being featured in the subject, was run down by an automobile, and the wheel passing over her foot, broke several bones, making it impossible for her to appear before the camera for several weeks.

In the comedy Miss Gish appears as a cashier of a restaurant, and her sweetheart drives a bus. Later he becomes a prize-fighter and his head swells. The cashier hires a strapping big cowboy to soundly thrash the pug, and in the negotiations a romance is started. Eugene Pallette and W. E. Lawrence play important parts. The subject will be completed as soon as Miss Gish recovers.

Continental Picture Thrilling

Christy Cabanne is in charge of the direction of a four-reel subject for release through the Continental Feature Film Corporation, "The Lost House," from the story of the same title by Richard Harding Davis. This promises to be one of the most spectacular and thrilling productions of this company, the script containing many thrilling and novel situations. This is the story of a Kentucky heiress whose uncle determined upon securing all her legacy, plots to get rid of her by the aid of crooked physicians. She is finally rescued by a newspaper reporter discovering and telling the police of the plot against the life of the girl.

The police, in order to gain access to the building in which she is held, are forced to use gatting guns. The building is accidentally fired and collapses just after the girl and reporter are rescued. Lillian Gish is playing the part of the heiress, Fred A. Turner, the uncle, and Wallace Reid the reporter.

Francis Spottiswood Aitken, character actor of the Griffith-Mutual players, has a smile that won't wear off. The cause is that his little daughter, Frances, carried away the blue ribbon at a baby show recently conducted in Pasadena, Cal., the city of millionaires.

W. S. Hart directed and played the leading part in a decidedly western subject, "In the Sage Brush Country," which was completed at the New York M. P. company studio last week. The picture tells the story of a bandit who becomes smitten on the girl he starts out to rob, and when he finds another has kidnapped and robbed her of the money to pay off the workmen at her father's mine, while she is taking it from the express office to the mine office, he sets out to effect a rescue. The cast includes Rhea Mitchell, Herschel Mayall and Thomas Kurihara.

Lively Football Stars

An interesting football story is woven around the sacrifice of a player who tells his friend his secret of passing a ball, thus making the friend successful, in "The Scrub," produced at the New York studio last week by Scott Sydney. Many of the game scenes were made when Whittier and University of Southern California teams clashed on a local field. The pictures were later projected for the benefit of the University players, and when run through the projection machine slowly it was possible for some of the players to see where they made mistakes which cost their team points on the score.

Charles Swickard is directing the filming of a moonshine country story, "The Still on Sunset Mountain." In this the revenue officer falls in love with the moonshiner's daughter. The information he secures while deceiving the mountain people, makes it possible for the officers to raid the home of his sweetheart.

The girl is wounded but remains faithful to her lover, when he is captured by the law breakers and is to be shot. She aids him to escape. This is the first subject filmed by Mr. Swickard since joining the Inceville forces.

A QUINTET OF STARS TO BE FOUND IN THE BOSWORTH FEATURE FILMS
Richard Stanton and a company of Domino, Kay-Bee and Broncho players spent a week at San Francisco making dock and water scenes for a coming release.

J. Barney Sherry, of the New York Motion Picture Company studio, known as The Irish Prince, and Mabel Normand, the Keystone Girl, led the grand march at the Beach pavilion, Venice, Thanksgiving evening, where a special ball was given for motion picture players.

Figman Company in "Jack Chanty"

Max Figman, director for Masterpiece productions; Elliott Clawson, scenario editor, and George Rizard, cameraman, have left for the upper region of the Sacramento River, in the northern part of California, where they will select locations for exteriors for the film version of "Jack Chanty," a novel by Hubert Footner. They will return by way of the Yosemite Valley, where other locations will be selected. The setting of the novel is in Northern Canada, but the mountain country of Northern California affords similar scenery.

The David Miles Company, producing for Sawyer release, has filmed a picture which will consist of several reels. The title is "The Sisyl of the Films." This is a story of a fortune teller and some of the extravagant yarns she tells her clients are shown by fadeouts. In the end the faker is exposed. In the cast are: Linda Griffith, Charles Fleming, Charles Perley and John C. Bramwell. The company has just completed making "The Girl Who Smiles," a drama featuring Linda Griffith. This is a heart interest story in which a girl brings peace and harmony into a discordant family.

Tom Mix and his band of cowboys at the Selig Glendale studio staged a Western during the past week, "The Stage Coach and the Girl," with the director, Goldie Caldwell and Lucretia Maxum in the leading parts. One of the big scenes is that of the coach turning over down the side of a cliff when the wheel came off at a sharp turn in the road, and this thrill was put over without anyone being injured, notwithstanding Mix and Miss Caldwell were on the box, and two were inside when the "accident" happened. This week the company is making a two-reel subject under the working title, "The Child of the Fray."

Selig Studios Active

Director Norval McGregor is staging a one-reel comedy, "The Clam Shell Suffragette," with Lillian Browne Leighton in the name role, at the Selig Jungle Zoo studio, which tends to dispense the everyday belief that this representative of the female of the species is of recent origin.

The time of the picture is the stone age, and many costly sets were required.

Every company of the Selig studios is working every minute of sunlight, as the players have been promised vacations during the holidays if their respective company is ahead a release or two. Lillian Leighton is assured she will have two or three weeks to spend in Chicago, and Edith Johnstone will visit relatives and friends at Philadelphia and Rochester, N. Y.

Carn von Pagh-Winther, assistant to the Baron, cameraman for the Balboa company, spent Sunday afternoon at the harbor at San Pedro, and later, while dining at a cafe at the beach town, discussed submarine boats of various types. From the time the Baron left, the cafe until he arrived stories connected only in the fact that they bring out one of the leading social questions of today.

Miss Roland has been in pictures for the past four years, and since her first appearance before the camera has always played leads. For a long time she was associated with Johnny Brennan in comedy releases, and later was transferred to the Glendale Kalem studio, where she was assigned emotional and heavy dramatic parts.

Otis Filming Three Novel Pictures

The actress will take up her new engagement December 15, and will first play the leading female parts in the twelve releases, scenarios for which have been completed. Director-General Otis Turner and his company of players are engaged in filming a three-reel release, "Changed Lives," scenario for which was written by the "Guvenor" himself. Mr. Turner has also prepared the scripts for three additional "Sanford Quest, Criminologist," detective stories which will be taken up next.

A play based on incidents of the Civil War is being filmed this week by Edward J. LeSaint at the Selig Edendale studio, the title of which is "The Passer By." The plot contains a pretty romance in which a Yankee miss induces a friend to take her brother's place in the ranks in order that the brother may remain at home to earn a living for the family. The admirer is given a present as a token of love by the girl, which later serves to identify him when found on the battlefield.

HAINES IN CHARGE OF MUTUAL LOUISVILLE OFFICE

FRANK E. HAMMER, who has been manager of the Louisville, Ky., office of the Mutual Film Corporation since quarters were opened here a few months ago, has severed his connection with that company.

He has gone to Indianapolis. F. H. Haines, who has been in the Cincinnati office of the Mutual, has taken charge in Louisville.

CALMY RETURNS TO FRISCO

The many friends of M. Calmy, formerly of San Francisco, were gratified this week to learn that this popular exchange man, who has had charge of the Denver branch of the Golden Gate Film Exchange since last spring, is to again make his headquarters in San Francisco and is to be an assistant of Sol Lesser.

Mr. Calmy is returning to San Francisco on account of the fact that the Denver branch has been disposed of to other parties.
THREE BIG FEATURES ENGAGE INCE'S ATTENTION

Thomas H. Ince rapidly is acquiring the title of "the busiest man in the movies." He devoted the entire summer to two of his biggest features, "The Two Gun Man" and "On the Night Stage," and although they are scarcely off his hands, he now is superintending the production of a third masterpiece, "The Italian." "The Two Gun Man" is a seven-reel Western thriller that will serve to present William S. Hart in the stellar role. "On the Night Stage" is another Western story, but of a different type.

This will offer Robert Edeson, William S. Hart and Rhea Mitchell in a tri-star combination. "The Italian" is a tense dramatic narrative of the slums and will have George Deban as its principal.

"THE CRUCIBLE" NEXT FAMOUS PLAYERS RELEASE

Following her first triumphant appearance in motion pictures, in the title role of "Wildflower," Marguerite Clark will again appear on the Famous Players-Paramount program December 14, in Mark Lee Luther's powerful story, "The Crucible." In this production Marguerite Clark portrays the role of Jean Fanshaw, at first hoyden and tomboy, unjustly condemned to a reformatory, but who later triumphs over the shame of her imprisonment and the sorbid corruptness of her environment.

FERGUSON TO BOOK LARGE CIRCUIT

Frederick L. Ferguson, manager of the New York branch of the George Kleine attractions, Candler Theatre building, for the past year, has resigned. His action in relinquishing this position was resultant from his acceptance of a lucrative offer to book a large circuit of motion picture theatres throughout New York state. His headquarters, commencing next Monday, will be in the Strand Theatre building.

ALCO SIGNS THREE MORE THEATRES FOR "SPOILERS"

The New York Alco Exchange, which owns the state rights for New York to "The Spoilers," reports a brisk demand for this feature. The latest theatres to be signed are the Clinton Square, Albany, and the Case, Troy.

"Damon and Pythias" Finds Favor with Public

Picture Telling the Most Famous Friendship in the History of the World Attracts Immense Crowds at New York Theatre

The Universal production of "Damon and Pythias" has won immediate favor at the New York Theatre, and is playing to good business. It has made a strong impression with its fascinating and dramatic scenario, its splendid portraying company, its great scenes and perfection in photography.

In addition to drawing splendidly with playgoers the feature appeals strongly to the Knights of Pythias, who are booking in large parties for dates during the engagement. Wednesday night, December 2, all of the lower floor and boxes were occupied by the Army and Navy officers stationed at Governor's Island, all of the harbor forts and the Brooklyn navy yard. Officers of the battleships Wyoming and Florida were also present. Twelve lodges of the Knights of Pythias of New York City were in attendance December 3, and large parties are being booked throughout the engagement.

To accommodate these and also the general playgoing public, extra performances have been added at the New York theatres. From now on two performances will be given every Saturday and Sunday nights and also holiday evenings at 7 and 9 o'clock.

Under the direction of the Universal, the New York Theatre presents an enterprising and attractive appearance. The opening on Monday, November 30, was a brilliant one and was a typical Broadway first night. On Monday night, December 7, "Damon and Pythias" had its inaugural presentation at the Fine Arts Theatre, Chicago, which the Universal has taken over for a run of this feature. A brilliant audience attended the premiere.

The Universal Booking offices are very active and getting fine returns from the companies now on tour. The film is meeting with big success in all of its towns and in many cities is being booked for return engagements. On Monday, December 14, "Damon and Pythias" opens for a fortnight at the DeKalb Avenue Theatre, Brooklyn.

All Vitagraph Players on Bill at Once

Thirty-Four Principals and One Hundred and Forty-Two Other Members of Stock Company Shown on Novelty Program

THIRTY-FOUR of the principals and 142 other members of the Vitagraph stock company are represented in the new Vitagraph Theatre, New York City, novelty program which the Broadway Star Feature Company, Inc., is presenting.

The principal novelty is a spoken drama in one act, "What the Moon Saw," written by S. Rankin Drew and presented by Sidney Drew and a company of Vitagraph players in person, including: Sidney Drew, S. Rankin Drew, Jane Morrow, Edwina Robbins, Paul Scardon and J. Herbert Frank. "What the Moon Saw," which is a psychological drama of absorbing interest, is being given at every evening performance and at the Saturday and Sunday matinees only, on account of the players having to be at the studio during the day.

The feature picture part of the program includes a four-part adaptation of Frederick Chapin's comedy play, "C. O. D.," arranged for the screen by Charles Brown, produced by Teft Johnson and presented by a notable cast of Vitagraph comedians, among whom will be found: Harry Davenport, Hughie Mack, Charles Brown, Eveline Jensen, Mabel Kelly, Edwina Robbins, Jack Bulger, William Dunn, William Shea, Ethel Corcoran, Mary Anderson and Charles Edwards.

"C. O. D." comes nearer being the acme of comedy productions than any previous screen story. It is a straight comedy telling a laughable chance encounter of three husbands, who are trying to enjoy a bachelor holiday, and their three wives posing as widows and spending the week-end at a country hotel.

Supplementing the features will be two single reel comedies, "The Athletic Family" and "A Strand of Blond Hair," and a two-part drama, "Sunshine and Shadows," a powerful story of devotion.
AROUND OMAHA EXCHANGES

EBSASKA exhibitors are finding that features pay. More theatres are joining the ranks of those showing features more frequently than ever before and the third feature dealing exchange has been established in Omaha. All three feature exchanges have sprung up there within the last eight months.

E. R. Pearson, formerly manager of the General Film Company, Omaha, and later with the Eclectic exchange as manager, has accepted the management of the World Film Corporation at Fifteenth and Harney streets, on the floor above the Hipp theatre. Omaha now has the World, Warner and Eclectic exchanges.

J. E. Kirk, formerly with Mr. Pearson in the service of the General, then road man and assistant with him in the Eclectic, is now manager of the Eclectic exchange there and is making a success of it. Manager Pearson, of the World, declares there has been a remarkable start made by his exchange during the last two weeks. The exchange was opened only two weeks ago.

Manager Frank Harris, of the Empress theatre, Omaha, showing regular service, has switched to features, saying that features pay. He says they are practically needed in advertising. Other theatres all over Omaha's territory, including Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas and the Dakotas, are increasing their feature business.

PICTURE PLAYHOUSE OFFICE IN PITTSBURGH

The Picture Playhouse Film Company, since its organization, has opened new offices at the average of almost two a month, and now has nine branch offices in all the leading cities as far west as Chicago, taking in two branch offices in Canada.

The Pittsburgh office will be at No. 420 Pennsylvania Avenue. Mr. G. H. Porter, the general manager, has rented a suite in the home, to be a ground floor office. The office is newly furnished and stocked with equipment and supplies.

The exhibitors of Pittsburgh have already demonstrated their co-operation with this new office by sending in a number of advance bookings, and the new branch manager reports a bright outlook for successfu business the remainder of the winter.

KANE OF WORLD FILM A VISITOR AT CAPITAL EXCHANGE

S. KANE, assistant general manager of the World Film Corporation, was a recent visitor at the New York offices.

MANY MOVIES IN ST. LOUIS EXCHANGE CIRCLES

ST. LOUIS Filmland has been going through a general move-up and shake-up during the past two months. First, Charles Werner, manager of the American Feature Film Company, in the Navarre building, assumed charge of the World Features offices in place of W. P. Cuff, who went to Springfield, Mo., to become an exhibitor.

Then Ralph Pinkham, manager for Warner's Features, in the Benkoist building, resigned, and opened up the new office for Wm. Fox's Box Office Attractions, at 2632 Olive street, and Lou Bent, from the Mutual Exchange, at Fourteenth and Pine streets, joined the box office forces as assistant manager. Next the Alco opened their fine new office at 3630 Olive street. Warner's Features, with Richard Broderick, who came on from Chicago as manager, on the resignation of Mr. Pinkham, packed up and moved out to Film Row, with a fine new suite of offices at 3628 Olive street.

GREATER NEW YORK TAKES LARGER QUARTERS

THE Greater New York Film Exchange, under the management of J. P. Anderson, has moved into larger and more commodious quarters on Ninth street, Washington, D. C. In addition to the program of the General Film Company, this office also handled the Box Office Attractions, which is partially responsible for the present change.

When thoroughly established, the shipping, paper and rental departments will be greatly facilitated by larger space and an increased force. A feature of the exchange, which occupies two large floors, will be an exhibition room for the accommodation of exchange men and the press. There will be frequent exhibitions of photoplays before release. There will also be a large committee room, which Mr. Anderson promises to place at the disposal of the local Exhibitors' League, if desired by that organization.

The furnishings are attractive and practical, and if present plans are carried out the Greater New York Film Exchange will possess the most artistic offices in the national capital.

It must not be overlooked that Mr. Anderson has an able assistant in the person of Miss Mary Jeffries.

STANDARD HEADS MAP OUT EXCHANGE SYSTEM

At the present the men back of this new organization have kept their identity concealed, but it is expected announcement of the same will be made within the next week or two in which the locations of the offices, names of managers, and officers of the corporation will be given.

FEATURE DEMAND IN NEW YORK SAYS TAYLOR

GENERAL business conditions are much better throughout the state, according to C. A. Taylor, who is travelling about New York in the interests of the New York Alco Exchange. He believes that a revival of general business activity is not far off. He reports that film demands are steadily increasing, with the demand for features always in the lead.
"Zudora" Makes City Look Like Orient
Players, Dressed in Glittering Trappings of Far East, Astonish Peaceful Inhabitants of New Rochelle in March to Thanhouser Studio

PEACEFUL New Rochelle recently saw war refugees pack their prized belongings through its streets. An East Indian caravan, princes, potentates, dancers, horsemen, carrying with them all the panoply, typical of the Orient's love of display, it was. Down to the Thanhouser Park swarmed the mighty army and there a halt was made. The foreigner arrived some time ago from their country where their homes had been pillaged and their villages burned by the now fiercely marauding Turk.

They fled to the coast, bringing with them the swords, guns, rugs, vases, et cetera, which had been prominently placed in their now ruined homes for years, perhaps for centuries; for from father to son, are the family weapons handed down as the smiling daughters of that sun-kissed land receive the laces, the handiwork of their mothers.

Now will they be seen in motion pictures, in "Zudora," Thanhouser's photoplay serial which had its first release on November 23. The natives pitched a camp in one of the big buildings at the New Rochelle studio and within the confines of friendly walls ate and slept in safety, for the first time in many weeks.

The wearing apparel of these natives, genuine in material and workmanship, the wonderful rugs and their crude effects were given a value of $40,000 by an estimator as the Thanhouser management desired and did protect its safety—against fire and thievery by insurance, and in addition placing three watchmen on duty.

In "Zudora" these men and women, garbed in the actual costumes of their war-ridden country, will offer a picture hardly before equalled upon the screen, for the camera, ever accurate, will promptly show the great expense the Thanhouser Company is making in order to give this greatest of photoplays a setting in keeping with the genius of its creator, Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman, the superiority of the cast headed by Marguerite Snow, James Cruze, and Harry Benham, and the wonderful stagecraft of the director, Frederic Sullivan, who, by the way, is a nephew of Sir Arthur Sullivan of "Pinafore" and "Mikado" fame.

The set, a throne room scene, one of the largest ever used in a motion picture production, is 90 feet long by 40 feet wide. It is such a background that the nimble East Indians will dance and fight, flash their Damascus swords, parade and make merry in order that the motion picture public may be given an accurate representation of their life.

COHN SCORES FOOTBALL BEAT
Jack Cohn, editor of the Universal "Animated Weekly," for the third time this season has scored a beat over all other news pictorials in the filming of the Army-Navy football game at Philadelphia.
“THE CONSPIRACY”
(Famous Players-Paramount—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE Famous Players company has released an unusual number of excellent pictures of late, most all of them adapted from stage successes, and presented by Daniel Frohman. Henry W. Savage has also offered some of them, but “The Conspiracy” is the first picturized play presented by Charles Frohman.

Credit for its success should go largely to Alan Dwan, the director. In practically every point he has shown us that as a director he has no large number of superiors, if any. In adapting the play for the screen, which was originally written by Robert Baker and John Emerson, Mr. Dwan has plainly retained its attractive powers, besides changing it to suit the requirements of the motion picture.

John Emerson himself appears in the principal part, which he created when the story began its life as a play. Although there is quite a long time when he is scarcely in evidence at all, when he does put in an appearance, his characterization of Winthrop Clavering, the eccentric author-detective, is one which will long be remembered.

The man’s queer actions, such as dictating into the small hours of the morning to a sleepy stenographer, quitting this pastime with a suddenness that is startling, to perform a few physical exercises, and then in the finale capturing the members of the vice ring with all the melodramatic settings, which he proposes to put into his story, will call for outbursts of appreciative laughter.

Lois Meredith embodies all that one could ask for in the part of Margaret Holt, the sister of a detective who works according to the ridiculous lines laid out for him by Clavering. It is mainly she who brings the vice ring into the law’s hands, and the manner in which she accomplishes it, aided by a few other characters, is tense and absorbing as the author-detective’s actions are humorous from beginning to end.

Holt, the detective, is played by Francis Byrne, who is really more like a genuine detective than any we have seen for some time. Harold Lockwood, the cub reporter, is breezy and intruding as usual. It would be better if he was called a star reporter instead of cub, however.

Iva Shepard appears as a member of the corrupt gang, and Hal Clarendon appears to excellent advantage as Morton, the leader of the gang who is stabbed after a furious set-to with Margaret. Dodson Mitchell as Flynn and Edward Durand as Cassell complete the cast, which, characteristic of all Famous Players casts, is perfectly well balanced.

Herbal's distributed by the company define the picture as a detective comedy-drama, which it truly is. Such a lucky combination is not often achieved. The comedy in it is of the best, as are the dramatic moments, and the detective story links the various phases of the plot even stronger together, so that it is unusually interesting, even more so than just a plain comedy-drama or a detective picture.

“THE SAGE BRUSH GAL”
(Broadway Star Features-Vitagraph—Three Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

IN “The Sage Brush Gal,” Rollin Sturgeon has produced a Western picture, containing a story, the like of which we are not often fortunate enough to see. Although not exactly unconventional, it possesses a story-like magnetism, due to which the closest attention is always maintained, even though nothing exceptionally thrilling occurs until towards the end.

The first scene shows the main street of a Western town, the inhabitants of which are only conspicuous for their absence, except for the oldest one, who is seated on a log dreaming of better days. Along comes a touring party. A tire on the car blows out and it has to be fixed. The old man sees an opportunity to unburden his mind of memories of the days in the early 50’s and doesn’t need much coaxing to go ahead.

Then follows a story just as we would expect an old man who had lived through it and seen it all, to tell it. The story of a girl deserted in the East, the deserter coming West, falling in love with another girl, she finding out the truth and sending him back home, a better man.

Of course, there are other characters, a gambler “on the square,” who is also in love with “The Sage Brush Gal” and who finally wins her. There is a bandit, too, who succeeds in leading the boy to stealing. But all ends well for all concerned, except the bandit, who meets death when a mine blast catches him in a small house, which is destroyed.

Of the cast George Kunkel is the ablest in the part of the gambler; he has a sympathetic role which he plays well. Mary Ruby, as the Western girl, is good at times, but if she had rid herself of her smile, natural or forced, whichever it may be, we would admire her work more. William Burke as the scaggage is fairly good. J. A. McGuire, Myrtle Gonzalez, George Holt, and Dan Duffy complete the cast of the story. Otto Lederer is the old-timer who relates it.

BALBOA ENGAGES HARVEY AS DIRECTOR

HARRY HARVEY, who for twelve years has been successful in the production of photoplays, has been employed by the Balboa Amusement Producing Company, and will have charge of the direction of one of their leading companies. His first feature for this company will be “The Light in a Woman’s Eye,” from scenario by F. M. Wilterwood, a drama built around an episode in the life of a world-famous eye specialist compelled at a pistol point to perform an operation on a blind woman whom he had just refused.

Mr. Harvey has a record of having written thirty-seven photoplays, and produced twenty-nine of that number himself. His first work was with the Idoloscope company, in New York, twelve years ago. Since he has been employed by the Mutoscope company, the Edison, cameraphone, Pathe Freres, Gaumont (in France), Mee, Si Bee, Frontier, Universal and Reliance. He was Pathe’s first American director and was managing director and superintendent of the Solax plant in New Jersey.

VITAGRAPH PUTS ON ATTRACTIVE BILL

“What the Moon Saw” is a psychological drama, written by a Vitagraph player, to be presented by a cast of Vitagraphers, including S. Rankin Drew, Sidney Drew, Jane Morrow, Edwina Robbins, Paul Scardon and J. Herbert Frank, and will have its first performance and only performances at the Vitagraph theatre, under the management of the Vitagraph Company.

DOUGHERTY FINDS WEST ENTHUSIASTIC OVER FEATURES

RUSSELL K. DOUGHERTY, director in the Kinetophone Corporation, was in Boston last week to look over the situation there, and, incidentally, to attend the Exhibitors Ball as a representative of the Kinetophone. Mr. Dougherty had just returned from a trip to Chicago where he visited the new K. C. Booking Company office in the Ballers Building. He said that he found the Western exhibitors very enthusiastic about features.
“THE THIEF”
(Box Office—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY CLIFFORD H. PANGBURN

whatever the general views of the public may be towards the equality of the sexes the fact remains that when a woman commits a crime she receives much more sympathy than does a man under the same circumstances. In this story it is a woman who is the thief, and in order to protect herself she almost wrecks the life of a man who is willing to shield her. At the last minute her better nature comes to the front, and she saves the man and faces a new start in life.

One of the most noticeable features of the picture is the success which the producers have met with in obtaining a realistic European atmosphere. By the simple use of European telephones, a foreign license number on an automobile and other attention to small but important details the foreign effect is obtained with more success than is at all usual in American made pictures. Another feature which is used rather extensively is that of cross section scenes, so arranged as to show the action in two rooms on opposite sides of a hallway at the same time.

The principal role is played by Dorothy Donnelly, whose ability at handling heavily emotional parts makes her an ideal player for the character of the misguided woman who thought herself forced to steal in order to hold her husband’s love. The other principals are Richard Buhler, Harry Spingler and George De Calton.

Marie, the leading character, is in love with a man who at first takes no interest in her. She discovers, however, that he is very fond of handsome gowns, and always is attracted by a well dressed woman.

In order to wear fine dresses she obtains credit at an expensive dressmaking establishment on the strength of being residuary legatee of a wealthy uncle. Her plan is successful in that she is soon married to the man she had sought, but she is terrified when she learns that after settling other claims there is no money left for her from her uncle’s estate.

She fears that if her husband knows of the large bills she has run up she will lose his affection, and so she steals money from the private funds of a wealthy friend at whose home she is visiting. The step-son of the woman from whom she has been stealing has a foolish infatuation for her, and when she is about to be discovered he takes the blame for the thefts. As he is about to leave home the woman confesses, and all ends well.

THE WIFE ADMITS STEALING

DAMON AND PYTHIAS AT NEW YORK THEATRE

Monday, November 30, at the New York Theatre, the Universal Film Company will present its newest and biggest photo-play, “Damon and Pythias” in six parts. Two performances daily will be given during the engagement, matinee and evening.

The Supreme Lodge of the Knights of Pythias have endorsed the photo-play not only for its illustration of the order’s principles of friendship, but also for its wondrous beauty and dramatic story.
Regulating Prices While Raising Them

THE present season marks the end of a year, throughout which Motion Picture News has consistently and persistently urged upon exhibitors the wisdom and profitableness of higher prices of admission. Other trade publications have followed the example of the News, and become advocates of such a course of action; none, however, with the earnestness or conviction of the News.

THE campaign has begun to bear fruit.

Exhibitors first saw that it was profitable to raise prices—most of them never imagined it would be otherwise—but it was not for some time that they admitted it to be generally possible.

Now, with every exhibitor in the country seriously turning the question over in his own mind, is the time to clear away some misunderstandings, and offer some prudent reminders.

REMINDER number one is this: the five-cent theatre will never be completely eliminated.

Remainder number two is this: a exhibitor can blindly and arbitrarily raise prices, without first taking into consideration all the conditions that affect his particular theatre. There are others of equal importance; we will touch upon them presently.

THE question should really be regarded as one of regulation of prices, rather than one of raising prices. The solution is not the universal adoption of a higher price by exhibitors. It is rather the separation of the five-cent theatres from the ten and fifteen and twenty-five-cent theatres, and the end of the suicidal attempts of the five-cent theatres to compete with the larger and higher-priced houses and with each other by overloading their programs and bankrupting themselves to run one more reel for a nickel than the man across the street.

THIS maxim may be safely laid down: wherever prices have been successfully raised, they should be raised.

There are too many five-cent theatres. The business has to a great degree emancipated itself from the slavery of the nickel, but it is not yet altogether free. At the same time, there are towns, or localities in towns, where only a five-cent theatre can live. The problem is, to take every theatre possible out of the nickel class, and place it where it belongs.

There is no doubt that from twenty-five to fifty per cent of the five-cent theatres could successfully raise their prices, if their managers had courage, confidence in themselves and their patrons, and the knowledge of the proper campaign to set in motion for justifying the increase.

EVERY successful exhibitor knows, or should know, the tastes and the spending powers of his actual and his prospective patrons.

Every exhibitor should be giving his patrons the best he can afford for the price he charges.

The word “afford” is important, because too many are offering the best they can get, regardless of whether they can afford it or not. Usually they can't.

If such an exhibitor is giving the best program he can afford, and he finds a substantial demand for still better pictures, it is safe to assume that his patrons are willing to help him pay the increased cost, to him, of such pictures.

THE motion picture business at the present time offers one striking contrast. It is plain that the five-cent theatre is passing, as the representative theatre of the business.

It is equally plain, on the other hand, that there was never such an abundance of good pictures within the reach of the five-cent exhibitor as there is today.

This condition is due almost entirely to the development and multiplication of programs.

It is practically possible, at this moment, for the man who is convinced that his theatre is in a five-cent community and that his existence must be measured by nickels and not dimes or quarters, to offer better pictures, at an expense within his limits, than ever before.

THEY may not be as elaborate, or as sumptuously staged as the films de luxe exhibited at the great feature theatres of the country. They may be totally devoid of stage celebrities, and unhonored by having their scenarios written by the authors of “best sellers.”

But in the basic requirements of a good picture—photography, directorship, action and harmonious setting—without which no star or author can confer success upon any picture, these pictures do, and can be made to compete favorably with the highest-priced films on the market.

For that reason the five-cent exhibitor has no excuse for bankrupting himself to get reasonably good film.

He has no business to be a five-cent exhibitor, if he can escape from it.

But if he lacks either the courage, or the clientele, or both, to enable him to raise his prices, he can at least have the good sense to conduct his business within his means.
Lubin Burns Down Hotel for “College Widow”
Two and a Half Story Brick Structure of Colonial Design Specially Erected for Ade Comedy

A LARGE throng of spectators in general had an unusually good opportunity recently to see what daring chances motion picture actors and actresses will take when necessity demands, when the Lubin Company of Philadelphia burned to the ground a two and a half story hotel, and over one hundred performers were rescued from the building.

The fire will be one of the climaxes in George Ade’s famous comedy, “The College Widow,” which is now being made by the Lubin Company. Barry O’Neill, who is directing the production, hunted far and wide for a hotel to burn, but couldn’t find one, so the Lubin company built one for him. The hotel was complete in practically every detail. It was a 2½-story brick affair of Colonial design and was erected on the big Lubin farm at Betzwood, Pa.

It cost Mr. Lubin several thousand dollars to erect the hotel for the scene. Before setting it on fire gasoline and oil was spread throughout the interior and this made such an intense fire that the entire building was in ruins in ten minutes.

OSBORNE BACK AT INCEVILLE
George Osborne, the Inceville director, is about to pack up and return to his duties at the studio of the New York Motion Picture Corporation in Santa Monica after a vacation of two weeks, spent in the northern part of California.

According to letters that have been received from Mr. Osborne, he has been missing the time by motoring.

Vitagraph Receipts Given to Xmas Fund
Company Holds Large Benefit on December 9 to Raise Means for Swelling “American” Yule Tide Contributions

THE Vitagraph Company of America, with the liberality characteristic of the three heads of the company—William T. Rock, Albert E. Smith and J. Stuart Blackton—donated to the New York “American’s” Christmas Fund the entire receipts of a monster benefit at their Broadway photoplay house, the Vitagraph Theatre, on Wednesday, December 9.

For variety, attractiveness and personal endeavor, its sponsors aimed to have it eclipse any entertainment of a similar character. The special program as arranged by the treasurer of the Vitagraph Company, A. E. Smith, included the personal appearance of the distinguished actor, Sidney Drew, and a company of Vitaphotographers, in the powerful one-act psychological drama, “What the Moon Saw,” a two-part comedy, “Wild Animals at Large,” replete with laughter and thrills, the popular Mezzanotte Trio in song classics, and two of the most popular feature pictures ever thrown upon the screen, “A Million Bid,” in five parts, and “Love, Luck and Gasoline,” a three-part comedy.

These last two pictures were selected from among a hundred feature pictures because of thousands of letters requesting a reshowning, from moving picture patrons who were unable to attend the regular performance at the Vitagraph Theatre, where “A Million Bid” registered 250 performances on Broadway and the combined run of the two nearly 400 showings.

All of the prettiest girls of the famous Vitagraph Stock Company, including the stars, were in attendance to offer assistance in the selling of programs.

Thousands Brave Bad Weather to Attend the Fifth Annual Entertainment of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of Greater New York, Held in the Grand Central Palace, December 7—Prominent Firms Are Box Holders and Numerous Screen Stars on the Floor

EVEN though the weather was of the worst sort, the throng that attended the fifth annual ball given by the Motion Picture Exhibitors’ Association of Greater New York on Monday, December 7, could hardly have been larger.

The reception was held on the main and mezzanine floors of the Grand Central Palace, New York City. Owing to the difficulties that were met with last year, when the affair was given in a smaller place, the committee decided on the Palace. The attending persons, who throughout the evening numbered upwards of several thousand, were well taken care of.

So cosmopolitan in nature was the gathering that it is evident that all classes of people far more than mildly interested in the trade. Prominent exhibitors from New York City and a few more from New York state and other places were on hand in great numbers. The affair accorded them an unusual opportunity to get together and talk business, if they were not too busy meeting and seeing the photo play stars.

As the evening progressed many of the players were introduced to their admirers from a platform. Everyone was welcomed by a rousing reception. Among those introduced were: Clara Kimball Young, Anita Stewart, Earl Williams, King Baggot, Francis X. Bushman, Ben Wilson, Mary Fuller, Rosemary Theby, Kate Price, Edward Earle, Agustus Phillips, Harry Spangler, Irving Cummings, James Cruz, Muriel Ostriche, Margarette Snow, William Garwood and Nicholas Dunaw.

Dancing was the order of the evening on the main floor, while on the mezzanine three theatres were temporarily installed, in which a great number of the well known companies exhibited their latest and best films. One of these theatres was equipped with a Powers 6-A projection machine, another with a Simplex, while the pictures were projected on a Radium Gold Fibre screen. The third theatre employed a Standard machine, casting the picture on a Moon screen.

Crowds Throng Around Screen Favorites

* From the way the crowd roared with laughter at “Tillie’s Punctured Romance,” the newly released Keystone picture just purchased by Alco, with Marie Dressler, Charles Chaplin and Mabel Normand in the cast, it can easily be seen why the picture received such commendable reviews in the trade papers.

On three sides of the main floor more than 350 high backed seats were installed, held by various producing companies, exhibitors, trade concerns and the press. Around the boxes in which were the popular stars of the day great throngs crowded.

Mary Pickford, who came from the east, and moved to London, was of course introduced to her many admirers, was the center of a raging mob. Clara Kimball Young and Anita Stewart were equally heartily received by the crowd.

The box holders of the evening were: The Famous Players Film Company, Alco, Paramount, the Screen Club, Ramo, Kinetophone, All-Star, the World Film Corporation and its subsidiary companies, Vitagraph, Universal, Box Office Attrac tion Company, Picture Playhouse, E eclectic, Alliance Films’ Corporation, Thanhouser, Pathé, Mutual, Life-Photo, New York Motion, Crystal, Exclusive Features, Kalem, George Kleine Attractions, Warner’s Fea tures, Jesse Laske Feature Play Company, Biograph, Greene’s Features, and the Cinema Club.

Committees in Charge

Others were Sam Triger, the Interna tional Exhibition Company, E. Emo rose, the Precision Machine Company, Eclectic Car bons, H. E. Levy, the New York State Association, the Rudolph Wurlitzer Company, Max Tischler, W. B. Fulmer, William Brandt, I. N. Hartstall. Leading Photo play exhibitors: Charles Goldreyer, Lee A. Ochs, Haring and Blumenthal, Unger and Buxman, Herman Mayer, the M. and S. Amusement Company, the Nicholas Power Company, the Greater New York Film Rental Company, White’s M. P. En terprises, the Motion Picture Exhibitors’ League of America, Motion Picture News, “Moving Picture World,” and the “Morning Telegraph.”

Great credit for the successful management of the affair should go to the various committees in charge. Adolph Weiss was chairman of the ball committee; Morris Needle headed the floor committee; I. N. Hartstall recognized everyone and received them well; William Hilmker was chairman of the entertainment committee, and Robert Whitten and E. Rosenson supervised the ball and the box committees, respectively.

Members of both the New York State and the national organization were also present, including Marion S. Pearce, the national president, William A. Landau, president of the state organization, and George Wiley, Mark Corey and Peter Jeup.

The grand march, which started slightly before midnight, had considerable difficulty in forming and marching, so great was the crowd that eagerly thronged the lines. It was led by a galaxy of prominent stars who are not often seen together. Mary Pickford and Francis X. Bushman, Anita Stewart and Earl Williams, Clara Kimball Young and Paul Panzer were among the first, and were followed by others of hardly less fame.

After the grand march, a picture of Mary Fuller was offered to the people at ten cents a chance, the proceeds to go to the School Girl’s Luncheon Fund. Money was still pouring in at a late hour. The ball was a huge success.

San Francisco Screen Club Gives Successful Ball

Special to Motion Picture News
San Francisco, Dec. 7

THE San Francisco Screen Club, organized a short time ago by exhibitors and exchange men in the Exposition City, held a grand ball at the Coliseum, Saturday evening, November 28, and scored such a marked success that the event is being hailed as being the greatest of its kind ever held in this city, or on the coast, for that matter. Conservative estimates of the number that gathered in the Coliseum range between 7,000 and 8,000.

The securing of such a remarkable attendance at the ball was made possible by a publicity campaign that easily eclipsed anything of the kind ever seen. For weeks the publicity committee, of which Joseph Huff was chairman, worked on the details of the press notices and outdoor advertising.

All of the daily papers gave space freely to the events of the week preceding the ball, twenty-four sheet posters covered the billboards calling particular attention to the fact that some of the leading actors and actresses in the moving picture business would be present in person, a long list of the bes t known names.

In addition, every theatre ran slides attracting attention to the event; signs were hung in lobbies and thousands of dodgers were distributed to patrons of theatres. About a week before the ball bannnrs were hung on all of the cross-wires of the trolley lines on Market street, so that even he who ran might read.

Mayor Rolph and Wife Attend

Although the event was scheduled as an all-night affair, crowds began to flock to the Coliseum shortly after eight o’clock.

Mayor James Rolph, Jr., and Mrs. Rolph arrived shortly after nine o’clock, accompanied by the largest number of city officials ever brought together at a public affair of this character. By the time the music for the grand march began, the building was filled to such an extent that it was impossible to fully clear the floor.

The march was led by Mayor and Mrs. Rolph, followed by the officials of the Screen Club and the moving picture stars who had come to join in the festivities. The leader of the group was Jane Keane, of the Kranegar Company, who supervised the taking of a moving picture of the crowd, with some of the prominent player folks in the foreground, while in another section singers from various theatres entered the line.

During the evening Mayor Rolph appeared in the balcony and made a short address, expressing his pleasure at being a
The credit for securing the attendance of the players from Los Angeles studios is due to the untiring efforts of a committee appointed for this purpose, with Leon Bories, of the General Film Company, as chairman. Charles Stillwell, of the Silver Palace, made a special trip to Los Angeles to interview players and studio managers and several other exhibitors worked hard on this proposition while in the Southern city, including Claude Langley and E. B. Johnson, of the Turner & Dahanke Circuit.

The principal committees having the ball in charge were as follows: Hall—F. L. Hudson (chairman), M. Davis, H. Gos-

This article is not fully transcribed and may contain errors. It appears to discuss the activities of various individuals in the entertainment industry, including motion picture stars and executives. It mentions events such as a special trip to Los Angeles, the distribution of a hand-some program, and the attendance of a large number of people at a Boston event. It also mentions the sale of tickets and the attendance of various guests, including Miss Nash.

The content suggests that the article is part of a larger context about the entertainment industry and the activities of individuals within it. It is not clear from the extract how this relates to the title or the main heading of the document.
Selig Attorney Defines Producers' Rights

Nathan Burkan Declares That the First Company to Use a Title in Connection with Any Play so That It Becomes Universally Known to the Public Has Absolute Ownership of the Name and Should Be Protected from Infringement

Special to Motion Picture News

Chicago, Dec. 8.

The Selig Polyscope Company issues a warning to all exhibitors and exchanges to the effect that all and any persons who exhibit any photoplay bearing the title of 'Mizpah' unless the use of same shall have been granted by the Selig Polyscope Company, will be vigorously prosecuted.

Some time ago, the Selig Polyscope Company purchased from Ella Wheeler Wilcox the exclusive motion picture rights to her drama entitled "Mizpah." Another concern has announced a release under the title of "Mizpah." Therefore, the Selig Polyscope Company insists that its rights to the title shall not be infringed upon.

Nathan Burkan, attorney for the Selig Polyscope Company in this matter, expresses the legal status of the case:

"The question of law involved in this case is as follows:

"One who was the first to use the name 'Mizpah' in connection with a play and has made the name known to the public as the title of his play so that the public has come to connect that title with his play, acquires a right to the exclusive use of that name as the title of the play. He can assert his rights by an injunction suit to restrain another from using the same name as the title of a play or of a photoplay.

Use of Name Only Important

"For the purpose of such an action, it would be immaterial whether any part of the incidents, scenes, characters or ideas of the play have been appropriated. The case would rest upon the question as to whether the use of that name by the infringer is likely to lead the public to believe that the photoplay offered by it is the play to which the title was first applied. The rights would rest on the principle of unfair competition.

"In the case of 'Mizpah' there is no question that the owner of the play 'Mizpah' could stop any concern from using the name as the title of a photoplay.

"Under certain circumstances it has also been held that one who has acquired the exclusive motion picture rights in a play can protect the name against one who uses it for another photoplay.

"In view of the frequent duplicating of titles, or the releasing of titles almost similar, this step by the Selig Polyscope Company is a very important one and means a great deal to the manufacturers.

Mr. Selig states that he will protect his rights vigorously without fear or favor against all who shall infringe upon his rights to any titles.

Della Connor, the ex-Pathé star who has just completed her work as Sadie Small in "Officer 666," has been engaged by George Kleine for one of the important parts in his coming play "Stop Thief." Miss Connor will work with Mary Ryan, who is playing the feminine lead of the maid to Harry Mestayer's thief.

Miss Connor is a petite blond and was formerly one of Gus Edwards' proteges. She was lured to the silent stage under protest and spent a year with the Pathé Freres forces in the Jersey hills. Miss Connor thinks that the best work of her career was done under the management of Frank Powell in George Kleine's "Officer 666," which is on the eve of release.

Abramson Makes Contract with Samoloff

Star Will Appear in Four Important Features Made by the Ivan Film Productions, Inc., Which Releases "Should a Woman Divorce?"

Ivan Abramson, president and general manager of the Ivan Film Productions, Inc., has entered into a contract with Mr. Samoloff to play the leads in four high-class features that his company will release. Eight years ago while Mr. Abramson was the impresario of the Ivan Abramson's Italian grand opera company, whose productions at one dollar were then favorably compared by the critics and the public to high-class five dollar opera, discovered in Mr. Samoloff a powerful dramatic tenor. He was so impressed with

The enthusiastic way in which she speaks of the pleasure she derives from her work, leads one to believe there would be more than a protest if she were asked to leave the studio for the stage once more.

W. D. Cooper, branch manager for George Kleine at Toronto, visited the home offices last week. "Picture conditions are infinitely better in eastern Canada than one would expect," said Mr. Cooper.

"Despite the fact that many lines of industry are paralyzed and that Canada is suffering a heavy draft of men and war materials, picture theatres are well patronized and pay normal prices for all their features.

"Possibly the fact that the streets are full of idle men who, having nothing important to occupy their time, spend hours and days in theatres that would not otherwise be so affected."
CALIFORNIA MEMBERSHIP IN SMALL TOWNS

Special to Motion Picture News
San Francisco, Dec. 7.

Practically all of the new members of the California League have come from the smaller towns, there having been no active campaign commenced, as yet, to interest exhibitors in the larger cities, although Los Angeles has been thoroughly canvassed during the stay of State Organizer Cory in the southern part of the state. A prominent exhibitor of Riverside said to Mr. Cory, the organizer: "The fee should be a much larger one. If the league does nothing more than to defeat one bill before the Legislature, I shall feel more than repaid for joining, as it would cost me from $50 to $100 to go to Sacramento, and after I got there I could not accomplish much as an individual."

At Long Beach Mr. Cory found business quiet, with an over-abundance of theatres and many exhibitors trying to draw trade through long programs at a small price. At this time he took control the Joyland Theatre, the Auditorium, the American and Wigwam, and others promised to join before the first of the year.

HEDWIG LEAVES HARVARD FILM

William K. Hedwig, well and favorably known in the trade, has sold out his interest in the Harvard Film Corporation, and is engaged in preparing a series of productions which will shortly be placed on the market, with headquarters in the Knickerbocker Theatre Building.

During his long term of administration as laboratory superintendent of the Imp and Universal companies, and since then in the office of executive and technical superintendent for the Harvard Film Corporation, Mr. Hedwig has made his capabilities well recognized.

It is reported that Mr. Hedwig is prepared to entertain film propositions of any nature.

Important Issues Confront Detroit Exhibitors

Sunday Closing Law, State Censorship, Fire Marshal Bill All Demand Utmost Efforts of the League at December 15 Meeting

Special to Motion Picture News

Detroit, December 8.

THE meeting to be held by the Detroit Motion Picture Exhibitors' League will be the most important in the history of the organization, according to a statement by Peter J. Jeup, president.

"What are the questions to come up?" he was asked by a representative of the Motion Picture News.

"Well," he said, "in the first place, there is the Sunday closing bill. We have received assurances that efforts will be made to enact such a law.

"Then there is state censorship. Just how this could be brought about is beyond me, but we have been informed that some members of the legislature favor such a law.

"Two years ago someone proposed having a state license fee of $100 for moving picture theatres, and it was defeated, but we are told that this matter is to come up again when the legislature convenes after the New Year."

"Then there is the State Fire Marshal bill. Twice a year, we must be inspected by the State Department, the fee being $10 each time, making a total cost to us of $20. This is absolutely unnecessary, once a year being entirely sufficient. Moving picture theatres now have three departments making inspections: 1, the local fire authorities; 2, the public lighting commission who inspect the electric wiring, and the building inspector.

"On top of this we have two inspections from the State Fire Marshal, which, as I said before, are entirely unnecessary and make us spend $30 'for nothing,' as it were."

Mr. Jeup attended the meeting in New York of the executive committee of the National Association, held on Monday, December 7.

The Detroit association reports good results with its requirement that theatres give only three reels of pictures for five cents, and five reels for ten cents. In a number of instances this understanding has been violated, but the matter was referred to the film exchanges, who are giving their support and cooperation to the association in helping to eliminate this evil of the business.

Milwaukee Exhibitors Hold Meeting on Posters

Association at Session, From Which Everybody Is Excluded Not a Member, Considers Stringent Poster Ordinance

Special to Motion Picture News

Milwaukee, Dec. 8.

A meeting held behind closed doors at the club rooms of the Plankington House and from which all press representatives were barred, the Milwaukee Motion Picture Exhibitors Association took action on a letter sent out from the city attorney's office in which the exhibitors' attention was called to sections 1051-1052 of the city ordinances which provide that:

"The posting, exhibiting or displaying so as to be exposed to view from any public street, way or alley, or public grounds, of pictorial prints, pictures or paintings, or of bills, posters advertising matter or words of any kind, that exhibit or portray the nude human form, or parts thereof, between the shoulders and the knees, or that so portray the human form whether nude or not, as to be suggestive of lewdness or obscenity, or that contain words, letters or characters which convey a lewd or obscene idea or that portray murderous or criminal personal actions, encounters or assaults, shall be unlawful."

Section 1052 "provides a penalty for any person, firm or corporation, or any officer of any corporation, who shall violate or cause to be violated any of the provisions of section 1051 of a fine of not less than $5 nor more than $250."

In his letter Assistant City Attorney Bartell, who is handling the matter, stated that "many exhibitors are trying to evade this ordinance by pasting or sticking a piece of paper over the revolver, gun or knife. That does not make such posters legal. It merely emphasizes the weapons which are in the hands of the parties, and will therefore not be in any way a defense in a prosecution under this ordinance. We therefore kindly request that you stop using such posters at once."

At a previous meeting a committee was appointed to wait on Attorney Bartell, and they assured him that the exhibitors had no intention of violating the law and were willing to cooperate with his office in the matter. Two months' time was given them to eliminate these objectional posters.

NOT AUTHORIZED TO BOOK "CALLED TO THE FRONT"

The Jacobs Film Company, Manhattan building, Milwaukee, Wis., which is booking the Apex releases in Wisconsin for the Casino Feature Film Company of Detroit, requests Wisconsin exhibitors to notify them immediately of any person or persons seeking to book the three-reel Apex feature, "Called to the Front."

It has come to the notice of the company that certain people are booking this picture without authority. W. A. Baer, manager of the Jacobs Film Company, states that any person or persons found booking this picture in the State of Wisconsin without authority will be prosecuted.

ON ROAD FOR KINETOPHOTE

Ruth Roland Goes to Balboa for Three Years

Famous "Kalem Girl" Joins West Coast Producing Company at Salary of $1,000 a Week, Following Henry B. Walthall—Several Other Stars Will Be Added to the Aggregation in Pursuance of the Company's Policy to Live Up to Their Standard, "Pictures Beautiful" in Catering to Exhibitors

RUTH ROLAND, esteemed by millions of theatre-goers throughout the world as "The Kalem Girl," has signed a three-year contract with the Balboa Amusement Producing Company, of Long Beach, Calif., and will be the star leading woman of one of the corporation's dramatic companies, her engagement following closely upon that made with Henry B. Walthall, known as "the world's greatest moving picture actor," who recently joined the Balboa corporation at a salary of $1,000 a week.

Several other famous stars are soon to be enrolled with the Balboa's aggregation of players. The company is doubling its studio equipment, erecting buildings, purchasing large supplies of costumes and scenic accessories and expending many thousands of dollars in a vast campaign of business expansion, these improvements becoming imperative as a result of the highly remarkable success of Balboa feature films during the last twelve months, which triumphs caused a pressing demand from exhibitors everywhere for larger supplies of "the pictures beautiful."

The Messrs. H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer, owners of the Balboa studios, are therefore striving energetically to cope with the insistent calls of theatre proprietors for the big feature releases.

First Famous in "Cinderella"

Miss Roland was born in San Francisco, August 21, 1893. At the age of four years she made her theatrical debut by appearing as the mascot in "Cinderella," in a song and dance piece, and thereby winning fame as "California's wonder child." Later she enacted child parts with the Ed Holden Stock Company. She then was in vaudeville for a time with the Broadway Trio, the organization making an extended tour of the Eastern cities. Finally, after returning to San Francisco, Miss Roland was featured in Morosco and Belasco productions as a child actress, enacting roles in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "The Ensign," "Boothe's Baby," and other plays. She next had two years' work in the Orpheum circuit, being featured as "Baby Ruth," following which her mother took her to Honolulu, where she appeared at the leading theatre and, during her six months' engagement, became the favorite of the surviving members of the royal Hawaiian family, once headed by King Kalakau. She received many handsome presents from Prince David and the other Hawaiian nobles.

After returning to California, she enacted the rôle of "Lavey," the little Lord Fauntleroy. She then played a season in vaudeville and, as she was still a child, attended school in Los Angeles until she was 16 years of age. After leaving school she enacted important roles in six-Kalem productions, for a time in vaudeville and then joined the Kalem moving picture company's players, where she has remained four years and has won world-wide fame as "The Kalem Girl." During her first fourteen months with the Kalem forces she enacted the part of the heroine in scores of Western and Indian-military dramas, among these films being "The Chance Shot," "Round-Up at Dawn," "In Peril of Their Lives," "The Indian Maid's Sacrifice," "Biel's Flute," "The Sheep Man's Triumph," etc., etc.

Later she was starred in some big Kalem comedies, including "The Pasadena Peach," "Ruth's Hat," "Hypnotic Neil," "When Women Are Police," "Romance of a Dry Town," "The Slavery of Foxius," "Elopement in Rome" and hundreds of other comedies. One of Miss Roland's big comedy-drama successes was her star characterization in "Wanted, an Heir," which film was released lately. The "Ruth Roland, Detective" series of releases also proved a great success.

Starred in Kalem Comedies

In "The Kalem Girl," a feature film written especially for her, she displayed all the athletic prowess required of a moving picture heroine. She gave a wonderful exhibition of riding, swimming and fencing. Several months ago Miss Roland enacted the leading rôle in a big series of Kalem dramas written especially for her and entitled "The Escapades of Ruth." During this work she won great commendation for her first class portrayal of highly dramatic roles and proved herself to be in every way one of the world's most versatile actresses, both in comedy characterizations and in parts requiring the most tragic emotions.

Miss Roland's engagement with the Balboa company is, in a way, a return by her to work as a dramatic player, for it was in serious roles that she first achieved success as a cinema actress.

Her youth, beauty, genius, talents and long experience as a star in the cinematographic art will all contribute to her forthcoming triumphs as a featured player for the Balboa films.

Neglect of Federal War Tax Means Heavy Fine

Exhibitors Will Be Multicted Fifty Per Cent. if They Do Not Pay War Revenue Promptly—Exact Date Not Yet Settled

A FINE of 50 per cent. will be levied upon all exhibitors who have not paid their theatre war tax.

This penalty for negligence is provided in the bill as it was passed. It was agreed, however, owing to the short time intervening between the actual date on which the bill became a law, and the date for the payment of the tax in Washington, that a stay of "a reasonable length of time" would be granted.

Whether "a reasonable length of time" may be determined as a week, or two weeks, or a month is unknown. It is generally believed among Washington officials and attorneys having to do with the theatre tax, that the extension was designed to be limited to two weeks as a maximum. This makes the tax returnable, at the latest, by December 15. Others say that December 8 is the last day.

Enforcement of the penalty will serve to materially increase the exhibitors' burden.

The tax, although figured on a basis of one year, is levied for an actual period of eight months, beginning November 1, 1914, and ending July 1, 1915. Remittances should be made for this period.

Exhibitors with theatres of three hundred seats capacity, or less, assessed at $25 a year, will send in but $16.67, the tax for eight months. Failure to pay this immediately means that the fifty per cent. penalty would bring the total to the same sum which would have to be paid for one year's tax.

FILMS AID WORK OF SAGE FOUNDATION

MOTION pictures are now a recognized mode for the propagation of the work of the Russell Sage Foundation in its building at 130 East Twenty-second street. A complete projection outfit and a Radium Gold Fibre screen have been installed in the lecture rooms by Louis Kalvin, electrical engineer in the Atcoso department of the Alco Film Corporation.

The machine and its accessories are on a movable platform so that they may be wheeled from one room to another. The screen is so set up that it can be taken down and installed in a second lecture room within three minutes.

This apparatus is primarily intended for the gathering of the workers associated with the Foundation in its welfare work. Several scenarios have been written by officials of the Sage organization which aim to illustrate points of betterment sought by the Foundation.

Each of these scenarios has been manufactured by a producing organization and each presents an argument in story fashion. One deals with the need of sane and safe Forthdays of July, and another with recreation centers.

MILWAUKEE OPERATORS GIVE A GALA PARTY

THE Thanksgiving party given by the Motion Picture Operators' Union No. 164 at Freie Gemeinde Hall, Milwaukee, Wis., Wednesday evening, November 25, was a most successful affair. Two hundred operators, their wives, sweetheart and friends crowded the hall and enjoyed themselves hugely. Sandwiches and refreshments were provided the guests. A five-piece orchestra under the direction of Glenn R. Crum provided the dance music.

HOLDS SECOND EDISON NIGHT IN BRONX

MANAGER BALSDON, of the Dyckman Theatre, at 20th street and Broadway, New York, was so pleased with the success of an "Edison Night," held recently at his other theatre, the Regent, that he repeated it at the Dyckman, December 1.

Despite the inclement weather, the faithful fans were there in such numbers that before 9 o'clock the doors had to be closed. The program was exclusively Edison, featuring Augustus Phillips in the "Midnight Ride of Paul Revere"; also shown were: "Bootie's Baby," "The Everlasting Triangle" and "Two's Company."

When the stars who appeared in the films were introduced from the stage they were given an ovation, the girls of the party each receiving a huge bouquet. Manager Horace G. Plimpton occupied a box with the Edison players: Viola Dana, Gladys Hullete, Mabel Trunnelle, Robert Connes, Herbert Prior and Augustus Phillips. Manager Balson tendered the party a bouquet at the Hotel Cecil after the performance.

TISDALE NOT WITH INDUSTRIAL MOVING PICTURE

S. R. WARE, manager of the Dixie theatre, Sparta, Tenn., declares that a F. M. Tisdale is traveling through Tennessee taking local moving pictures and is using the name of the Industrial Moving Picture Company. The company states that F. M. Tisdale is not and never has been connected with the company, and is using its name without authority.

"THE STOLEN BIRTHRIGHT"

-reviewed by CLIFFORD H. PANGBURN

THE attractive scenes which abound in the vicinity of the Wharton studios at Ithaca, where this picture was made, have been used in a way which adds much to the beauty of the production as a whole. The open farm country and rolling hills which surround Cayuga Lake make backgrounds of unusual charm, and the effect has been heightened by the careful toning of the film to warm shades of brown and green.

Near the close of the picture there is a particularly fine series of double exposures. These show the two principal male characters hurrying to their homes. One is rushing west and the other east. The two are shown boarding different trains, and the trains are seen on their respective tracks in this series of double exposures. As a climax to this photographic effect the two men are seen on opposite sides of the screen, one clasping his wife and the other his sweetheart in his arms.

There are a number of clever effects, such as the scene in which the hero draws a caricature of himself and his sweetheart, using the end of an old log as his drawing surface. The principal parts are played by Wharton favorites. Elsie Esmond is seen in the dual role of the twin sisters, who grow up far apart. Others are Thurlow Bergen, Harry Carr and Frank Brownlee.

A heartless landlord seeks to evict a poor farmer tenant just after his wife has given birth to a daughter. The farmer holds the sheriff off for awhile, but during the trouble his baby dies. By a strange chance he gets a chance to substitute the dead baby for one of the landlord.

The farmer then moves to Phoenix, Arizona, his wife supposing the baby to be hers. Twenty years later the daughter, who has been left in her rightful home finds herself an orphan and goes to a city to work as a stenographer. She marries a man who knows nothing of her past. She is mistaken, for her sister is recognized by a man who knows the supposedly dead girl, and a strange set of complications follow, which all go to make a story which holds the interest closely. The two sisters eventually discover each other, and all ends happily.

CASINO THEATRES WILL HAVE PUBLICITY ORGANIZATION OF THEIR OWN

THE Casino Amusement Company, of Detroit, controlling a chain of nine theatres, will hereafter have its own publicity director and will also have a weekly publication devoted to its theatres which will be distributed to the patrons. The person to handle this new department will be Howard O. Pierce, who has been in charge of the Washington Theatre since it opened, previous to which time he was manager of the Liberty Theatre.

Mr. Pierce has already assumed his new position and expects to have the first issue of the new publication, to be known as the "Weekly Film News," ready the latter part of December. It will be eight by nine inches, and contain sixteen pages. The attractions at the various theatres will be contained therein, there will be general news items relating to the moving picture industry, illustrations and photographs, and a few pages devoted to advertising. The weekly distribution will be about 30,000 copies. It will be the first publication of its kind in the city.

Other changes announced by the Casino company are: H. W. Irons as successor to Howard Pierce, as manager of the Washington; Mr. Irons for the past few weeks has been handling affairs at the Liberty, succeeding T. D. Moule, who went to the new Alhambra. The transfer of Mr. Irons to the Washington has resulted in the appointment of Harlan W. Starr as manager of the Liberty. Mr. Starr has been associated with A. J. Gillingham, of Detroit, for seven years, for the past four years managing the New Empire.

PRESS CLUB SEES BATTLE FIELD FILMS

Special to Motion Picture News

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 9

THE National Press Club was highly entertained by an exhibition of motion pictures taken on the Belgian battlefield by the daring operator, Edward Weigle. The pictures are on their way to London for exhibition. There were 5,000 feet of film.

Aside from the members of the Press Club, there were also present many national and local officials.
ALTHOUGH this picture contains a plot which seems rather exaggerated, that of a husband's foolish jealousy of his wife, it is played in a really capable manner by the cast. Motion picture characters are known as the most jealous species of humanity, so if their affliction sometimes seems unproved, we have come to the point where allowances have to be made.

"Goaded Jealousy" among its class of pictures is certainly one of the best. It is melodrama, and melodrama of the highest sort, played as convincingly as possible by the leading players, and obviously carefully directed.

Fritzi Brunette has been awarded the part of the wife of the story, who because her husband is insanely jealous of her suffers considerably. Edward Alexander has quite an emotional role as the husband, and plays it with force. The friend of the family is John Prescott, Jack Dillon, one time of the Griffith forces, is the gardener. The picture was produced by William Robert Daly.

Photographically and scenically the picture leaves little room for improvement. There is one inconsistency in the picture which stands a fair show of being noticed by the unobservant. When the husband walks out of one scene clothed in a dark suit and into another garbed in a light one, people may question his rapid change abilities. This small discrepancy comes far from marring the whole production, and it is practically the only avoidable error that has crept in it.

The story is well built, and its situations, which are well developed by the players and the director, keep one in continual suspense. The husband's jealousy, aroused by the innocent actions of his friend, are about calmed when he reads a telegram from his wife's brother to her signed by Jack, which is the name of his friend. The husband has never heard of his brother-in-law and naturally or unnaturally is enraged, but things end happily.

One pleasing thing about the picture is that even though a melodrama, it lacks one melodramatic convention, that is the ruthless villain. There is no villain in the play of any account at all. A thing like this will be noticed, and no doubt appreciated, as will the whole picture.

THE BELOVED ADVENTURER

(Luba—Fourteenth Episode)

TALKING IT OVER

The jewel is stolen by the gang of conspirators of which the Countess Lurovich is the chief. Betty lassos the thief, and the peasants of Croftghly drive the conspirators to the edge of a cliff, which collapses, carrying them to death.

This is the fourteenth chapter of the series. There is one more to come.

THE BATTLE OF LOVE

(Edward—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY T. S. MEAD.

MRS. WILSON WOODROW is the author of the fourth prize mystery play produced in conjunction with "The Ladies' World" for release on December 19. A triangular love-story is at the base of the plot, but it is treated in an exceptionally wholesome manner; unusual situations and clear action rather than sordidness being relied upon to hold the interest for three reels.

The part of Arthur Chandler, a wealthy young clubman, is well suited to the rare ability which has made Francis H. Bushman so popular in roles of this kind. Ruth Stonehouse, as Bessie Wells, is charmingly spontaneous and natural. The principals are supported by the excellent cast of Rapley Holmes as John Wells, and Thomas Commerford as Ezra Chandler, Lillian Drew as Vivian La Mar, Harry Dunkinson as Jack Fixit, Helen Dunbar and Leo White.

THE DISCOVERY.

To the delight of their parents, Arthur Chandler and Bessie Wells become engaged and are most devoted until an actress enters upon the scene. Bessie Wells' jealousy is aroused and she breaks the engagement. Jack Fixit makes a wager with two fathers who are much upset by the incident that he can still bring about the marriage within twenty-four hours.

He obtains the aid of Vivian La Mar, the actress, who agrees to help in the plot. She takes Chandler for an automobile ride and, after inducing him to get out of the car, leaves him stranded in the country. Miss Wells is then notified that the actress has been murdered. Chandler being the one upon whom suspicion has fallen. She immediately locates Chandler, who, of course, denies the charge, but the two families, knowing the plot, refuse to hear his explanation. Miss Wells stands by him, and upon the advice of Fixit they decide to board the Chandler yacht, be quickly married and escape until things blow over. On the yacht they find their relatives and friends all assembled. The couple take it in good part and a novel wedding ceremony is celebrated.

ALBUQUERQUE ELECTS NEW OFFICERS

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Dec. 7.

At a meeting of the directors of the Albuquerque Film Manufacturing Company, a new Mexico corporation, capitalized at $50,000 with $28,000 paid up, held the first of last week, a change was made in the personnel of the board and the officers by the sale of stock held by William E. Rogers, who was secretary and treasurer, to Thomas B. Leddy, a prominent Los Angeles attorney.

H. F. Connelly, who has served as vice-president, resigned from that office and was elected secretary and treasurer, and Mr. Leddy was elected vice-president. Gilbert P. Hamilton remains as president and general manager of the company, and is also vice-president of The United Motion Picture Producers, Inc. The Albuquerque company is now making one reel of comedy drama featuring Dot Farley and one reel of farce comedy each week, for the United Film Service program, successor of Warner's Features.
"THE LURE OF THE WINDIGO"
(Selig—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY T. S. MEAD

The North Woods, with its vastness, its wholesomeness, and its vigorous and particularly charming settings for a picture. In this one the scenes of the trapper's home, the Indian cabin, the frontier settlements, the lumber camp, the forests and the rivers are worthy of special praise. They, together with the excellent costumes and the remarkably fine acting of every member of the cast, make this production most realistic, interesting and thoroughly worth-while.

Edith Johnson as Annette Le Clerq, the beautiful daughter of the old trapper Hugo Le Clerq, played by Lafayette McKee; Barney Furey as Gerard McChesney, the sergeant of the Northwestern Mounted Police; Lamar Johnstone as Kiawa, a Cree Indian, render the principle roles very cleverly. Almost equally good are the rest of the cast, which includes Charles Wheelock as Jaques Le Bree, the honest lover of Annette; Frank Mayo as Louis Le Clerq, her brother; Lillian Hayward as Mrs. Le Clerq, her mother; Lucile Joy as Minna, the Indian squaw of Kiawa.

The story, though it deals with the time-worn subject of the betrayal of innocent love and the unwritten law, is nevertheless so well developed by the use of entirely original ideas that it is far removed from any criticism of being hackneyed. Gerard McChesney a young sergeant of the Northwestern Mounted Police, wins the love of pretty Annette away from her long devoted suitor, Jaques Le Bree. McChesney turns out to be dissolute and without any moral sense. He grossly betrays the confidence bestowed upon him by Annette and her family and breaks his promise of soon returning to make her his wife.

In her wanderings, after she and her unwelcome baby have been turned out of her father's house, Annette runs upon Kiawa, her old Indian friend, whose undying hate had previously been aroused against McChesney. To avenge himself he decides to lead Annette and her child to McChesney, who he knows is at the settlement, and to confront with the proof of his dishonorable act. He imitates the sighing of the wind through the trees and thus lures Annette, who believes in the old Cree superstition of the voice of the Windigo, mile after mile through the forests.

At the settlement, McChesney is forced to marry Annette. The simple ceremony completed, her brother demands satisfaction and chokes McChesney in the fight that follows. Thus right triumphs and to Annette is eventually restored the true love of the forgiving Jaques.

LOS ANGELES CENSORS REORGANIZE

The Los Angeles Board of Censorship has been reorganized with the following permanent officers: A. P. Tugwell, who is president of the Exhibitors' League and owner of a big motion picture theatre at Jefferson street and Central avenue, is president; E. T. Jorgensen, secretary, and Elbert Defeatch, vice-president. Mrs. Elizabeth S. Hutchins has been appointed to the board.

"THE GHOST BREAKER"
(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

There can be hardly a cause for doubting the success of "The Ghost Breaker." Such a logical and successful run as the play had on the stage would be almost sure to pack the house in which the picture was shown, even if it had nothing else to favorably commend it, aside from its sensational triumph in another form.

But the happy part of the proposition is that there is a great deal else to praise aside from the above mentioned fact. To begin with, the picture retains the same star as the legitimate play, H. B. Warner. In the role of Warren Jarvis, the part which he carried so easily and successfully on the stage, Mr. Warner is seen at his best.

Again, there is hardly a play which has adapted itself, or rather that has been adapted for screen use, that is better suited for this purpose. Starting as a drama, the picture continues as such until the end of the second reel, when Jarvis enters, and thereafter the comedy starts, varied here and there with more touches of the dramatic.

The scenes in which Jarvis and his colored servant, Rusty, a character played faultlessly by J. W. Burton, explore the treacherous rooms of the haunted castle, while mainly humorous, are both exciting and fearful. They are so well built and worked out that while this part of the picture is on the screen, the interest is kept at the greatest conceivable height.

There may be some slight difficulty in placing the numerous characters that are introduced in the first reel. Most of them play such small parts, however, that when the principals enter their places are clearly apparent or forgotten.

Others that appear in the cast are Rita Stanwood in the role of the distressed Princess Maria Theresa, the girl that Jarvis takes as his wife after he has solved the mystery of her hidden jewels and penetrated the black cloud which was forever hovering about herself and the other members of her family. The villain of the play, Duke D'Alva, is played well by Horace B. Carpenter. Billy Elmer, Dick La Strange and Fred Montague are cast in the roles of his hirelings. The princess' brother is carried off by Jode Mul-lally. Theodore Roberts as his father, is killed before many feet have passed and has little opportunity to display his talents.

It will be remarkable indeed if "The Ghost Breaker" does not meet with success. It has an admirable plot, combined with excellent acting and superior direction; and again it has the country-wide reputation that the play created for it.

KENTUCKY EXHIBITORS TO HOLD CONVENTION

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Kentucky is planning to hold a meeting soon to discuss various topics pertaining to the business and of importance to exhibitors. It is probable that the convention will be held the latter part of December at either Louisville or Lexington, but no date has been definitely set.
E X H I B I T O R S who are seeking for novel effects will find this picture one that is well worth showing. This should not be taken to imply that it has only novelty to recommend it. On the contrary, it has a good plot, excellent acting and realistic settings. Kara, the last Egyptian, is something of a villain, but his actions are prompted by an oath which he swore to his dying grandmother. He vowed to be revenged for the harm an Englishman had done his family. The sympathies of the spectator are so well aroused that it seems almost unfortunate that he did not succeed.

The story is one of modern Egypt, and by a careful selection of outdoor scenes, and an intelligent arrangement of interior settings a most realistic atmosphere has been attained. Farrell McDonald in the title role heads a large and capable cast.

Mr. McDonald has a particularly trying part, as in addition to its other difficulties he has to appear in a sort of light blackface make-up in order to portray the swarthy Egyptian. However, the character is effectively played whether the man is seen in the rags of an Egyptian laborer or in evening clothes and in the decorations of a prince of the realm.

Jefferson Osborne gives a perfect characterization of the weak and worthless Viscount Consinor, while Vivian Reed is equally good as his attractive sister, Aneth Consinor. Others in the cast are Mai Wells, Howard Davies, Frank Moore, Jane Urban, Charles Haydon, and Ora Buckley.

At the opening of the story Kara is told by his dying grandmother of the way in which she was betrayed by a young Englishman, Lord Roane. She exacts a promise of vengeance from Kara and gives him the key to a secret treasure vault in which he tells him the family wealth is concealed. Kara, it appears, is the last of the ancient line of Egyptian kings.

Kara goes into the treasure vault and at once realizes that he is a man of wealth. He goes to Cairo, where he sets himself up in royal style, with a harem and all the other features of an Oriental home of wealth. It happens that Lord Roane, now an old man, has come with his son to Egypt, both of them holding positions in connection with the diplomatic service.

Kara meets the two Englishmen as well as Aneth, Roane's daughter. He plans to ruin the son financially and to marry the daughter by a fake ceremony, just as Lord Roane had done to his grandmother. By gambling he gets the son heavily into debt, and uses this as a means to force consent to his marriage.

It happens that he has earned the lasting enmity of a certain dragonman, and his plot is frustrated by the man's desire for revenge. At the close of the picture Kara is shut into his treasure cave, and left to die behind a rock door than can only be opened from the outside. The girl Aneth is rescued and finds happiness with her sweetheart.

D I S C U S S L E N G T H O F P E R F O R M A N C E S

M E M B E R S of the Detroit Exhibitors' League met in conference with representatives of all of the local exchanges recently to discuss the present dissatisfaction respecting the length of shows, and to reach some equitable arrangement for the limitations on three and five reel accounts.

Officers of the league have worked for weeks to prevent the unfair competition which has resulted in many instances.

F O L L O W E R S of "The Master Key" will be introduced to something sensationaly thrilling in the latter part of the last reel of this episode. It is something that will create a gasp and murmur to come from everyone in the house, more than likely accompanied with the exclamation "Don't they do marvelous things in the pictures nowadays?" or some other sentence expressing similar thoughts.

It is the spectacle of an automobile in which is a number of men, including John Dore, bound on his way to the railroad station. The car has been disabled by Wilkerson, which accounts for the inability of the driver to control it. All of the men leap from it while it is tearing along at full speed, except Dore who sticks on.

Wilkerson, to make doubly sure of putting Dore out of the way, has set fire to a bridge which the car will have to traverse. When on the middle of the bridge Dore jumps, and he is in the nick of time, as the bridge gives way and the automobile crashes into a deep gorge below and is totally wrecked, though its occupants escape.

Dore, however, manages to reach the train just in time, and the last we see of him is while on the rear platform shaking his fist at Wilkerson, bound on his way to the city to look into the mystery surrounding the disappearance of Ruth, who has fallen into the hands of Mlle. Darracell.

Dore, however, is ignorant of this fact, and what success will meet him will be made known in the next episode. Thrilling incidents have commenced now, and it looks as if the producers were going to treat us to a good many more before the serial comes to a close.

Excitement is beginning to crowd on excitement in the episodes and thrills are becoming so numerous that it seems as though every foot had one to offer.

W I L K E R S O N T H R E A T E N S G A L L O N
"THE CRYSTAL GLOBE"
(Paragon-Kriterion—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

It seems quite a hackneyed remark to make in reference to the future Kriterion pictures, but if they are all as good as "The Crystal Globe," their success is assured.

By no means is this a spectacular or sensational production. The story it presents, however, is one which will call forth great interest. While the theme is not unconventional it is handled and developed in an unconventional manner.

The director as usual should come in for a great part of the praise that is sure to follow the picture. Donald McDonald has produced the picture in such an effective and telling manner that our interest is not lost for one moment.

Dorothy Davenport, who appears in the leading part, gives an astonishingly excellent portrayal of the girl, Shiela, adopted while yet a baby by wealthy people, then growing to womanhood, to refuse a self-made man. Thanks to the man she sees her rather foolish decision and in the finale, after the girl has learned her true past, the two are married. Lee Hill plays opposite Miss Davenport, and his acting is equally good.

Photographically the picture is beautiful. Although none of the scenes are a glaring white, they are pleasing to the eye, and well taken, showing that they were handled by a skilled cameraman.

The exteriors have been well chosen, and the interiors are entirely in keeping with the story. One of these in particular, the Hindu mystic's den, is lavish and especially effective. It is here that Shiela has been, drawn by the magnetism of the magician, and here she learns her past, which affords an opportunity for a little Western action to come into play, which is as well put on as the rest, and exciting.

In the scenes in which Shiela is gazing into the crystal globe, Miss Davenport renders one of the best performances she gives in the picture. Her expressions, which are fully expressive, are assumed so well and are at the same time so natural, that we are inclined to think she will be well heard from in the future.

"THE MASTER KEY"
(Universal Special—Third Episode)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

WHAT will, no doubt, impress many people as a remarkable fact concerning this episode is the realistic and human-appearing mob scenes, which play no mean part as the story progresses. They are to be seen once crowded about the house of Gallon, their kind-hearted employer, waiting to hear the worst, which comes after a long hour. Gallon dies in this chapter, and the effect that it produces among his faithful employees is plainly shown by the expressions on their faces.

That the extras who took part in this scene were well trained is so plainly obvious as to warrant the heartiest of praise for the director, Robert Leonard. Their actions are realistic and true to life. It is sometimes neglected things like this, the training of the supernumeraries, that when not neglected go to make a picture perfect. They instil an air of faithful realism into the picture, one which will most surely make its mark and earn great credit for the producers.

As said before, Gallon dies in this episode. The absence of Gallon is not to be greatly regretted, as we were hardly well acquainted with him to bemoan his loss, but the man who plays the part of Gallon, Wilbur Highy, was worthy of a greater showing than five reels. Of course, Gallon had to die to further the story, but just the same the absence of Mr. Highy is regrettable.

At the outset of this episode Gallon realizes that Wilkerson has really found him, and that it is not a vision that keeps appearing before him. Wilkerson demands a job as superintendent of the mines, and Gallon submits to his wishes much against his will. Shortly afterwards he dies. In his will be leaves all his property to his daughter, Ruth, with the exception that she retain Wilkerson as superintendent, and that Dore be her executor.

When Dore sides with the miners in their fight against the decrease of wages effected by Wilkerson, he is discharged, but when he calms the strike a little later, the superintendent realizes that he is too valuable a man to lose, and reinstates him. On her father's death Ruth came into possession of "The Master Key."

With the establishment of the villain in such a commanding position, and with him already at odds with his employees, whom Dore champions, we may look for some exciting events to befall all parties in the very near future. Such a situation as is now in existence can hardly last peacefully for any length of time; an eruption is sure to occur, and with it some sensational action is due to arrive.

LIFE PHOTO CAST BACK FROM NEW ORLEANS

"WITHOUT HOPE" (Left—Reels)

REVIEWED BY H. S. FULD

"WITHOUT HOPE," the first release of the Flamingo Film Company through Sawyer, is a comedy drama in four acts, by Elaine Sterne, and a release of the first water.

Hope (Margaret Loveridge), a slavey in a restaurant, is adopted by two maiden spinsters, and taken with them when they go to a summer resort. Wetherill, a millionaire inventor (Wm. Mandeville), has perfected a formula for the manufacture of noiseless gunpowder, and while waiting for government approval goes to the same hotel with his daughter, Irene (Mary Charleson).

Van Alstyne, a writer (Harry Kendall), in love with Irene, goes to the same hotel and secures employment there disguised as a waiter, in the hopes of getting material for a story.

La Belle, a political spy in the employ of a foreign government (Catherine Proctor), with the aid of a bogus count, endeavors to get Wetherill in her toils and obtain the coveted formula.

Through the intervention of Hope, who exposes the bogus count, and Van Alstyne, who prevents La Belle from poisoning the inventor, the foreign agents are frustrated and captured.

Comedy and humorous situations follow each other in rapid succession through the course of the story. The attempts of Hope to act the lady and appear at ease in her new surroundings, her flirtation with the different male characters that come her way are masterpieces of acting.

The interior settings show extreme care in the choosing and the exteriors, especially those showing the Hudson River in the background, are beautiful, with clear photography.

The acting of the entire cast is beyond criticism, and the story is so well told by the action on the screen as to hold the attention of the observer throughout. There is not a moment in the entire four reels that does not interest, and the little humorous touches introduced in the love making scenes between Hope and her swain are truly laugh provokers.

THE CLIMAX AT THE DINNER

Two love stories run their course through this film, for Irene gets Van at the end, and both she and Hope get theirs.

This release has so many redeeming points about it that it classed itself as being above the average, and should add to the producer's reputation.

SMALLWOOD PLANS NEW SERIES

The Smallwood Film Corporation, which is now releasing one and two-reel Grandin Films, featuring Ethel Grandin through the United Film Service, will shortly begin the production of one and two-reel subjects under another brand name which has not been selected as yet.

The second release will have as leads two popular players, one of whom has been prominent in licensed programs for several years. The Smallwood Film Corporation has enlarged its industrial and educational department and has opened new offices in Chicago, St. Louis and New Haven, Conn., for the distribution and sale of these subjects.

"WHEN WEALTH ASPIRED"
(Pebble—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY H. S. FULD

THE story of the mother who aspires to a title, and the sacrifice of a daughter to acquire such a coveted honor, is old, and has been used over and over again.

But the producers of "When Wealth Aspired" have given a new twist to it, and introduced so many novel situations as to make a rather hackneyed plot seem new. It is nothing out of the ordinary for a producer to go to great pains to make a production seem real by giving special attention to the stage settings for interiors or to go to great lengths to make the local color fit a particular scene.

When perfect settings that leave nothing to be desired are coupled with a cast that is alive to its respective roles, a cast whose every member seems fitted to and acts the part true to life, the production is worth seeing.

Some unexpected twists make the plot doubly interesting, and a duel scene, where the mercenary duke is wounded by the prince and subsequently pleads with Paola for forgiveness, is really above the average for such depictions.

There are so many good points in this release that it should add to the producers' reputation; and though the plot is not new, this fault is lost sight of by the masterly handling of the directors and the acting of the principals.

The total absence of padding, so noticeable in many recent so-called features, is no little item for the recommendation of this number.

"ZUDORA"
(Thanhouser—Fourth Installment)

REVIEWED BY CLIFFORD K. FANGHURN

In this installment of the newest Thanhouser serial the heroine is confronted by another mystery in the solving of which she not only helps her fiancé, but restores peace and happiness to his parents' home. The fact that to do so very nearly costs her life does not seem to trouble the plucky girl in the least.

At the opening of the picture John Storm has a quarrel with Hassam Ali, during which he is saved from death at the hands of an Oriental servant only by the timely arrival of Zudora. Following this Storm goes to his parents' home in the country, having received a letter from his mother telling of a strange spectre which is haunting the region, and which is seen almost anywhere.

Arrived at his home he learns that the apparition takes the form of a skeleton hand which appears sometimes in a room, and sometimes out-of-doors, but always against some fairly flat surface. He writes of the thing to Zudora, who joins him at once. It finally develops that the skeleton hand is produced by a projecting lantern, and a slide made from an old X-ray photograph. A half-witted farm hand has been using it to frighten people. When Zudora discovers him he seizes and binds her, and is actually engaged in hanging her when her lover arrives and comes to the rescue. The regular cast appears. Marguerite Snow being very effective as Zudora.
"MORE THAN QUEEN" STAR KILLED AT FRONT

ALMOST simultaneously with the release of "More Than Queen," the fine Pathé colored picture in which Rene Alexandre starred, comes the news from France that the talented actor has been killed in the war.

Alexandre was to the Pathé French drama what Max Linder (who was recently wounded) is to the Pathé French comedy. Tall, broad shouldered and notably dignified in bearing, he invariably played opposite his beautiful wife, better known to the American public as Gabrielle Robine.

The French Pathé actors and employees are acquiring themselves with credit in the titanic war which is convulsing Europe. So far the honor list is as follows: Rene Alexandre, killed; Max Linder, wounded, and M. Escoffier, decorated. In addition to these men two employees of the Jersey City studio who went back to fight have written to friends in this country that they are wounded—Rene Monca and M. Tricot.

"THE SILENT ACCUSER"
(Pathe—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY CLIFFORD H. PANGBURN

THIS French-made film is not only well acted, but it is filled with the fine lighting effects and striking backgrounds which one expects in Continental pictures. A number of the scenes in the last reel are taken in the Pyrenees, and show many beautiful glimpses of deep valleys, lofty mountains and small villages nestled among the heights.

The story is one which introduces a number of complications, but which is entirely clear, and holds the attention closely. An inventor, Robert Macey, devises a telephone which projects a picture of the person using it on a screen at the other end of the line. Macey interests a capitalist, who has him live at his house while conducting his experiments.

The rich man's daughter is attracted by the inventor, who thus incurs the enmity of a bankrupt cousin, who had hoped to marry her. He succeeds in discrediting Macey so that he has to leave his patron's home. Later the capitalist dies, and the unscrupulous cousin proceeds to make some copies of Macey's telephone, and even tries to get his cousin to give him financial aid. This she refuses to do.

The inventor disguises himself and goes to demonstrate his device, having sent out a notice of his death and a message leaving all rights to the girl. While testing the device he sees by means of it an attack on his sweetheart and hastens to her rescue. He overtakes her and her captors, only to be seized and locked into an automobile, which is started down a hill. His youthful brother, who has been extremely useful before, saves the couple from death, as he has been hiding on the roof of the limousine, and is able to climb down and stop it. Meantime the crooked cousin kills himself by touching an overcharged wire while trying to demonstrate the telephone. The real inventor arrives and proves the worth of his device, after which he finds complete happiness in the love of the girl, who has been through so many perils on his account.

"THE BEGGAR CHILD"
(American-Mutual—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

TWO reels of heart interest action is what "The Beggar Child" offers us, ably interpreted by the players that appear. It was released on November 30 on the regular Mutual program, but really deserves the name of feature. It is not too long and not too short—exactly the right length in fact, and a story that holds the attention all the way through.

The American company has long had a reputation for offering the trade practically the best to be had in the way of photography, and they don't fail to maintain it in this production. It is clear and distinct every foot of the way, beautifully tinted. Excellent scenes have been chosen as backgrounds for the action, which is supposed to transpire in Italy.

In the cast are Ed Coxen, at first a poor artist who adopts a deserted little girl, and brings her up as his own daughter. The girl in her advanced age is played by Winnifred Greenwood, and because of her the artist gains fame and fortune. George Field plays the Count who falls in love with Lydia. Charlotte Burton is the woman he has wronged, and who prevents his marriage to the other woman.

"HARVARD-YALE FOOTBALL GAME"
(Colonia)

SUCH an event as the annual gridiron contest between Harvard and Yale, which attracts the attention of practically the whole country, makes a most interesting topic for the pictures. Although the game itself is interesting to watch, especially the ninety-five yard run made by Coolidge of Harvard, the incidental views will attract the eye of all, even the person who cares little for the game.

Pictures of Walter Camp, Charles Brickley and Captain Talbot, the last two the captains of the rival teams, scenes in the grandstands, especially in the cheering sections, give an excellent idea of the monstrous proportions of the much talked about Yale bowl. All in all this will prove an interesting film both for sportsmen and to those who care nothing for the game.

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"Just a Kid." (Biograph. Mon., Dec. 7.)—A good story is here interpreted with a dance and incurs the displeasure of the girl he is courting in order to help a small boy who is unemployed. The news that the youth disappears, and the boy and his protector rescue the girl from a fire, and everyone is happy. The cast is headed by Charles West and Claire McDowd. Special attention has been given to the fire scene.

"Cousin Pons." (Biograph. Two reels. Tues., Dec. 8.)—This is an adaptation of the famous novel of the same name by Balzac. The story is a study of the various effects which money has on the members of a family. Old convention and wealth is snubbed by his relatives until they discover that he has money. Then they not only seek his society, but bribe him into giving him a slow poison so that he will die before making will, and thus leave his fortune. Instead he makes a will leaving all his property to the poor and the sick, which is a very strong and interesting one. Charles F. Mathews plays Big Pons and a few others. The cast are Edward Cecili, Ivan Christy, Vivian Prescott, A. C. Marston and Thaddeus Reynolds.

"For Her People." (Biograph. Thurs., Dec. 10.)—An effective story of much interest. The queen of Bohemia is being incapacitated in a distant city. She meets some of her admirers and one of them falls in love with the young queen, who has no desire to marry. After the death of the queen, this, her ministers recall to the country. They, however, do not recall the queen in her absence, and who will rule if she abdicates, haughtily tell her that for her people she must keep the throne. Irene Hawley and Jack Mandell head the cast.

"And She Never Knew." (Biograph. Fri., Dec. 11.)—When an old tramp took advantage of the fact that a lonely woman thought him her long-lost brother, because he fancied his grandmother to the floor, the servants to their chairs, and causes various other persons trouble. A film that should please the children. A splendid cast and a good scenic called "A Trip Through Uganda." In many respects it is the most amusing story of the year. The locale is the West. The action will be fast and dramatic and the production is of the highest. The story with a real-life story, as interpreted by Isabel Rea, Franklin Ritchie and Carth Cooksey, the plot retains a firm hold on the spectator.

"A Perilous Passage." (Lubin. Mon., Dec. 14.)—The latest and best of the "Adventures" series. Lord and Lady Cecil seem to have reached a peacetime career at last, but their calm is rudely interrupted when Lord Cecil meets his old friend Maidens, a famishing Countess Lurwich, who has stolen a diamond in a caper, and he is forced to help her hide it. She learns that her thief is, and by an extraordinary plot and one of the best of the series. The Countess and her gang are killed shortly afterwards by a landslide.

"Madame Double X." (Essanay, Mon., Dec. 14.)—A Swedish comedy with a rough-house trial. Chief scene is when Mabel Truelle, her hostess, and the husband come to life, appears in the midst of the trial, and free-for-all fight goes.

"The Greater Love." (Vitagraph, Mon., Dec. 14.)—Another of the series known under the title "The Tammanys." This true devotion as the hero of this strong drama, hot husband until she's heart after a year in South America. He comes home without writing and intends to surprise the girl. In the garden he overhears her talk another that her fiancée were dead she could love him. Be- lieving that the girl will be happy, the other man he goes home and by means of death notices of a man of the same name leads the girl to think him dead. She then marries the man and tells Dorothy Kelly and James Morrison head the cast.

"The Flirt." (Edison. Mon., Dec. 14.)—The flirt changes from one girl to another so rapidly that the hero of this story, the determined females on his trail. He finally has to decide between one of two lovely girls and his heart. O'Connor is a good comic policeman, William Budsword and Elsie MacLeod are also in the cast.

"The Loone Change of Chance." (Essanay, Tues., Dec. 15.)—A picture adopted from a "Mystery Magazine" story dealing with the double crime of theft of a diamond and some valuable papers. The hero is accused of the crime, but later discovers that a large resort, which enables him to marry his sweetheart. A good thought from O'Brien directed by Richard Travers, Beverley Bacon, Bryant West.

"A Scrap of Paper." (Biograph. Two reels. Tues. Dec. 15.)—This film story is taken from a Palgrave Simpson's adaptation of Sardi's famous stage comedy, and as rendered by Allen Hale and William Jefferson in the parts of the double roles, the performance is worth the while. The girls, it makes a choice comedy which all will appreciate.

"Out of the Past." (Vitagraph. Two reels. Tues., Dec. 15.)—A tale of international warfare which gives her husband in order to save her life. Later when she is happily married to an American, one of her former Italian suitors seeks him and they attempt to extort from her the information to her husband safe under threat to blacken her reputation to such an extent that her husband for mercy so eloquently that her father comes to her aid and kills the other man in a stileto duel, and when his death is revealed, that saves the woman from an embarrassing situation.

"The Man from the East." (Selig. Mon., Dec. 15.)—A graphic of a misunderstanding between Tom Mix and his fiancee in the East. Tom returns to the States to see a cowboy. His sweetheart soon learns of his mistake. While in the West, Tom meets a Western ranch. Tom rescues her from a runawaystagecoach and因此, and she returns home. The rescue is a remarkable piece of dace-devil riding.

"The Vanishing of Olive." (Edison. Tues., Dec. 15.)—Another of the series known under the title "The Tammanys." This story concerns Mabel Truelle, which is featured. In this story Olive lives in a hotel with her persecutors. A Chinese keeper of an opium den arranges the capture, but it is utterly punished by the hero. Olive is rescued by his sweetheart, who eludes the police and his wife. Olive is rescued by her sweetheart, who eludes the police and his wife.

"Weary Willie's Rags." (Lubin. Tues., Dec. 15.)—A split reel comedy based on the familiar story of a man changing clothes with a prosperous citizen. On the same reel with "It Cured Hubby.

"It Cured Hubby." (Lubin, Tues., Dec. 15.)—A young wife tries to reach her husband a distance away. She finds that he is home from one of his convivial parties. By mistake she takes the dress of the sardapilla he intended to use. The effect is surprising. Mabel Paige and C. W. Ritchie star. On the same reel with "Weary Willie's Rags."

"The Egyptian Mummy." (Vitagraph. Wed. Dec. 16.)—An interesting story of a man who thinks he has discovered an elixir of life which will restore mummies to their pristine livelihood. His daughter's sweetheart tells him a "mummy" made of a hobo in a mummy case. The elixir brings her to life in a few days, and the young chap gets the girl. Billy Quirk and Constance Talmadge head the cast.

"The Test." (Selig. Wed., Dec. 16.)—Good acting by Bessie Eyton and Thomas Santoschi as principle, an exciting escape from a burning building. The crooks are not the only heroes in this story, the actors that have temporarily fascinated her. She marries her true lover and happiness follows.

"Two Pop Up Fables." (Essanay. Wed. Dec. 16.)—A picture that is about a chatty girl who did not make a hit with the boys until she stopped talking about herself, and made them the subject of the conversation. Moral: "If I like you, you'd better shut up." The Fable of the Sarcetic Husband and the Vengeful Wives. Mr. Quirk plays a sporting goods dealer, while his wife, in the spirit of the story, is jealous of his customers, and the Sarcetic Husband and his wife are in the cast.

"The Bomb." (Lubin. Two reels. Wed., Dec. 16.)—The daughter of a Russian count swears to revenge on a Grand Duke, who, in the spirit of fact, he has only done his duty in reading a letter that contains clothes in which is the feet of this story. A fire on board the ship reveals the count to the count's daughter. The Vengeful Wives. Miss Malmay is the countess and a noted beauty. The Countess and her son are apparently happy.

"On Christmas Eve." (Edison. Wed, Dec. 16.)—Another interesting split reel comedy picture showing views in and about Cape Town. Some of the surf effects at the Cape of Good Hope are particularly fine.

"A Question of Clothes." (Vitagraph. Thurs., Dec. 17.)—The unusual and familiar story of the girl whose guardian orders her to marry and who runs away with a dancer. The girl is mixed up in a dance in a strange way, and happiness for the two is represented by William West, Bliss Milford and Bigelow Cooper.

"The Tip of the Dark Continent." (Edison. Wed., Dec. 16.)—An interesting split reel comedy picture showing views in and about Cape Town. Some of the surf effects at the Cape of Good Hope are particularly fine.

"Red Dye." (Biograph. Split reel. Thurs., Dec. 17.)—The situation that follow when a gang of crooks live above a "sweet young thing," and send her into a dye shop. A new "red" dye, which she sells, are almost bound to be marked. A second, with a similar dye, is also marked, but the "red" dye is red, so it is thought to be blood. The burlesque police enter and operate added over the skin effects, and they become "a Bifornia Mystery," and the cast includes Madame Kitty, and who plays a young woman who is shipwrecked and is saved by a Wild, chase is one of the scenes of the picture. This and most of the other events will strike all as humorous. The cast includes Florence Lee, Madge Kirby, D. Morris and Walter Colye. On the whole, it is a good, solid production.

"When the Blind See." (Lubin. Two reels. Thur., Dec. 17.)—The "practical" son of a farmer inherits the farm and orders his studious younger brother to leave. He had never seen the city where he works his way through a medical school. Later, when his brother returns, a great eye specialist is called in to examine the boy. It is a touching story, and also serves its purpose of helping to give a new lease of life to the drama department of the motion picture. The story is inspired by the character of the young man Herbert and Arthur Ashley are the principals.

"Who's Who." (Lubin. Sat., Dec. 19.)—A blackface comedy in which a colorless doctor is made an object of ridicule. The story is similar to "Shall Curlew Ring tonight?" On the same reel with "Shall Curlew Ring to Night?"

"Shall Curlew Ring to Night?" (Lubin. Sat., Dec. 19.)—A touching Christmas story, well done. Every Christmas, a poor prospector steals Broncho Billy's horse in order to buy some toys for his expectant children. Broncho Billy leaves the city, the identity of the thief, and on Christmas day he comes to his cabin with a posse to hang him for the crime. On seeing his happy children and learning the motive behind the theft, each member of the posse contributes some money, and leaves without carrying out their original intention.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"Her Higher Ambition." (Foxtrot. Sat., Dec. 12.)—With the termination of this picture is supposed to depict a great sacrifice on the part of the heroine. It is, in fact, the story of what the sacrifice is, due to insufficient explanation. A young man goes on a vacation in the West, meets a girl who is laboring under the impression that she can sing. He knows she is not a singer, and insists upon going to the city and have her voice tried. She tries it, and is shown to be the daughter of a man who was dead. Fred Church and Edythe Sterling are in the principal roles.

"The Rural Demons." (L. O. C. Sun., Dec. 13.)—A picture that shows the manufacturing of automobile tires, which is most interesting but seems rather out of place and a bit too disposing of the subject. Billie Ritchie and Henry Lehrman are the lovers seeking the hand of Gertrude Selby, supposedly a dainty rural maid. Lehman has a small role in the picture, and out of which he furnishes a lot of laughter.

"The Mountain Traitor." (Eclair. Sun., Dec. 13.)—A spy drama of the West, concerning the life of a group of mounties, the thiefery of one of their number, and the outcome of his escapade with the happy scene of two lovers reunited. Photographically interesting, with a little room for improvement, and the theory is concise and well built. Altogether an excellent turn is made by Stanley Walpole and Irma Earle are the lovers.

"The Mill Stream." (Imp. Two reels. Mon., Dec. 14.)—This production is noticeable for its good artistry and artistic execution. Its scenes, which are laid in the country about an old mill. The young man of the picture, who is in love with a girl from a new friend, is accused of murdering him, when the old man he expects awaita for the return of his son. The picture is made in a man before she allows him to return. Elmer Rice is the director, and he draws on the sympathies of all and will not fail to make its mark.

"The Wayward Son." (Victor. Mon., Dec. 14.)—This picture provides an unusual opportunity for churchmanship. Martin Manley is in the rôle of a young man who, directed by H. C. Mathew, has been given a role of a great character. A short time ago, the old man examined his son, and the picture is made in a man before she allows him to return. Elmer Rice is the director, and he draws on the sympathies of all and will not fail to make its mark.

"Lizzie's Fortune." (Sterling. Mon., Dec. 14.)—Another picture that makes the wife of the French soldier killed in the European war, and the way in which her sorrow was turned to gladness. A young woman has married a rich man, although at the start he thought that he was merely helping to an unknown. In time she falls in love with the young lady. One is accepted, and then it is discovered that the man in the picture is the lawyer's fee. The accepted gentleman tries his best to help her, but she refuses to go away, and pursues him, even into the water. Louise Fazenda is the girl, and Max Asher plays the part of one of the lovers. Two reel is the length of the picture.

"Such a Mistake." (Crystal. Split reel. Tues., Dec. 15.)—The Crystal company seems to be interested in making melodrama, and this is another fine example of it. A young girl is proposed to by her cousin, but he is engaged to another. They both rush to their cousins, finally compromise, and find each other. On the same reel with "The Glass Pistol.

"The Glass Pistol." (Crystal. Split reel. Tues., Dec. 15.)—Slighty fancier than its mate, but equally well done. A man who in a duum-sense of the plot, the man goes to his city, but he cannot be sold for his own. He then becomes a glass pistol from two boys and proceeds to fight with his worthless partner, who is besought by the police. On the same reel with "Such a Mistake.

"The Boy Mayor." (Nestor. Tues. Dec. 15.)—This picture is another portrayal of the methods of the Mayor. The Municipal Organization of Portland, Ore., is under the control of a gang of criminals. A gang of thieves is captured through their efforts in the city. The cast are Ernest Evers, Carol Halloway, Stanley Walpole and Will Shearer.

"How Father Won Out." (Joker. Wed., Dec. 16.)—This is a story of a young man who, at first, is the husband of a young girl. But when the girl is deserted by her husband, he marries her. Ed. Boland as his rival. Shields' eccentricities, which are forever cropping up in the parts he plays, are well known. The picture is not well acted and will pass without creating a lot of laughter.

"The Fatal Hansom." (Sterling. Thurs., Dec. 17.)—A story of two lovers, and a man who engages his services as business, and his antagonism leads them into many a quaint adventure. The man, being an independent, is likely to go to the object of his heart the other's affections, and the other is perched slanting the driver's seat at one time, but at another, the other is just to go to the object of his heart the other's affections. This is not a picture sight, but the spectacle will strike many on the humorous side. The cast are F. Benner, Eugene Crofts, and Arthur Hurlbut are the principals.

"Gates of Paradise." (Imp. Thurs., Dec. 17.)—This picture affords a striking contrast in the performance of the same man, and the poor boy before the camera. A pretty store is presented full of the Christmas spirit, and although slighted it, will surely be enjoyed by all. Violet Mercereau, William Shay and William Welsh are the principals.

"Ambition." (Trex Two reels. Thurs., Dec. 17.)—A story of a man and his wife, and the ambition of the husband and the thrift of the wife. The whole theme is not by new means but is full of interest. The scenes in the theatre, behind the scenes, and on the stage are undeniably realistic. An artist, his wife, and a child, with the former's permission and returns to the stage, in which his wife is seen as an object of his wife's affection. It is not a picture sight, but the spectacle strikes many on the humorous side. All the principals end up struggling in the water in the final scene.

"Hearts of the Hills." (Victor. Three reels. Fri., Dec. 18.)—A Mary Fuller picture that demonstrates better average performance in the art of humor. Miss Fuller is Charles Ogle, who seems a little too old to play the lover. A band grabs her from the miner's son, and sells to a wild mountain girl whom his son loves, though he has no eye for the girl. The story is that of the jealousy of the man's sister, but when she meets her old friend all ends well.

"His Dog Gone Luck." (Nestor. Fri., Dec. 18.)—This piece is an unusual combination of the two types of humourous offering that contains no rough work.

"His Doctor's Orders." (Joker. Sat., Dec. 19.)—This comedy seems to have an unconventional conclusion, being a story of the two types. The picture is truly refreshing to witness. William Franey, William McRae and Louise Fazenda are the chief comedians, and all three appear at their minute best. According to the story, the husband is to be a part of a show, and the wife is to be a part of his life. The husband goes to sea, and the wife also decides to come. News is brought to the wife that her husband has gone to the bottom, so they pretend to be shipmates, and they are married. Then comes the startling surprise that the ship wasn't wrecked at all, and then mother-in-law and wife get busy.
MOTION PICTURE NEWS

December 19, 1914.

"The Christmas Spirit." (101 Bison. Two reels. Dec. 18, 1914.) One of the best short "30-30" comedies in recent months. The story is a very good one, and the acting is fine. The setting is a downtown Chicago saloon where a heart-broken young man leaves a note that makes the impression that he has killed his girl. The note is addressed to the social director of a prominent women's club and makes the director think the young man is a dangerous man. She sends the note to the detective, who is a member of the club. The detective, in the course of his investigation, discovers that the young man is a soldier who has just come home from the war. He is looking for his girl, who deserted him after he learned that his daughter was the sweetheart of the man who would be blamed for the murder. The detective re- leased from prison on the same day with his girl was his old regiment. The detective took away the man's picture and then worked after discovering that his act would not affect the other men's money, but in doing so was fatally wounded by a shot from the watchman. He dies in the woman's arms, and, with his dying breath, makes the statement that only love can overcome evil, and that his love will be greater in death than ever in life. Vivian Rich and William Garwood are featured. A strong picture.

"The Wild and Woolly West." (Princeton. Fri., Nov. 27.)—An Eastern farm hand reads tales of the West to his small boy. The Chicago mail order house goes to Colorado Springs to see the famous Kaffir, which is housed inside a hat box, and forwards it to himself with a letter from the farmer and a copy of "The Wild and Woolly West." On the train the boy finds his costume a ridiculous as it would have been in Boston. He is glad to have the job as he sees his mother given out. A considerable part of the film is taken up with scenic views in the Garden of the Gods.

Among the Mourners." (Keystone. Sat., Nov. 18.)—A good short comedy of the Kaffir's "bygones." This story concerns a man who pretends to be dead and the results which follow when he sees various mourners already seeking the band of his supposed widow.

"The Kaffir's Skull." (Reliance. Two reels. Sat., Nov. 28.)—An unusual sort of story, which has much of the gag work in it. A diamond miner sends an uncut diamond to the United States Embassy at port, which is placed inside of a hat box, and forwards it to himself with a letter, which a girl reads in a letter. On the arrival of the steamer the girl finds her uncle is not on board. With her sweetheart she makes an unsuccessful attempt to get the hat box from the express company, but has to be satisfied with the empty box. Not having any language. There the two oriental tobacconists have followed each other to the city, and the girls get the box, and after some more adventures, each avere of it, and the gem in each on which to start married life.

"A Denver Romance." (Thanhouser. Sun., Nov. 18.)—A short story of a Colorado romance. The man from the East, who is visiting her at her father's ranch. Then they go home, and the young lady is surprised by her mother when she discovers that the mayor has missed a meeting of pilots, gets her father's blessing. A long section of the picture is taken about the city of Denver. Mignon Anderson, John Lehnberg and Morris Foster make up the cast.

"The Sisters." (Majestic. Two reels. Sun., Nov. 29.)—The first appearance together of the sisters, Lillian and Dorothy Gish, who are seen as May and Carol, from whom the play is named. The story concerns an old, and especially when the difficult nature of their parts is considered. Elster Clifton and W. Lawrence are also effective. The young girls, also do some effective work. The younger sister, who is called May, is not only clever, but favors the attention of a young chap from the city. The older sister, who is called Carol when she meets her older sister and at once forgets Carol. The younger one is so overcome with jealousy that she even kicks the girl. Later she carries her country suitor. Both girls have babies at birth. In the last reel May's dies immediately, and the mother is in great danger of becoming insane with worry. If her husband induces the younger sister to join her but until her condition of the other mother allows her to be told of the truth. Carol does this, although it nearly breaks her heart to give up her baby even for a short time. The older sister learns the truth by accident, and the two girls屏去的他在30-30a (Continued)

NOTICE

Commencing on December 17th and continuing every Thursday thereafter, the regular licensed program will include a new one reel comedy of unusual merit.

Public demand for "funny pictures" is so overwhelming that one reel comedies have become a vital requisite to every daily program.

Exhibitors find it difficult—in many cases impossible—to secure consistently good comedies, and it is to meet precisely this condition that MinA Films have been devised.

They are the result of long, special study and practical test by one of the oldest and most successful manufacturers in the industry. MinA Films are recommended for your immediate consideration. Through all licensed exchanges and branches of the

MISS RUTH ROLAND
"THE FAMOUS KALEM GIRL"
Has Been Engaged by the Balboa Company

Because she is the best and most favorably known motion picture actress in the United States today—
She has scored big in dramas and bigger still in comedies—
But she is not wedded to one or the other. On the contrary—
She is a versatile young woman whose talents are as brilliant as her beauty—

With the Balboa Company she will have an opportunity to utilize her versatility to its fullest extent.
At the start she will appear in a number of remarkable dramas, impersonating roles that demand a combination of all the wonderful ability she has displayed during her past four years with the Kalem Company.
Miss Roland is a real star with a personality that stands out vividly on the screen—
A personality that commands and holds attention while it pleases and thrills her audiences.
She has cultivated the art of motion picture expression to a high point of perfection.
Her performances are unvaryingly strong and she has established herself in the esteem of exhibitors everywhere.
The Balboa Company knows that her name is magnetic—knows that those who release and play its productions will be gratified to learn that it has Ruth Roland—

And yet this was not the thought that influenced her engagement.
It is the ambition of the Balboa Company to make the best picture plays in the United States, and it is convinced that Miss Ruth Roland is a necessary element in the achievement of that worthy aim.

She was chosen because she represents the higher and more finished type of motion picture actress—because she is an exponent of the more refined school of dramatic expression as it relates to the science of cinematography.

The Balboa Company has faith in Miss Roland and is determined to furnish her with vehicles that will enable her to harmoniously blend her inherent powers over the insidiousities of amusement loving humanity.

She is lavishly endowed with rare gifts—beauty, grace, charm and intelligence.

A mind naturally bright has been carefully trained to meet the loftier requirements of her profession—

And under the direction of the Balboa Company her aspirations will be encouraged.

She will be given ample latitude in which to demonstrate the fact that, great as she is, it is possible for her to become greater.

"The Plumber." (Keystone. Thurs., Dec. 10.)—The humor of this picture is not of a rapi-erlike quality, and might jar aesthetic souls, but the fact remains that it is sidelong fun. The story concerns a plumber who comes to fix a leak in a water pipe, and in fixing it succeeds in filling the cellar with water, and then burning down the house. A perfect masterpiece of non-sense.

"In Wildman's Land." (Majestic Fri., Dec. 11.)—Whether this picture will strike the spectators as humorous or pathetic will depend entirely on their attitude. The grotesque actions of some imaginary cave dwellers as seen in the modern woman's dream are in a great sense true to life and then again humorous. In her dream these prehistoric people capture the woman's child and kill her husband. Her awakening is totally un-expected, as we did not see her fall asleep at any rate the picture is so far out of the ordi-inary that it will not fail to awaken interest and to create considerable comment.

"Percy the Milliner." (Royal. Sat., Dec. 12.)—This reel, featuring Louis Simeon, totally misses its intended mark as a comedy. There will be a few laughs toward the end when the dune of the picture is shot out on a balcony by the wife of the house, and is drenched with rain. The plot, however, is rather new, and the actions of the players quite meaningless.

"The Panther." (Bromello. Two reels. Wed., Dec. 16.)—Probably Walter Edwards is the most capable character actor of the day. He has played many roles and appears to ex-cellent advantage in all of them. In this picture he is befriended with the unpleasant part of a maliciously vile character. He has his mind set on procuring a certain girl as his wife, and treats her husband with unmerited cruelty. Justice is finally meted out to him by an Indian, a great friend of the father of the girl, whom the factor killed. Louise Glau is the girl and Frank Flagg is the Indian. The acting is exceptionally strong, repellent at some moments, but alto-gether most entertaining.

"A Political Feud." (Domino. Two reels. Thurs., Dec. 17.)—A story built on the familiar plot of a life-long rivalry between a poor boy and a rich one. Their trouble begins when they are children and continues through college and until the poor man defeats the other for the gov-ernorship of the state.

WARNER'S FEATURES

"Her Duplicate Husband." (Features Ideal. Three reels.)—This film was originally of greater length, and in its present state it bears the mark of cutting. The story is not very clear, due probably to this fact, and the sub-plots are slightly too long and complicated to be easily com-prehended. The central situation which, if handled in the correct manner, could have been made plain and devoid of any unnecessary complications. The photography throughout is good, the settings appropriate, and few exterior shots that appear are well chosen. Jean Brunt, an escaped convict, is made, in some miraculous manner, to appear as a court, who has previously died. He re-turns to the court's house, and, after straighten-ing out various troubles which he had no hand in causing, enters upon a peaceful life. Later his mother dies, and his old housekeeper tells him that she and no other knows that he is guilty of the crime for which Jean Brunt was imprisoned for, years. Brunt at the conclusion of this is in a quandary as to what he will do, but that night his mansion catches fire and he perishes in the flames.

"Pinned in the Wells." (Starlight.)—After warn-ing her little daughter and her playmates to keep away from an old well, the mother falls asleep and dreams. In her dream the children enact a melodrama which will be apt to cause admiration for the child players, but few laughs.

"Dr. Killem's Dope." (Premier.)—Although the theme of this reel is quite familiar, it could not have been made humorous if the director had developed it to a greater extent; as it is, the actions lag before the picture draws to a close. Dr. Killem brings some dope to a lady patient. The dope is guaranteed to cure any malady, Little sells the patient except that it smooths down an old noir's temper, and her suitor is ac-cepted.

"Her Birthday Present." (Premier.)—A fairly good dramatic number with Joe Franz, Fred Church and Edythe Stirling in the leading parts.

Joe accurses his rival of a murder which he did not commit, so that he is forced to flee. When Fred does not come home to Joe. Five years later, after Joe has become an habitual gambler, he plans to rob his own house. The same night Fred returns and attacks him. Joe is shot by the sheriff. "What might have been" if the other two had married is then shown.

"Two Smarties." (Superba.)—A flirtatious hus-band causes all the characters of this comedy to deceive each other. The couple is about the fun-niest character. Charlie De Forrest plays the leading part. The comedy moments that appear in this reel are not unusually great in number; those that do appear are of the rough variety.

"The Man in Skirts." (Superba.)—Charlie De Forrest appears as a tramp in this number, and uses the name of a bemocked husband whose place is being assumed by a friend who is in love with the man's wife. A few of the rough comedy moments may strike some as rather vulgar, although Charlie makes as much out of them as he can.

"The White Pirate." (Starlight.)—There are some humorous moments in this number which are unconventional and really funny. They pre- sent themselves when one gentleman is disporting himself at another's expense and apparently thinks it is a good thing, thinking that he is a haunted house. The plot, however, is rather slow and all in all the picture will afford good entertainment.

"The Chaser." (Luna. Split reel).—On the same reel with "His Neighbor's Pants." Two tramps conceive the idea of falling down in front of a bar-room and then calling for a drink to be revived. But they meet with little success and get soundly beaten up a couple of times. This will amuse.

"His Neighbor's Pants." (Luna. Split reel).—On the same reel with "The Chaser." A good comedy number, in which a clever but dog cautious all the trouble by bringing a pair of pants into his mistress' house. Her husband grows sus- picious, and pursues a person into a closet, think-ing that he has captured a man, but it turns out to be a mother-in-law, who, after a few rude words, treated refuses to leave her daughter any of her promised fortune.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS

"THE RESCUE OF THE STEFANSSON ARCTIC EXPEDITION" (Sunset Film—Eight Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

ALTHOUGH all of us have heard more or less about life in Alaska, and northeastern Siberia, very few of us have ever had the pleasure of visiting these countries and studying the habits of the natives. When these educational and interesting facts are cast upon the screen, combined with a story, or rather an event, which is practically sure to become a tragedy, the result is an educational and historic production of almost priceless worth.

As the title implies, the picture concerns the rescue party which went in search of the Stefansson exploring party, the leader of which has never been heard from since he set out to reach the North Pole in the early part of last summer. We are even furnished with scenes in which Stefansson, himself the central figure, scenes which cannot possibly pass without causing an unusually big impression, as it is now almost certain that the brave explorer is dead.

The rescue party sent out to search for the members of the fatal exploring party were accompanied by a camera man in the employ of the Sunset Film Company. He has secured remarkable pictures, concerning both the tragic occurrence and incidentally scenes in the far off countries which we seldom are fortunate enough to hear of.

That the camera man, F. L. Grauville, knew his business from A to Z is so evident as to warrant the heartiest praise and thanks for his excellently-attained efforts. The photography that marks his work is of an unequalled variety, and the film has been aptly tinted to obliterate the eye strain that would surely result if the snow had been left in its natural whiteness in all the scenes.

Some of the views obtained in the film ought to be described at length, but it is enough to say that they are par excellence. They can only be mentioned. Huge herds of Alaskan and Siberian deer have been caught by the camera; polar bears and comfortale appearing brains; herds, if they may be termed that, of huge walruses, which the camera has come upon with startling proximity; the harpooning and killing of whales and afterwards their dissection by the natives, besides hundreds of valuable skins of all varieties which will call forth cries of admiration from the feminine part of the audience, at least.

Besides these scenes, various types of Alaskan and Russian natives have been procured, posed in groups, for the most part. Throughout the picture some of the most beautiful scenes have been obtained, largely on the water. The cloud effect, long sought after by many a director, seems to be an easy thing to procure in the Far North as it is in evidence quite often.

In its class of pictures this one is truly one of the best. It is almost indescribable, and as is most always the case in scenic pictures, must be seen to be appreciated. If you are looking for an educational film, crammed full of the most entertaining and instructive scenes, combined with bits of the tragic story of the great Stefansson, these eight reels will suit the most fastidious, as well as please any audience.

TIME LIMIT EXTENDED ON WAR TAX PAYMENTS IN PITTSBURGH

THE time of paying the war tax in Pittsburgh was extended one day in order to give some of the exhibitors out of the city extra time to meet the requirements of the law.

Last Monday there was a crush of tax payers at the Federal building in Pittsburgh, and the clerks were not able to handle them fast enough. The office employees worked fast, but several hundred of the taxpayers appeared and tendered their money, and the result was that the office was so rushed that the clerks were not able to get the receipts made out in time to get through with the crowd.

It is said at the government building that many of the exhibitors failed to appear and pay their assessment, and they are now liable to a fine and imprisonment. The officers here are inclined to be lenient, and will make allowances in cases where it was impossible for the taxpayer to appear in the specified time.

All, however, have been told to appear and prepare for the worst as the law is plain regarding the fine and increase in the taxation for delinquents.

VITAGRAPH CO. OF AMERICA, BROOKLYN, N.Y.
Dan Mason in a New Kind of Edison Comedy

If Dan Mason had lived in the days when gallants staked their marital fortunes and their lives on being able to make the beautiful princess smile despite her solemn vow never to do so again, he would have had a whole collection of beautiful princesses, for he is one of the gifted few who never fail to get a laugh. He is a master of all things comic, his ludicrous facial expressions and the laughter-provoking gestures are irresistibly clever. Be it a straight comedy part or a grotesque, clownish figure, Mr. Mason projects his personality into it—and it is a success.

It is difficult to think of a comedian taking his part seriously, yet that is, in fact, Mr. Mason’s attitude toward his work. He makes a careful study of every part that he plays and determines exactly how the role is to be played. He experiments with his grease paints until he has found a make-up that suits his conception of the character and then he is the janitor, the clergyman, the henpecked husband, or whatever the part may be.

Dan Mason as the “WIDOWER” in “A DOUBLE ELOPEMENT”

The rapid action of this comedy, coupled with the splendid character impersonations throughout, gives it a charm all its own and will insure for it an enthusiastic reception.

Released December 2nd, 1914

Dan Mason as “UNCLE CRUSTY” in a play of the same name

In this excellent photoplay we see a crusty old man, annoyed by children, transformed into a liberal child-loving character. The situations are ludicrous, and the impersonation of the characters assumed capital.

To be Released in January, 1915

Hanlon Bros.' Great Feast of Fun and Fairyland Beauty—More Gorgeous Than Ever

Featuring George Hanlon, Jr., as the Clown

Released Saturday, December 19th through the General Film Co., in 5 parts

Fantasma, the most famous spectacle and the greatest moneymaker ever produced by the celebrated Hanlon Brothers, makes even a better fantasy in the film than on the stage where it has been popular for 30 years. George Hanlon, of the famed family of clown and pantomimists, appears in his original role of Pico, the drollest clown that was ever created. W. T. Carleton, the greatest Mephisto on the American stage, plays Zamaliel, prince of Darkness and Evil, while George Schrode and William Ruge, celebrated in these parts, make the Imps a devilish pair. The lovely Marie La Manna graces the Princess role with fairylike charm.

For over thirty years Fantasma has fascinated all from the child to the grandfather with its wonderful blending of amusement and beauty, romance and fairyfolk, visualized as only the fancy of youth can picture.

The originators of this famous spectacle, Hanlon Brothers, were known over two continents as the greatest inventors of stage tricks, effects and illusions which they always used with bewildering beauty of effect. The Edison Company has preserved all the charm and atmosphere of the original production, adding new and surprisingly beautiful photographic effects never possible on the stage. Funniness, mystery, weird experiences, mystifying illusions and an unending panorama of gorgeous scenes in Fairyland are pictured with brilliant photography remarkable for color treatment.

Prince Arthur enraptured with the lovely Princess Lena wins her as his betrothed. But such bliss is not long for him, for Zamaliel, monarch of the infernal regions, sets his covetous eye upon the fair princess. Then ensues a mighty battle between the Prince of Darkness and Fantasma, all powerful Queen of Good and Light, who watches ever over the lovers. The Princess, torn from her lover, is carried to the lower regions and then under the sea where weird and terrible trials befall her. The Prince is ever accompanied by the droll Pico in his wanderings in search for Lena and they undergo trials and wonderful experiences. The lovers, reunited, sail away at last on the Sea of Happiness—one of the most exquisite and original effects ever introduced into photography.

Fantasma, in thirty years, made ten millions gross. Book this greatest of features and cash in on its undying popularity and appeal.

Orrin Johnson Joins Rolfe Photoplay Forces

Well-Known Stage Actor Will Appear in "Satan Sanderson," Forthcoming Release on the Alco Program—Has Played 200 Roles

Orrin Johnson, who has just been engaged by the B. A. Rolfe Photo Plays, Inc., to play the lead in "Satan Sanderson," the forthcoming Alco release, began his career in the legitimate much earlier than the average actor and made his success in less time. He was born in Louis ville, Ky. He went on the stage with Effie Ellsler in 1887. In two months he was leading man. For three seasons he continued with Miss Ells ler as her chief male support.

In 1895 he was engaged by Charles Frohman for the juvenile part in "Men and Women." This was Charles Frohman's original stock company at Proctor's Twenty-third street theatre. The play ran for one year.

The next season, that of 1892-93, Mr. Johnson created the leading juvenile role in David Belasco's "The Girl I Left Behind Me," with practically the same company. This bill opened the Empire in 1893.

At the opening of the season 1900-1901 he joined Annie Russell in "The Royal Family." In 1901-1902 Mr. Johnson continued with Miss Russell, creating the Judge, in Clyde Fitch's "The Girl and the Judge." He also played the leading juvenile role in "Mice and Men" with Miss Russell.

The young actor was now prepared for stardom. In the latter part of 1904, at Daly's Theatre, he was starred with Margaret Illington in Onoto Watanna's "The Japanese Nightingale."

He was also starred in "Hearts Courageous." In the subsequent seasons engagements in the principal roles of "Ben Hur," "The Heart of Maryland" and "The Shepherd King" followed. The entire season of 1907-08 he played the lead in George Bradhurst's "The Man of the Hour." The following season he was featured with Marie Doro in "The Richest Girl."

Mr. Johnson's last work in New York was the creation of the lead in "The Marriage Game," and also that in "The Rule of Three." During his career to date he has played more than two hundred roles.

League Committee Meets in New York

Executive Body Created at Dayton Convention Last July Discuss Association Problems at Hotel McAlpin—Accepts Wiley Financial Report

The executive committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America met in conference at the Hotel McAlpin, New York City, December 8 and 9.

Marion S. Pearce, president of the League, presided ex-officio. Other members of the committee were: W. A. Cory, of San Francisco; Fulton Brylawski, of Washington, D. C.; Secretary Wilson, of Columbus, Ohio, and Peter Jepp, of Detroit, Mich.; President Pearce held the proxy of T. P. Finigan, of Dallas, Texas.

The committee accepted the financial report of George Wiley, managing director and chairman of the special convention committee appointed at Dayton, Ohio, last July. The McAlpin committee went over the report of Mr. Wiley Tuesday night and found that Mr. Wiley had prepared his report with the care of all items proving correct in every respect.

Another matter brought under consideration by the committee was the selection of a city for the next annual convention of the league. The choice lay between New York and San Francisco at a late hour of the conference on Tuesday afternoon. The final decision, it was thought, would be made before the adjournment of the committee.

A subject occupying a great deal of the attention of the members of the executive committee was amalgamation. Various plans were under advisement for devising ways and means for promoting widespread interest in the league movement and increasing membership throughout the country. The details of the methods meeting the approval of the conferring members at the New York session will be announced later.

The executive board nominated two members to fill vacancies created by the members of the league at the Ohio convention. They were Judge A. P. Tugwell, of Los Angeles, and Fulton Brylawski.

MAX FIGMAN IN "THE TRUTH WAGON," NEXT ALLIANCE RELEASE

Andrew J. Cobe, general manager of the Alliance Films Corp., was very much elated when he made the announcement that the next Masterpiece Film Co.'s release with Max Figman and Lolita Robertson in the leading parts would be "The Truth Wagon."

The picture was produced under the personal direction of Mr. Figman, who plays John Ross, the truth teller. The supporting company includes Al. W. Filson and H. A. Livingston. The scenario was adapted by Elliott J. Clawson from Hayden Talbot's play, while credit for the successful photographic results are due to Georges Rizard.

Object to Raising Building Funds on Sunday

Chattanooga Ministers Try to Oppose Plan, but Authorities Refuse to Revoke Licenses of Theatres Enlisted in Labor Temple Cause.

Special to Motion Picture News

Chattanooga, Tenn., Dec. 9.

THAT the Sunday opening of motion picture theatres at Chattanooga, Tenn., would draw capacity crowds and would result in many extra nickels going into the coffers of exhibitors is clearly shown from the fact that on a recent Sunday, when the theatres were allowed to open for the purpose of raising funds toward the erection of a labor temple, they were visited by more than ten thousand people.

Approximately 5,900 people visited the Theatro, Colonial, Alhambra and Crescent theatres of Howell Graham and the Picto picture house, managed by M. Mugnier. These five theatres are located in the heart of the city on the principal downtown street within two blocks of one another.

The Alcazar Theatre, also situated in the same section, drew a crowd of 1,400. In the neighborhood of 1,700 people attended the performances at the Royal in the southern part of the city, while the two East Ninth street houses estimated their attendance at 1,700.

Efforts were made by Chattanooga ministers to prevent the picture theatres opening on the Sunday in question and the board of city commissioners were criticized for allowing such a course of procedure. The chairman of a committee from the Chattanooga Baptist Pastors' Association appeared before the board and protested against allowing the theatres to open as had been planned.

He was told that the commissioners had granted permission to the exhibitors several weeks beforehand and as the labor union had gone to considerable expense preparing for the event the board's action could not be rescinded.

Los Angeles Membership Greatest in West

Eighty Per Cent of Exhibitors In and Near City in Branch—Organizer Cory Expects All Shortly to Become Members of the Local

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Dec. 7.

WITH fifty-three members in good standing, the Los Angeles League can now boast of the greatest organization of motion picture theatre owners of any city west of Chicago. The members represent fully eighty per cent of the theatres of Los Angeles and vicinity.

The campaign for membership, started upon the arrival of W. A. Cory, state secretary and organizer, of San Francisco, was closed the early part of last week, when Mr. Cory left for his home, making the trip by auto and seeing all picture theatre managers and owners along the inland route while on the way.

Local officers are not satisfied with eighty per cent, and expect to call on those not enlisted shortly, in an effort to raise the membership list to still nearer the 100 per cent mark. A get-together meeting will be held for the purpose of outlining the work of the league.

Prior to the visit of Mr. Cory there were two other organizations besides the League here, the Theatrical Managers' Association and the M. P. Managers' Mutual Protective Association. The three organizations are now combined in one, the League.

OLGA PETROVA BEGINS "THE TIGRESS"

Work recently began at the Fort Lee studios of Popular Plays and Players, Inc., on the Alco release of December 21, Olga Petrova in "The Tigress."

"The Tigress" is the first picture to be done in the new studios. The equipment is the best that money can buy and the technical experts are among the highest salaried men in the profession.

The cast which supports Madame Petrova is a large one. Many of the scenes are spectacular in the extreme. There are many exteriors on a large scale.

BUCK HUNTING A FEATURE OF EXCELSIOR FILM

The opening scenes in "In the Shadows" are laid in the Adirondack woods, and the hero, Gordon De Maine, and his chum, William A. Williams, are shown stalking a deer. After much patient preparation and endless watching the camera was successful in catching a beautiful buck, grazing peacefully, unconscious of the impending danger. Suddenly he rears his head, and just as he scents his foe the danger overtakes him, and he sinks lifeless, a tribute to the prowess of the hunter.

Not only does this picture show excellent marksmanship, but the beautiful photography of this scene is certainly remarkable, more especially when one appreciates the hours of patient waiting that were necessary to secure what is after all only an incident in a five-reel story that is crammed with stirring incidents.
SCRANTON LYCEUM TURNS TO FILMS

Scranton's leading theatre turned to pictures not so very many days ago. Paramount pictures are being offered to Scrantonians. The theatre opened to a capacity audience. H. B. Warner in "The Lost Paradise" was the opening attraction.

Arrangements for the Paramount features in Scranton were made by Hiram B. Danziger, general manager for the Ries circuit of theatres in Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio and West Virginia. The same program will be installed in all of the Ries theatres, but will be broken only when a first class company in an assured success can be booked for local presentation.

Mr. Danziger has arranged a novel advertising scheme for the Lyceum. He gained considerable publicity and the good will of the people of Scranton when he announced that the Lyceum would contribute a percentage of the first month's receipts to swell the fund for the Red Cross of Scranton. The money was turned over to the Century Club, December 10, which will in turn hand it over to Robert Hall, of the Scranton Trust Company, treasurer of the local Red Cross. That will give the Red Cross a percentage of the receipts of twenty-eight days, with four performances a day.

Joseph Sexton has been engaged to operate the mammoth organ that is in the Lyceum.

COLLEGES BUY PRINTS OF FOOTBALL GAME

The athletic picture, the Yale-Harvard Game, which was produced by the Colonial Motion Picture Corporation, is meeting with unprecedented success as a topical feature. Aside from the better motion picture theatres throughout the East and Middle West, B. F. Keith has booked this as a special production on his regular vaudeville programs in all of the Eastern cities.

One print has been booked solid for thirty days to the central branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, which will show it in its associations and various branches throughout the East. Another new channel open to the picture are the Yale and Harvard clubs, which are buying copies outright, to be shown at the various banquets and gatherings of the respective clubs.

NEW COMPANY WILL BRING OUT UNUSUAL FILMS

A company backed by some of the biggest business men of New Haven, Conn., and headed by George R. Kelsey, secretary and treasurer, Algonquin Amusement Company, New Haven, has recently been organized for the purpose of putting on the market high class films for release through ten offices, located throughout the country later.

According to the announcement of Robert M. Foot, who has become associated with the new concern as managing director, an entirely different line of motion pictures will be exploited.

The name of the company has not been decided upon, but it will be symbolic of the class of films produced in its studios. Plans are under way, which, when disclosed, will be a revelation to the film world, and will attract instant attention on account of the results expected from their practical scope.

Best Drama Unknown to Dramatic Critics

Not Many, But a Few, Allow Prejudice to Interfere With an Appreciation of Motion Pictures, Declares Carl H. Pierce, of Bosworth, Inc.

In many places throughout the country the dramatic critic of the daily newspaper even in such cities as Boston, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Columbus, have never heard of the better class of photoplays; they never attend the photoplay houses; they believe that nothing will ever supplant the "legitimate" drama, and they close their eyes to the tidal wave that is sweeping over the country known as the motion picture industry with its ever increasing quality-excellence in production.

Carl H. Pierce, special representative for Bosworth, Inc., who is making a tour of some of the principal exchanges of the country, substantiating this, says:

"I talked with one of the foremost dramatic critics of Boston last week. He said that he had never been to a photoplay in his life, had no idea what it is like, and had no interest to go. He may be said to be fairly typical of the dramatic editor of the average American newspaper.

"In Pittsburgh," continued Mr. Pierce, "I talked with three of the leading dramatic critics: Mr. Bahmer, of the Post; Mr. Bregg, of the Gazette-Times, and Mr. Rupp, of the Pittsburgh Dispatch. One of them said that he had never been to a motion picture show in his life; another said that he believed it would never supplant the legitimate drama, while the other said: 'Why should we interest ourselves in them?'

"To those who are in the midst of photoplay production and exhibition such remarks may sound as absurd as to have someone remark that he had heard of automobiles and aeroplanes, but why should he interest himself in them, the obvious answer being that one owes it to himself to be abreast of the times, especially if the community is looking to him for light upon the subject upon which he is supposed to be an authority.

"As is usually true of any industry—the general public learns about it first through its wideawake trade paper. One may trace the development of the motion picture industry to such active papers as Motion Picture News, because it is from such papers that the exhibitor gets his news, and hence—to a large extent—forms his impression of the films that are to be shown to his patrons.

"Would it not seem wise, however, for the dramatic critics—instead of being 'trailers'—to be 'leaders'? Does it seem reason in this day and age for men, supposed to be posted on things dramatic, to ignore an industry which bids fair to support more dramatists and more actors than have ever been supported before?

"Does it seem reasonable that this greatest opportunity in our civilization for enlightening and uplifting people should be passed by unnoticed by the men who should notice it? No, it does not. And it will probably remain for such papers as Motion Picture News to take up the burden of this educational program, thereby proving to their brethren of the daily press that in many respects the trade paper man is the more awake to news conditions."
FRESE, ORGANIZER OF INDUSTRIES EDUCATIONAL

After a study of the production of motion pictures by American and foreign manufacturers, W. M. Freese, has organized the Industries Educational Film Company, and will begin production at the new studio on the ninth and tenth floors and roof of the Knickerbocker Building, Los Angeles.

This company will manufacture motion pictures of all kinds, including educational, comedies, one and two-reel dramas, as well as multiple reel features. In addition to this the company will conduct a commercial studio, where sets may be leased for the day, week, month or year.

Every feature of the manufacturing business has been looked after by Mr. Freese, and he has so arranged and constructed this studio that the cost of production can be decreased from fifty to seventy-five per cent. At the same time the settings provided will tend to increase the quality of the pictures by reason of their being far superior to artificial sets.

For the past three months scores of workmen have been engaged in transforming the two upper floors and roof of the Knickerbocker Building, 843-45 South Olive street, into a studio, with permanent sets that give practically every desired effect without a change of anything except such props as chairs and tables.

Mr. Freese long ago came to the conclusion that it would be far less expensive to move the players and camera than the sets, and this studio is built upon this advanced plan. Without the change of decoration or moving any regular piece of furniture, it is possible to make interiors of the kitchen, dining room, parlor, library, chapel, conservatory, offices, theater stage, street scenes, English Inn, and scores of others.
FILM COMPANY, LAUNCHES NEW PRODUCING PLAN

One of the unique effects is that of the windows. There are twenty-eight in all, which provide three times that many effects. This is accomplished by each one being fitted with a prism glass window, one of leaded glass, and a third of the old English style. Besides these, each opening is fitted with reflectors and light-proof shutter.

The lighting is accomplished by means of skylights of prism glass and open traps, fitted with mirrors and mammoth reflectors. Every part of the studio is wired for artificial lighting and the latest improved electric lighting system has been installed.

The laboratory is located at the rear of the ninth floor. Here the drum system is in use, with ruby light windows, automatic door locking devices, and other new features.

There are offices for director, large dressing rooms for the stars, ten for stock people and 'extras' dressing rooms to accommodate two hundred, fitted with shower baths, hot and cold water, overhead reflecting mirrors, and every convenience to be found in the finest theater dressing rooms.
"THE MAN BEHIND THE DOOR"
(Broadway Star Features-Vitagraph—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS is a comedy that resembles the stage farce, the kind that still entertains and draws full houses. It is of the variety that has been thought unsuitable for the screen, simply because the large number of characters that appear and the complicated story in hand has presented too great difficulties for the director to overcome.

These same evils are not always overcome by stage directors, but here the story is perfectly plain, only slightly lengthy. It could and in all probability will be cut, and thus be presented in a more compact form, and will therefore be a better and more laughable comedy.

Wally Van has directed the picture, which was shot by Archibald Claverling Gunter. Mr. Van also plays the name part in his usually funny style. Nita Frazer is the professor's daughter, with whom De Laeby is in love and who he finally marries after they have quarreled and gone through irreligiously funny and startling experiences.

Others in the cast who contribute to the general fun in the picture are Harry Moore, Cissy Fitzgerald, Alber Roccardi, Charles Wellesley, William Shen and Louise Beaudet. All have been assigned many humorous opportunities, and all make good use of them.

Like the stage farce again, the picture's moral is "Have a good time while you're young," and for that matter, while you're old, too. Anyone who sees "The Man Behind the Door" will forget that he ever had a care.

MINA FILM FEATURES A COUNT

COUNT VERACE, a dapper little fellow, makes a great hit with the pretty girls at a summer hotel, especially with Dora. George, her sweetheart, is jealous and forbids her to see the count. But she flirts with the count by dropping her parasol for him to pick up. George, seeing them together, is more jealous than ever and hires a gang of thugs to revenge him on the count.

The gangsters drop the count from the roof of a tall building but he jumps up uninjured. They tie the count to a railroad track but he loosens the ropes and jumps onto the cowcatcher of the onrushing engine. The count is recaptured by the thugs after they change the tracks of the road and put the rear seat of an automobile. The automobile is sent over a precipice with a thrilling crash, but the count crawls out from under the wreckage uninjured, and goes back to the hotel. It is making love to Dora when George comes in, sees him and faints away, crushed by the count's triumph.

VALENCIA THEATRE, FRISCO, REOPENED

'Special to Motion Picture News'
San Francisco, Dec. 7.

The Valencia Theatre, located on Valencia Street, near Fourteenth, San Francisco, has been reopened as a picture house and every effort will be made to make the venture a success. Feature photoplays are to be shown at five and ten cents, with children under twelve years of age admitted free, when accompanied by parents. A full string orchestra has been installed and on Sundays a vaudeville performance is given.

The house opened under the new policy on November 20. This theatre was one of the first permanent houses to be erected following the great fire of 1906 and for a time was the home of a large stock company.

Later it was devoted to grand opera and has been opened as a moving picture house several times with indifferent success.

WANTED RESERVED AT PRICE OF ORDINARY SEAT

'Special to Motion Picture News'
Omaha, Neb., Dec. 8.

CAN a motion picture theatre, giving several shows a day, retain its reserved seats at a higher cost? The question is before the district court. A man started suit for $2,995 damages from Manager Frank Harris and the Empress theatre because he could not occupy a reserved seat for 10 cents, the price of general admission. The reserved seats sell for 20 cents. It is a sort of trial case. It started before a jury, but the parties took it from the jury and presented their arguments before a judge. The decision has not yet been made.

"SHOULD A WOMAN DIVORCE?"

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM RESSMAN ANDREWS

THE increase of divorce in the United States in the last few years has reached such an alarming extent that it has not only called forth the anathemas of the pulpit, but has become the subject of innumerable novels and dramas.

From time to time it has also been the theme of film plays. The latest photo drama to treat this incubus of modern American life is "Should a Woman Divorce?"

The Ivan Film Productions Company has handled in a masterly manner in this play some of the chief causes of divorce.

The play does not attempt to present any solution of the problem and is free from didactic treatment. It wisely gives—in excellent pictorial form—some of the evils responsible for the upheaval of domestic relations, and rests its case, as it were, before the jury—the public. The facts are there—take them, according to your temperament. If you are severe in your judgment of the actions of your fellow creatures the conclusions you will draw will have a wide divergence from your more lenient neighbors. A great deal is evident in this strong play on a vital national subject which will afford food for reflection for both types of thinkers.

The producers have by no means lost sight of the demand of the law of contrast in dramatic construction. The tense moments are relieved by judiciously placed scenes of lighter touch.

In this respect the producer, Ivan Abramson, deserves great credit. His episodes show a mastery of stage technique.

He has also demonstrated rare judgment in his selection of a cast capable of interpreting difficult roles.

NEW DISSOLVE FEATURE IN "MUTUAL GIRL"

In the coming numbers of the "Mutual Girl" release, made by the Reliance Motion Picture Company, a novel plan has been adopted wherein certain prominent people tell a story to Margaret, "Our Mutual Girl."

In the coming three or four releases, some of America's foremost illustrators and writers have agreed to furnish the Reliance with material for these releases, among them William Faversham, George Barr McCutcheon and May Wilbur Preston.

Instead of having a story or scenario, the Reliance Company have been making arrangements with America's foremost authors, illustrators, society people and financiers to tell Margaret a story which they consider one of the most interesting episodes of their lives.

The reel will open with Margaret meeting the individual in question, and will then fade into the story told, which will be enacted by a large stock company, especially engaged to fill the bill.

The first of this series is when Margaret meets William Faversham, one of America's foremost authors; and he tells her the story of "The Hawk," which is the name of the play he is now appearing in. George Barr McCutcheon has also met Miss Phillips, and has told her of a new plot which he intends working into a story.

PREPARES FOR "WARRENS OF VIRGINIA" PRODUCTION

THE Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company's studio in Hollywood, Calif., has suddenly assumed an extraordinarily martial aspect owing to the special preparations which are being made for the production there of Blanche Sweet's first Lasky-Belasco release, "Warrens of Virginia."

It will be remembered that this play, which was written by William C. De Mille, and produced under the management of David Belasco, is a story of the Civil War. As produced on the stage the war-like effects were necessarily restricted to a degree, but as seen on the screen this is positively to be the most elaborately realistic romance of war-times ever presented.

Guns, sabres, uniforms, all the equipment for infantry, cavalry and artillery, are being acquired almost by the car-load. Field artillery, siege guns, mortars, rapid fire guns and all other weapons which were extant at the time of the Civil War are literally heaped all over the premises. Extra players are being engaged by the hundred, and the photodrama is surely going to reproduce the boys of '63 on both sides of the conflict not only individually, but in masses and hosts of marching men.

General Cecil B. De Mille, who is only ordinarily director general, but now seems to have acquired a military meaning for his title is in command of the allied forces to pose on both sides of the battle line. He says it is a good thing that the encampment is not too near the border as the Lasky organization might fall under suspicion of violating neutrality.

BUSINESS REVIVAL THROUGHOUT TEXAS

TEXAS exhibitors and exchangers are experiencing a business resurrection.

The general improvement of financial conditions, starting with the first movements of the huge cotton crop, has reopened a great number of theatres, and increased exchange receipts accordingly. Statements from the south tell of an almost complete suspension of business among exhibitors in the smaller towns in the early fall. This was due to the scarcity of funds among planters, who had taxed their finances to the utmost to move the great harvest of cotton. This, in turn, reacted upon the public by creating a sort of enforced wave of strict economy.

August and September, and in some sections, October witnessed closed doors in many of the smaller theatres. Patronage fell at an alarming rate during the summer months. Gross proceeds dwindled to less than the cost of service. Exhibitors demanded cheaper rentals.

With the reawakening of business activity a decided change in the demands of theatre patrons has been experienced. Features are in greater demand than ever, it is said. Sensational pictures have a certain demand, but it has lessened considerably in preference to interest in productions of superior quality.

From certain sections come reports of instances where exhibitors are obtaining admission prices varying from ten cents to twenty cents and a quarter for features, with a dime for regular program entertainment.

ESSANAY PLAYERS GO TO NEW YORK FOR SCENES IN "GRAUSTARK"

MISS BEVERLY BAYNE, Helen Dunbar and Thomas Commerford left for New York, Saturday, December 5, where they joined Francis X. Bushman, who went to New York earlier in the week to take scenes in Essanay's "Graustark," by George Barr McCutcheon.

Francis X. Bushman will play the leading role, that of Grenfell Young, the young American who falls in love with a princess of "Graustark." Miss Bayne will be the Princess Yvonne, and Thomas Commerford and Miss Dunbar will take the parts of her uncle and aunt who are traveling through America with her.

The scene in which Lorry rushes to New York to get a last glimpse of his princess, whose rank he is entirely ignorant of, will be taken on the wharfs of the Atlantic liners to make it absolutely true to the story.

The players will then go to Washington, where all the scenes that took place there in the story will be reproduced with exactness to the text. Other scenes will be taken on the very line Lorry met the princess traveling from Denver to New York via Washington.

1915 SHOULD BE A YEAR OF HIGHER PRICES, SAYS PRESIDENT LAEMMLE

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, sent this greeting to the trade through Motion Picture News:

"My New Year's greeting to you is the hope that you may have the best year's business in your life. If you work with me you will have, too. I believe we are going to have much better times from now on. We have begun to put the picture business on a higher paying done wonders in raising the quality of scale. The Universal has gone forward in the program.

"My best wish for you is that you may receive the full benefit of that advance in quality by raising your own box office prices and your consequent standing in your community.

"An opportunity is open to you with the beginning of the new year. By all means grasp it. Your patrons know that you have a better show than you did on January 1, 1914. If they didn't they wouldn't be your patrons. They would be going to some other theatre. They knew, too, that they do not pay any more for this better show than they did on January 1, 1914.

"Your patrons are not more unreasonable than any other people. Remember that you are right if you present the matter to them in the proper light. Don't be afraid to do it. And 1915 will be the best year in your life."

CAPITAL EXHIBITORS SUBMIT GRACEFULLY TO WAR TAX

Special to Motion Picture News

THE day for the initial paying of the war tax on the motion picture theatres has come and gone and, so far as ascertained, there is no grumbling here. Generally speaking, this amusements is in quite a prosperous condition, with even a more favorable aspect.

Of course, one must realize that the exhibitor is in the time of the passing of the small, nickel theatre, and the one that is unattractive and unaccommodating. There are scattered theatres that are not doing a prosperous business, but bad management is usually responsible for this. The up-to-date manager reports favorable conditions financially.

President Herbst, of the local Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, offered assistance to exhibitors prior to the day of paying the war tax by reminding them of this assessment and thus saved some of the exhibitors the additional fifty percentage that failure would have caused.

JACK ROSE WILL MAKE HUMAN INTEREST PICTURES

JACK ROSE is enthusiastic over the prospects of the Humanology Film Producing Company, of which he is president. Already he has enrolled Elsa Wheeler Wilcox to contribute toward the output of his firm, which, he avers, will be distinctive and is to be distributed through the forty-two exchanges of the United Film Service (Warner's Features, Inc.).

Rose feels elated, too, that by his entrance into the motion picture business he establishes himself in a business that will vouchsafe his energies a wide latitude for legitimate activity. Since the crisis that came into his life with the hearing of the sensational Rosenthal case, he has eschewed former haunts and habits and has devoted his efforts toward aiding sociologists in solving the problems connected with that condition of life which is vaguely known as "the underworld."

"There, but for MOTION PICTURE NEWS, is where I would have been," said a western exhibitor not long ago, as he stopped to read the sheriff's notice on a competitor's theatre.

THE POLICE AND MR. BROWN

ONE of Nat. I. Brown's latest experiences is the trouble he encountered the other night with the police. Mr. Brown, one of the Alco Film Corporation's live wires, received telegraphic orders late in the evening, demanding at once 30,000 heralds for "Little Lord Fauntleroy" and "The Education of Mr. Pipp." There were few employees in the Alco building. With the aid of these, Mr. Brown made up three bundles of 10,000 heralds each and chartered a taxicab. He and his assistants hurled the bundles to the waiting taxi.

Knowing that a train would leave the Grand Central shortly which would enable good connections to be made all the way through to the coast, Mr. Brown was anxious to put the heralds aboard this train. As he was putting the last of the bundles in the taxicab, three uniformed policemen stepped up, and wanted to know what he was doing "taking stuff" out of the building at that time of night.

Mr. Brown tried to explain. The police assured him they knew that he and a "gang" were looting the building. Only upon the production of business cards, and the assistance of other persons in the building, did they finally permit Mr. Brown to hurry away on his errand. The heralds barely got the train.

WILL FILM KENTUCKY INDUSTRIES FOR FAIR

Special to Motion Picture News

Cincinnati, Dec. 9.

The International Film Products Company, of Dixmyth and Clifton avenue, this city, has bought the rights for making motion pictures of Kentucky industries, for exhibition at the Panama-Pacific Exposition next year.

The deal will make it possible to pay for the erection of the Kentucky State Building at the exposition, as the sum of $75,000 is mentioned as the settlement for the rights.

The negotiations were closed by Frank E. Aid, general manager of the local film concern, and Harry P. Meyers, treasurer of the Kentucky Exposition Committee.

QUADRUPLE EXPOSURE WORK IN ESSANAY FILM

A TRIPLE masked exposure marks an unusual feature in the new Essanay prize mystery play, "The Battle of Love," released December 19. In this scene Francis X. Bushman is discovered in his office at the telephone on one side, and Ruth Stonehouse, his sweetheart, at the phone on the other side. In the center is a picture of a street with the telephone wires. From these wires flash out the message on the screen, letter by letter. This requires a fourth exposure to work the letters into the central picture, making it practically a quadruple exposure to finish the picture.

AN ENGINEER COULD RUN SAFELY WITHOUT ANY SIGNALS—

sooner than an exhibitor could safely get along without full and complete release date charts.

That's why the exhibitors who take MOTION PICTURE NEWS wouldn't give it up.

Banishing The Five-Cent Jinx
By E. Christy Erk

When Harry Nichols Took the Garden Theatre in Hand, It Was Langushing Under the Tyranny of the Nickle—Nichols Found it a Nicklette and Raised it to a Theatre, and This Is How it was Done.

I NTRODUCING Harry Nichols, manager of the Garden theatre, Waterbury, Conn., and at the same time setting once and for all—at least so far as Waterbury is concerned—how far the manager of a theatre dedicated to the short drama will go when he has the backing of the rank and file of the city's motion picture lovers.

When Mr. Nichols took hold of the Garden last January it was in the "down and out" class. The theatre wasn't "pulling," even enough to keep its head above water.

But when he took charge it was the beginning of a new regime, a regime destined to be a lasting one. Indeed, the story of Mr. Nichols's success reads like a tale from the Arabian Nights, something little less than meteoric.

"How are you doing it?" he was asked, and then the facts came out—uncensored.

T HE early chapters are familiar to most exhibitors. It was a case of working up, getting the confidence of the people and then keeping it. Mr. Nichols secured a program of pictures which he thought the public would like.

And they did. That was the start, the starting of the first milestone on the road that leads to success. Soon he decided to give away gold pieces on "dull" afternoons.

In this way he patched up the weak spots. Next he admitted children under twelve years of age free to matinee performances when accompanied by adults. Score one for Mr. Nichols.

Keeping his eyes and ears open he soon discovered that his patrons were vitally interested in the program for the different days of the week.

"Why not have a 'Garden Weekly'?" "Good idea, I will." Patrons were surprised on coming into the theatre one day to have flashed on the screen the announcement that if they left their name and address at the box office, the Garden Weekly would be mailed to them every week.

A ND so matters went on until after a few weeks when Mr. Nichols decided to enter the "Steve Brody" class and take little chance. Here's what he did. Had his house—quite a pretentious one—rehears with tapestries, a white background set in with roses.

On the stage he had giant rose bushes and vines set up with electric American beauty roses. The same went for all over the house, even out in the lobby.

In other words he transferred his theatre into a garden of American beauty roses. All the vines, bushes and roses are fireproof and have been tested by the fire commissioner and acclaimed so.

He didn't just like his stage and began burning the midnight oil and tallow in an effort to ring in a "scoop." What was the result. To-day the Garden stage is the pride of the city.

M R. NICHOLS terms it a "futurist stage." On the right side is an Oriental living room and on the left a den. When the new lighting effect is switched on the scene presented beggars description. All the new stage setting are hand-painted, there being not a bit of stencil work.

Did his patrons appreciate what he was doing for them? They did. And how did they show their appreciation? Listen! They did it in the right way—by simply jamming the house every afternoon and evening.

At 8 p.m. it's an impossibility to gain access to the Garden, which seats 1,000. Playing to capacity? Well, it looks that way, doesn't it?

"I am making more money right now than I ever made before," is one of Mr. Nichols statements made only last week.

IN back of this mirroroid, Mr. Nichols has a transparent screen through which the audience views tableaux. A ship-wreck scene has been used the past week or so, and when the moving picture curtain ascends and the variegated lights are lit it means vociferous applause from the audience.

Mr. Nichols began by using the Famous Players program and booking his Sunday features from the open market. The daily program consisted of five feature reels with two or three single ones as "fillers."

The Garden showed the Famous Players program until October 3, when the Paramount program was put in operation, with the Lasky features, such as Dustin Farnum in "The Virginian," H. B. Warner in "Lost Paradise," etc.

Pretty goods to a city of 85,000 inhabitants. But Mr. Nichols is a big manager and to meet the added expense he is going to pull his house out of the "nicklette class."

T HE Garden is now under way as a ten and fifteen cent house. "I want to give the public something better than what they are getting," says Mr. Nichols, "and in order to do this I secured the Paramount program.

While it's a big expense by raising my prices I know I can meet it.

"Of course, it's going to drive away my five cent patrons, but it means that a better class is coming in. My theatre is altogether too nice to beclassed with the five cent houses. I am going to put on new a three piece orchestra consisting of violin, piano and cello.

"Tonight now I am sending out 5,000 pamphlets to my clientele telling of the new change in program and increase in prices.

"I plan to run only one show an evening when I start the Paramount, although I may be obliged to run two of the reels a second time for the tardy ones.

I PROPOSE to increase my force of girl ushers by two more, making four in all. Pretty good plan, don't you think so?"

Mr. Nichols has got the public writing to the newspapers about his house. The following from a recent issue of the Waterbury Sunday Republican is self explanatory:

Sir:—The manager of the Garden theatre is to be congratulated. I thought he would be the first to show the much desired Mary Pickford productions as well as the other first-class pictures he is showing lately. This is not a new scheme for advertising, but the well deserved praise of

A SATISFIED GARDENER.

This manager put personal ambition to the rear and his house to the front, and then reaped the harvest when the crop ripened.

Director Handled Recruits Like a General

T. Hayes Hunter of the Colonial Had His Work Cut Out for Him Commanding Seven Hundred "Soldiers" in the Parker Picture

G REAT care was taken and no end of trouble was caused Director T. Hayes Hunter, of the Colonial Motion Picture Company, in the production of a few incidental battle scenes in its feature, "The Seats of the Mighty," founded on Sir Gilbert Parker's novel of that name.

That the scenes were simply incidental, and that few of the important characters appeared in them, only goes to show what great trouble producers will go to in order to make their pictures complete and realistic.

Mr. Hamilton has had many years of experience as director, both in stage and in motion picture productions, and if the task had been in the hands of a beginner, there would have been mutiny at Edgewater, N. J., where the scenes were taken, before the day's end.

As it was, Mr. Hamilton handled the six or seven hundred raw recruits like a general.

TIMELY WORDS

The announcement of the Alliance Program was somewhat of a surprise to the trade in general.

Not so, however, to those who knew the many months of patient labor spent in crystallizing the scheme and in building the machinery of the gigantic organization.

The wheels have been turning since the 12th day of October, increasing in velocity and speed, until today the Alliance stands forth a tower of strength, and is growing stronger every day.

The advertising of the Alliance has been honest. No false promises have been made. No wild statements of financial backing have been disseminated. What difference does it make to the exhibitor if plain Jim Smith or a high sounding financial name is behind a company? The exhibitor's only interest is the picture on the screen, and the sole aim of the Alliance Films Corporation is to place on its program the best feature films that can be had, and it has done so.

The Alliance Films Corporation is not hampered or controlled by any manufacturing company. It reserves the right to buy film on the screen, and it sets the standard for its film productions.

This plan has the complete approval of such manufacturers as are sincere in their determination to produce good film and really put the money into them.

The quality of the productions will increase steadily. It must not be forgotten that the Alliance Program was launched in the midst of certain conditions existing in the trade, and that it has steadily pulled away from these conditions. It has accomplished wonders in a very short time, and in the near future will stand apart and alone,—and unquestionably the best program in the world.

Future announcements will show that the biggest and best things in filmdom are being done in the Alliance ranks, and that the exhibitor handling the Alliance Program will have reason to congratulate himself.

A. J. COBE, General Manager.

"THE SERUM OF REASON"
(Leading Players—Warner’s—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY H. S. FULD

A RATHER interesting offering, in that, while the plot might seem to some rather farfetched, it holds the interest of the spectator throughout. The cast in this release is one of exceptionally good choosing and though there are only four principals there is a number of minor roles well taken care of.

It seems that special attention must have been given to the acting of this story by the director, and the result is a smoothness and celerity that make the scenes in this production more “real” than the average.

More than the usual attention would also seem to have been given to the exteriors, on board the steamer and on the ground of the laboratory; and the interiors, especially the close-ups, are wonderful examples of good clear photography.

Doctor Landay (Raymond Fabre) in a laboratory discovers a new serum which when used right by any physician, is a preventive of madness. The secret of his discovery is known to his two assistants, both of whom are in love with the doctor’s daughter Jennie (Renee Sylvaire).

The one, Jude (Henri Guet), plots to discredit the other, Frank Ferndale (G. Tramont), in the eyes of the doctor and his daughter, by disclosing the secret to a newspaper in a communication signed with the other’s name. The plot succeeds and the discredited one leaves for Africa.

Jude succeeds after numerous efforts in incarcerating Jennie and her father in a sanitarium, while he proceeds to enjoy his ill gotten gains, and the father and daughter soon go insane.

Jennie’s maid succeeds in getting word to Frank in Africa, and he hurries back. By contriving to gain admittance to the sanitarium by impersonating a nurse, the maid is enabled to get access to both the imprisoned ones. Frank, by a cleverly executed night raid on the laboratory, secures the serum and gives Jennie and her father a dose. Both recover their reason, and Jude, discovering that his duplicity is known, goes mad himself and is taken to the same asylum the two so recently left.

Everything is cleared up to the satisfaction of everyone and Frank marries Jennie. A good offering and is bound to please.

“LITTLE GIRL THAT HE FORGOT” FOR STATE RIGHTS

The coming release of the Cosmos Feature Film Corporation, featuring Beulah Foytner in her own play “The Little Girl That He Forgot,” in five parts, will be marketed as a state right proposition. Arthur H. Jacobs, vice-president of the above mentioned concern, left for Chicago on December 4, and from latest advices received, the disposal of prints is going on rapidly.

“The Little Girl That He Forgot” is a tale of intense heart interest, full of thrills, not spectacular, but of the human order. The acting is most capable, the photography excellent, and from a scenic standpoint the production is beautiful. There is little doubt that the value of a feature of this order will be much appreciated by the masses.

Any story that is true to life and that is well depicted generally meets with success when screened. Joseph A. Golden, who directed the film version of “The Little Girl That He Forgot” needs no introduction; his past performances speak for themselves. Those that have seen “The Little Girl That He Forgot” predict for it great success.

850 CAPACITY THEATRE FOR GEORGIA TOWN

STORY OF A NEW THEATRE

Atlanta, Ga. Dec. 9.

COLUMBUS, Georgia, is to have by the middle of January a new theatre which, it is said, will be the most splendidly equipped in the city. Roy E. Martin and H. L. Wood have just closed a deal by which Mr. Martin has leased the property at 1131 and 1133 Broad street for ten years. He announces that he will erect there one of the largest motion picture houses in the Southeastern part of Georgia.

Mr. Martin plans to have plenty of exhaust fans, rest rooms and various comforts, and states that the ceiling will be high and the rows of seats 37 inches apart. The theatre will have a balcony that will seat 200 and an auditorium with a seating capacity of 650. Paramount pictures will be shown in the new theatre, according to Mr. Martin.

MOTIOGRAPH

Projectors are years in advance of the many motion picture machines. The inside shutters will enable you to get a brighter picture at twenty amperes than other machines at thirty amperes. Did you ever stop to think what you will save in twelve months by using less current? It will be more than enough to buy a new motion picture machine—and this is not all. Think of the steel bushings, the sprockets, steel star and cam, hardened and ground, which will insure accuracy and rock steady pictures, and besides this a very wonderful saving in repair parts. This is not a mere statement but facts that have been proven. The Motiograph has been tried year after year, and every user will tell you of its superior projections and wonderful wearing qualities. So if you want a machine that will give long life and small upkeep, why not buy a Motiograph.

OLD FILMS MADE NEW BY A SPECIAL PROCESS

Good Will of a Theatre, a Vital Quality Depending on the Pictures More Than Anything Else, Can Be Maintained Only Through a Proper Supervision of the Service—Celluloid, Affected by Fluctuations of Temperature and Other Causes, Loses Transparency

The good will asset of a moving picture theatre, or, in other words, the property created in establishing good will for such a theatre is purely psychological. The good will consists solely of the mental attitude toward the theatre which is found in the minds of the general public from which the patrons of the theatre come. The good will takes the form of, or tendency, or inclination to patronize the theatre and a predisposition to derive pleasure and satisfaction from the patronage.

Good will for a motion picture theatre manifests itself in the favoring attitude of the public toward the theatre. People who have the favoring attitude toward a theatre are less critical of its service and are more easily satisfied with the films which are shown. People who are animated by good will are looking for satisfaction. They are in a state of expectant attention which leads them to overlook defects and to see and magnify merits.

The good will created for a theater grows from the pleasure and satisfaction which are regularly experienced by those who view the pictures shown there. One who uniformly experiences pleasure and satisfaction in viewing the films exhibited in a certain theatre becomes favorably disposed toward that theatre. When such a person desires to go to a picture show, he will make it a point to go to the place which his past experience has shown him to have regularly a satisfactory film service.

Attractive exterior and interior finishing, comfortable seating, lighting and heating, generous ventilation, cleanliness and courteous and efficient ushers contribute largely to the satisfaction of the patrons, but without good film service they are like the play of Hamlet with Hamlet left out. Films which give pleasure and satisfaction are the most important factor in making a regular patron out of the casual visitor. The chief endeavor of the exhibitor who wishes to create good will must be to secure the best quality of film service.

Good Film Service Essential to Patronage

The service of the film exchange which supplies the theatre creates good will for the theatre when the films it furnishes give such pleasure to the spectator that he feels inclined to visit the theatre again. Such a satisfied visitor becomes an advertising agent, as by his conversation he influences others to visit the theatre.

Good will for the film service rendered by the exchange will crystalize clearly and definitely in the mind of the man who manages the motion picture theatre, as experience shows him that the films furnished by the exchange please his patrons and to increase their number.

The manager of a motion picture theatre will naturally become a regular patron of an exchange that regularly furnishes him films of such quality that they attract a desirable class of people to become regular patrons of his theatre.

Good will must be continually renewed to keep it alive. When an exchange fails to give film service which satisfies the patrons of the theatre, it creates ill will for the theatre. Unsatisfactory service is a positive injury to the business and will cost too dearly, no matter how low the price. Whether an exchange service is creating ill will or good will for the theatres which use its films depends largely on the condition of the films it furnishes.

The wise exhibitor is looking out for a film service of such excellent quality that his patrons will leave the theatre cheered and invigorated. When he has shown good judgment in selecting which should please his patrons, it is very annoying for the exhibitor to find that his films are in such bad condition that they fail to give satisfaction.

The greatest bane of the film service is the tendency of films to become streaked and blurred with advancing age. The blotched and "rainy" appearance which a film takes on after it has been run a few times causes annoying eye strain to the patrons of the theatre. One leaves with a feeling of ill will and disgust for a place where he has been imposed upon with a film which is noticeably in bad condition. The desire to prevent such ill will and to gain and hold the good will of their patrons is responsible for the "age craze" among the exhibitors, and for their demand for films which have just been released.

The Causes of Bad Film Conditions

A film consists of a strip of celluloid which has been treated with an emulsion of gelatin containing photographic chemicals. The exposure of the film to heat and light while it is being exhibited causes changes to take place in both the celluloid and the gelatin coating. The celluloid loses some of its transparency and becomes dry and brittle, so that it breaks easily. The moisture driven from the gelatin coating by the heat causes the film to shrink and curl, or warp, or buckle. A film in this condition produces unsatisfactory pictures and wears out rapidly.

When running a film the first time the gelatin coating of the film may adhere to the tension of the projecting machine and gather on it in small pointed masses. The pin-like points of these masses of gelatin adhering to the tension spring tend to cut the film and weaken the edge containing the sprocket holes. Insufficient oiling will cause the idlers to stick. In that case the gelatin adheres to the idlers and scratches the film in the center. Such scratches mar the beauty of the pictures.

A film "sweats" as the result of exposure to heat and to changing atmospheric conditions. This so-called "sweat" causes fine particles of carbon from the electric arc and particles of atmospheric dust to adhere to the film. The accumulation on the film of sweat and of opaque particles of dirt obstructs the transmission of light through the film. The loss of transparency is distributed irregularly over the film and gives it the blurred or blotchy appearance known as oil spots, or rain streaks. One who looks at the pictures produced by a film in such a condition finds it difficult to distinguish the various features and experiences a painful eye strain.

The dirt adhering to the film obstructs the transmitting light. A small opaque spot will be magnified many thousand times in the picture. A little dirt may cause very objectionable blurring. But this is not all. The sharp particles of dirt scratch and corrode the film as it is being worn and rewound. The adhering dirt thus causes a rapid deterioration of the film.

It must be evident to every film exchange man and every exhibitor of motion pictures that any process which will prevent or remove these causes of bad condition in films will prove of great value to the motion picture business.

Operating a Projection Machine Scientifically

THE success of the Strand, New York, has been justly earned by the close attention given to the several factors making up the excellent performance seen at that theatre. An important part of the supervision is good projection. Naturally, out-of-town exhibitors are much concerned in the high reputation this theatre has earned for itself, and want to know of some of the things that may be copied to assist them in making a success to their own theatres.

These visiting New York City come directly to the Strand, and the operating room is one branch holding special interest to them; more so for the operators. For the benefit of those operators that cannot avail themselves of a visit, this article is written. Here we are going to see how good projection is obtained at the Strand.

Permission was given to visit the operating room by S. L. Rothapfel, managing director. His stage door attendant, wearing a neat gray and black uniform, led the way from this entrance, back on the large stage, across to the passageway behind the proscenium boxes. Then up the aisle and stairways to the operating room, located at the top and back of the immense balcony. This trip—and it was a trip indeed—impressed one with the "bigness" of this theatre building. More so than from entering on Broadway or the main lobby.

Small Projection Booth

Unfortunately, the architect did not design the operating room along the lines of "largeness" given to the rest of the building. It is the only small thing to be seen. It can be said in defense to this weak spot that the original idea was not to feature motion pictures. These were given as a forerunner to the regular theatricals to be started at the commencement of the winter season.

When the picture machine equipment arrived, some alterations were necessary to obtain sufficient head-room. All the more praise is to be given the operating force "delivering the goods" working in so limited a space within the operating room.

This booth is constructed of iron and concrete and is a part of the regular building. A vertical iron ladder fixed to the side wall forms the means of entrance to it. Entrance is first had to the rewinding room separated by a solid wall from the operating room. The floor space of this room is 16 feet by 9 feet, and a slanting roof of an average height of 10 feet, in the center of which is the ventilating outlet.

The ventilation is augmented in summer by an exhaust fan installed in this outlet. Also, the heat from within the lamp houses are led to this vent through a small diameter stovepipe. There is a large window located in the back wall, and this gives ample light during the day. This window also assists in good ventilation and in keeping the room temperature down in hot weather.

The projection is in charge of capable men who are thinking always of good projection, and endeavoring to do just one better than their brother operators are doing. They realize there are things to be learned, and exchange ideas freely on points of good projection. Lester W. Bowen is chief operator. His lieutenants are Jack Kieley and Walter Pichert. Their license cards to operate machines are neatly framed under a glass cover, to protect them from soiling, and hang on a side wall.

The operating room equipment consists of two motor driven Simplex projectors having the new type large lamp houses. These machines are rigidly secured to the floor by means of bolts in the base of the pedestal. All the iron of the machines is electrically grounded to earth through a ground wire. This is required in New York in all booths having iron in its construction.

Use Two Simplex Machines

A very ingenious device is used on these machines termed "An automatic dowser." With this device the projection is taken from one machine to the other without any interruption, the picture dissolving on the screen. The film reels have a capacity of 2,000 feet and 3-inch diameter hubs. Continuous projection can be maintained for any length of time. It is not necessary to announce part one or part two, etc., to photoplays in this theatre. The complete play is projected without interruption.

Another very good practice followed is to frame all films before projecting. The very objectionable view of two parts of pictures being seen by the audience while the operator is adjusting the framing is thus avoided. Also, it's a wise thing to start motor-driven outfits with the usual cranking handle. This assures the machine starting immediately and prevents the belts slipping or stalling the motor. An iron box hung at a convenient place on the machine stand is used to put waste carbon stubs in until these are cooled down. A large wall-type clock, an intercommunicating telephone with the stage, musicians and manager, and a special call bell from the organ, used at rehearsals to stop projection while appropriate music is decided on, shows that conveniences have not been spared. A tool rack mounted on the wall is within reach of the operators and is liberally provided with tools.

Opera Glasses for Detection of Flaws

To detect enemies of good projection, use is made of a pair of field glasses. It is to be remembered the screen in this theatre is 167 feet distant from the projectors. Any blurring from want of adjustment to the objective lens, or other defects in the pictures, can easily be seen through these field glasses by the operators and correction made without detection by the audience.

It all goes to show that GOOD PROJECTION means to give a picture to the audience without any indications of the workings of the machines, operators, or view back of the scenes, as it might be said. The audience sees a picture quietly and artistically appear on the screen and stay there from start to finish, with no indications of how it is being done. This constitutes GOOD PROJECTION.

Two very essential aids to the operator in giving good work is to have motor-driven machines and automatic feeding for the carbons. The operator can then give his attention to the smaller things necessary to his work. It has been expressed as having a one-handed man in the operating room when the machines are hand-operated only. It also compels this one-handed operator to remain in one position—a stationary post, to use a police term.

The Strand has both of these aids installed in the operating room. Sufficient light for the 16-foot x 19-foot gold fibre screen located back on the stage and reflecting a good picture to all parts of the house, seating 3,500 people, is had by using 70 to 80 amperes at 110 volts d. c., reduced by proper resistance. With this high current Bio carbons (cored) of 7/4-inch diameter for the positive (upper), and ¾-inch lower, set with the positive a little in advance of the negative, have been found to give good results.

Simple Eye Protection Device

For protection to the eyes a simple device, made of thin iron, is placed or hung so as to obstruct the rays reflected back from the cooling plate. The metal is bent at a right angle, forming a shield to the light at the top and side toward the operator. When it is necessary to inspect the arc, or position of the light cone on the cooling plate, further protection to the eyes is had by wearing spectacles with smoked or black glass lenses. These glasses are also used when removing any accumulation of dust, film particles or obstructions held in the picture opening.

A strong and ingenious device is used here for removing these obstructions. A glass medicine dropper with a bent nozzle having a rubber tube attached about 8 inches long, and a rubber bulb of good size, is placed at the other end of the tube, forms a very efficient blower for this work. It has also the great advantage of not showing in the picture while being used.

There is a switchboard on the film, with the necessary knife blade switches, link fuses, meters and indicating ground lights. The lamp houses are insulated from the balance of the iron work of the projector and a ground wire is attached separately to the lamp houses to the indicating lights on the switchboard. Any grounding of the wiring to or within the lamp houses are immediately shown by one of these lamps burning brightly.

Optical System in Use

The optical system used on these projectors consists of the standard ¾-inch diameter plano-convex condenser lenses, each of 7½-inch focus, mounted with the curved surfaces towards each other in the condenser cells. The objective lens is an 8-inch focus Gundlach (No. 2), mounted with a rack and pinion adjusting screw. The lenses are cleaned twice a day.

The film rewinding device is motor-driven. A measuring attachment, a film patching device and a piece of plate glass inlaid in the table top with a lamp bulb underneath, are all aids in quickly putting films in order to again project in the machines. A Mortimer film cleaner is used often to keep the films in condition.

Any minor defects seen on the screen or any unusual noise in passing through the projectors are recorded and examined upon rewinding. An Interlock from film breakage is unknown in this house, from the constant watching of the condition of the films.

Saturday mornings are used for rehearsals for the next week's performance of film subjects and appropriate music. Close attention is paid to these two things. Any special films submitted to be shown in this house can be projected on a smaller scale in the office of the managing director, where a projecting outfit is installed for this use.

A good projecting machine, a capable operator, motor drive for the projector and automatic feeding of the carbons, then a good screen are essentials in obtaining GOOD PROJECTION.

Automatic Electric Economizer Means Better Pictures

A DEMONSTRATION was recently given of the a. c. to d. c. economizer and excellent results were shown. This outfit consists of an induction motor of about 5 H. p. directly connected to a specially wound d. c. generator of about 4 K. w. capacity. Both are rigidly mounted on an iron base frame. The flexible coupling may be used also as a pulley drive to the generator in case of a shutdown to the outside service, provided, of course, a small gas engine is installed for these emergencies.

The field windings are so constructed that when one arc only is in operation it is automatically regulated at the present moment, and to regulate the current strength. The arc is transferred from one machine to the other without any touching of the generator or switches.

The act of striking a new arc in the machine coming on, extinguishes the arc in the machine left burning. A dissolving effect of the two pictures is thus produced on the screen. Should the two carbons become "frozen" or held together, there is no overload to the generator and no danger of burning out the armature.

the operator, two arcs can be arranged to burn at the same time from this same generator.

The induction motor can be had for all frequencies, single, two-phase, three-phase and all voltages from 110 up to 600 volts circuits. Polyelectric, low frequency and high voltage circuits are to be preferred for the advantage of lower first cost and a possible smaller sized motor.

Loss of Power Not Forty Per Cent

The efficiency of the outfit is claimed at 60 per cent, and this is a fair supposition. But the loss of power is not 40 per cent, as this statement shows. The true basis of comparisons shows a gain above 40 per cent, as can be shown in the following computation.

When the a. c. power is used directly for the arc light a suitable resistance is necessary to regulate the strength of current to about 40 amperes. The line voltage being 110, the meter will register 110 x 40, or 4.4 k. w.

When an economizer of this type is installed the current being d. c. only about 25 amperes are necessary to obtain an equal, or better, light. No fixed resistor is necessary and the loss in heat from the resistance wire is saved. The power now used in the arc light is 25 x 60, or 1.5 k. w.

Adding to this the lost power or the efficiency of this outfit, namely, 1.5 divided by 60, gives 2.5 k. w., as expended within the induction motor to drive the d. c. generator, the motor will now only register this smaller consumption of power, which is exactly 57 per cent, or say, one-half (43 per cent) exactly of your monthly power bill which is saved by installing this type of an economizer.

Motor-generator outfits are not considered very efficient power transformers as the claim of 60 per cent. shows that nearly one-half of the power is lost. But when it is used with a particular form of field winding and the resistor can be omitted, then there is a saving in power that would otherwise be wasted in the heat from the resistor.

Still further gain is then had by the change to direct current, which gives a better light with less strength of current. And still further, a quiet arc light is obtained.

Improved Appearance of Pictures

The operator will be more at ease from working in an operating room comparatively quiet: a better quality of light is also projected with improved appearance of the pictures, and the operating room temperature is cooler from the lack of radiating heat in a resistor.

Exhibitors will aid their operators in giving good projection by investigating this matter and having this figuring of the saving to be obtained verified. Then invest in a a. c. to d. c. economizer of the type shown in the picture. The high first cost of the outfit will be saved in only a few months' time. The days of static economizers are numbered, except for emergency use.

Low Price Motor for Either A. C. or D. C.

A SPECIAL motor has been put on the market for operating motion picture machines which is of very moderate price and can be mounted by the operator in a few minutes. The motor is made for either alternating or direct current, whichever is accessible, and is provided with a speed controlling lever giving a wide speed range, and is furnished with a grooved pulley for a round belt. The motor is intended to attach to the ordinary lamp socket or receptacle and is manufactured by the Fidelity Electric Company, of Lancaster, Pa, the manufacturers of the well-known Fidelity line of electric fans.

Flowers as a Basis of Prosperity

HOW many exhibitors realize that details in decoration count? A man pays big money to an architect for plans. The house is finished and architecturally it is perfect, but very often there is that something which is lacking which draws the crowd. The general finish may be cold; there is not that about its "atmosphere" which gives it warmth. In other words, "it does not get across."

One of the methods employed by many progressive theatre owners to overcome this condition is the use of floral decorations. There is not a nature which is not appealed to by flowers and plant life in general. There is something about it which attracts.

The redecoration of the Melba Theatre of Detroit tells the story. This house, although one of the best appointed in the city, recently called into consultation the Schroeder Art Flower Manufacturing Company to see what could be done.

A handbill has been sent out broadcast, together with local newspaper announcements and other means of publicity.

Artistic Decorations Necessary

The result on the public is not surprising and has only gone to show that artistic decorations which lend warmth and atmosphere help materially.

The house is now decorated with a special designed garland, the foliage in a light green to harmonize with the wall color. These garlands are draped from the wall to the house chandeliers, being studded with a light shade of pink Clematis flower.

On the walls are a series of baskets which cut the bareness for the wall. To these are attached large branches of foliage to make the baskets appear more massive.

At the front and around the screen are twenty palm trees forming a half circle so as to hide the orchestra and the sides of the screen. Around the entire screen are massed flowers and foliage, doing away with the old idea of the simple frame that is used in most picture theatres.

A window box filled with flowers and vines extends around the entire lobby. In the box office there is a large plant with electric roses which attracts from the outside.

The decorative treatment of this house was so inexpensive and the results, as a patron diner, so pleasing that a contract has been signed whereby it is to be redecorated every three months.

The method employed by the Schroeder company in filling orders out of their immediate vicinity is to have the theatre owner send photographs and detailed description of the interior of the house, from which the company draws up designs in color which are submitted.

Fireproof Material Used

All the garments used by the floral decorating companies are well fire-proofed so that they conform in every way to the strictest fire regulations and can be installed without fear.

At the present time Mr. Schroeder is making a special play on a novelty for the ticket booth in the form of a holly wreath with its red berries and ornamented with red Poinsettia flowers. This is studded with miniature electric light bulbs giving a very striking effect, which will immediately attract the attention of passers-by. This may be attached to any electric light plug.

There are other companies scattered about the country in various places who are carrying on this same line of decorating work, of whom Frank Netchert and the General Flower Decorating Company of New York are two.

St. Louis Theatre Has Woman Operator

MRS. L. B. STODDARD, manager of the Monroe Theatre at 2816 Chippewa street, St. Louis, is one of the few women moving picture operators in the country. She manages her show and operated her own projecting machine for seven months recently, and says she would be a full-fledged member of the Operators' Union if they would admit her to membership.

Work Commenced on Fillmore Street House, San Francisco

CONTRACTS have been awarded for the erection of a one-story and basement class "A" theatre building at the northwest corner of Eddy and Fillmore streets. The building will cover an area of 416 feet by 137 feet with an addition for store purposes covering almost twice this area.

The theatre will cost in the neighborhood of $50,000 and will be one of the finest in the outlying districts of the city. It is being erected by J. R. Hanify for the Kahn & Greenfield Circuit and is to be made ready for occupancy at the earliest possible date.

Splendid weather for building has been experienced so far and in case the winter rains are not too severe it is believed that the structure will be ready late in March.

Joe Langley, for some time manager of the Richmond theatre, conducted at Richmond, Cal., by Turner & Dahmen, has been made manager of the New Alameda theatre, Alameda, and Mr. DeLorme, of the latter house, has been transferred to Richmond.

Two Theatres Added to Michigan Contingent

THE Princess Theatre, Cadillac, Mich., was formally opened December 2 for the first time. The new amusement place is modern in every respect. The outside is finished in white; the inside decorations are neat, although not elaborate. The house seats 50 people. The system of lighting is indirect.

Harry Mertz, who with his father and brother owns the property and building, will be the manager, and Alfred Schoenhoals, the operator. General admission will be five cents, except on Wednesdays, Saturdays and holidays, when special features will be shown and the price increased to ten cents.

The Aladdin Theatre in Bay City, Mich., opened November 30. It was scheduled to open the afternoon of the day previous, but a delay was caused by the motion picture machine which was slightly damaged in transit. The opening attraction was Ethel Barrymore in "The Nightingale." The opening was an auspicious one; long before the house opened, the entrance and curb were lined with people.

New Michigan City Law for Projection Machines

AN ordinance has been prepared and will be introduced in Pontiac, Mich., that provides for the materials and method of construction of buildings in which motion picture machines may be used and provides for their regulation, installation and operation.

It provides that in any building, the walls and floors of which are brick, concrete or reinforced concrete, located 75 feet from any other building, moving picture machines may be installed, but that a written application to the commissioners for a permit must first be made.

This is to get around the state law which provides that no moving picture show can be given above the first floor of any building.

Site for $150,000 Jersey City Theatre Purchased

MESSRS. Hall and Smith, owners of the United States Garden Theatre, of Elizabeth, N. J., and of the United States Theatre, Hoboken, N. J., have announced the purchase of a site for a new projection theatre in Jersey, San Francisco. The site of the Elizabeth playhouse, the Jersey City house would be built on Bergen square in the most exclusive residential section of the city. The new theatre will cost $150,000 and work of construction will be commenced in the early spring.

Theatres Here and There

Plans are made for a new theatre at Delmar, near Hamilton avenue, St. Louis, that will seat 1,500 persons. The new house is to occupy part of the ground floor of a building that is to be erected on the corner in question, and will be first-class and up-to-date in every particular.

The Metacope Theatre, operated by Pohlman and Zimmerman, on the ground floor of the building at 3200 Olive street, St. Louis, has been closed as a result of the building being torn down. Pohlman and Zimmerman also own and operate the Comet Theatre at 2112 Market street.

The World's Dream Theatre at 1413 Market street, St. Louis, has reopened after extensive alterations with a new name and a new manager. The name of the house is now the Amuse U, and its destinies are looked after by John Francis, an experienced picture show manager who comes here from Decatur, Ill.

Three St. Louis Theatres Change Hands

Scherer Brothers, who have operated the Palace Theatre at 1310 Franklin avenue, St. Louis, for the last five years, have acquired the Mikado at 5900 Easton avenue. The Mikado is one of the large O. F. Crawford houses, built three years ago, and operated as a mixed picture and vaudeville house. Scherer Brothers will use an all-picture program and feature Paramount releases.

G. Chiaple has bought the Coliseum Theatre at 1219 South Broadway from its former owner, Alex Papadriacos. Mr. Chiaple will continue to use the same program, four reels of Mutual pictures for five cents.

John Kuppertz has assumed control of the Eclipse Garden at 428 Pimm street, and has installed a new Edison projecting machine in the theatre.

The Kings Theatre at 800 North Kingshighway, St. Louis, is now under the management of M. J. Cunningham, a well-known theatrical exchanger who is conducting the house and doing excellent business with a mixed picture and vaudeville bill.

Chas. J. Vollmer, manager of the Strand Theatre, which opened two weeks ago at Sixth and St. Charles streets, St. Louis, is also owner of the Bernays Theatre, at Bernays and Hanrey avenues, and is planning a big air dome for North St. Louis, to be opened early next summer.

Theatres in the Mississippi Valley

The Grand Opera House at Mount Olive, Ill., has been equipped for a moving picture theatre. The place will be called the Gem, and will be operated by W. H. Klein and Oliver Weidler.

The Grand Theatre at Litchfield, Ill., has a contest with a $50 prize for the boy or girl selling the most tickets to the Grand. The mother of the winner will get a thirty-day pass to the theatre.

The Olympia Theatre at Kewanee, Ill., has changed hands and will be operated only three days a week, Friday, Saturday and Sunday. C. M. Merritt is the new owner, but John Schienberger will manage the place, as usual.

A four-hundred seat moving picture theatre will be opened by Diamond and Decker in Havana, Ill., early in December.

Watson and Wright, exhibitors of Bevier, Mo., are refurbishing their theatre.

E. E. Wagner, who manages the Bijou Theatre at Lamar, Mo., has increased the seating capacity of his house and put in 275 more opera chairs.

F. K. Snyder, of St. James, Mo., is advertising his 300-seat theatre for sale.

C. B. Patterson, manager of the Best Theatre in Pulaski, Tenn., has recently increased the seating capacity of his theatre.

Thomas O'Dowd has opened a new theatre at Hillsboro, Ill., in addition to one he already has at Witt, Ill.

Among the Theatres of California

The Imperial Theatre, Eureka, Cal., until recently conducted by Pettingill & Pettingill, has been taken over by P. Roswald, of San Francisco, and a number of important changes are being made in the house. A costly heating and ventilating system is to be installed, a fine Wurlitzer player has been purchased and new equipment has been placed in the operating room.

The Strand Theatre, one of the finest houses erected on the East Bay side to be devoted exclusively to motion pictures, was opened on the afternoon of November 26, under most auspicious circumstances. This new house is located on College avenue, near Ashby avenue, Berkeley, Cal., in the center of an exclusive residence district, with a large territory from which to draw. It is owned and conducted by Messrs. Beach & Krahn, who conduct the Lorin Photoplay Theatre in South Berkeley with so much success. Mr. H. L. Beach is president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of California, and Mr. Krahn is also a well-known exhibitor.

Officials of the Turner & Dahnken circuit have just been advised that the plans for adding to the working capacity of the concern have been successful and that the Turner & Dahnken Controlling Company, of San Francisco, has been formed at London.

The capital stock is now placed at $2,500,000 and the announcement is made that $1,000,000 of this has just been underwritten by London capitalists. This concern has been planning for some time to still further extend its circuit and will probably enter the southern California field, this matter having been under consideration for some time. General Manager C. L. Langley has made several trips of late to Los Angeles and other members of the company have been looking over the field there.

F. F. Fink is planning to erect a moving picture theatre at Griddley, Cal.

F. Tesser has opened the Isis Theatre, Truckee, Cal., for the winter season. It is expected that many visitors from the outside world will visit Truckee this winter to enjoy the ice sports.

The Dorris Theatre at Roseville, Cal., has proved to be too small and will be enlarged at an early date.

The Fair Theatre, Fresno, Cal., has just installed new projection equipment secured from the Golden Gate Film Exchange of San Francisco.

The Melrose Theatre, Oakland, Cal., is to be remodelled and will be reopened shortly under new management.

A. W. Black and M. V. Rickle, formerly of Saginaw, Mich., have purchased the Family Theatre, Owosso, Mich., from Mat Mauer and Harry Monroe. Mr. Mauer will engage in the purchase and rental of moving picture films, with headquarters in Detroit, his former home.

Messrs. Black and Rickle will immediately make improvements, such as the installation of a new screen and operating machine. The policy of the theatre will be Paramount pictures four nights a week, with a combination of vaudeville and pictures the remaining nights.

$35,000 Theatre Opens in Pennsylvania

One of the handsomeest houses in Washington County is that of the Star Theatre at Canonsburg, Pa. It was opened recently and is sure to be the most popular theatre in that town. The class of performers that are being shown and the attention of the attaches to the slightest detail as to the comfort of the patrons makes it possible to work wonders in that town.

The seating capacity of the house has been increased to 450 and the exceptionally high ceilings make the theatre the best ventilated in that part of the State. The house and its equipment cost $35,000 and it was built by A. M. Forsythe, who has been in the merchant tailoring business in that section for the past forty years. His son, Earl M. Forsythe, a newspaperman and advertising expert, is the manager of the house and is watching the slightest details.

The interior decorations are of the finest and the outside of the house has also been made most attractive. The Universal Service is used exclusively and the equipment is of the latest type in every particular.

Another new theatre is to be erected in East Liberty, one of Pittsburgh's suburbs. Work has started on the new house of C. J. Keller, one of Pittsburgh's oldest hotel men. The house is to be built at the corner of Lemington and Lincoln avenues and will be 30 by 120 feet and will have a seating capacity of 300. It will be built according to the new building code as laid down by the State legislature at Harrisburg, Pa.

The Strand Theatre at Morgantown, W. Va., will hereafter show the Paramount features.

New Theatre Opens in Knoxville

The Crystal Theatre, the newest motion picture theatre in Knoxville, Tenn., at 425 Gay street, was opened November 27. The new movie theatre has a seating capacity of 400, including 100 seats in the balcony. A diversified program, including new features, comedies and dramas, will be shown in catering especially to the ladies and children.

The Queen Theatre, Greenville, Ky., opened November 26 under the management of Roy Wells.

The Rex Theatre, Lancaster, Ky., gave its opening show Thanksgiving evening. The Rex is one of the most substantially constructed motion picture theatre buildings in Kentucky, being 80 by 100 feet, three stories in height and built entirely of concrete blocks. The lower floor is equipped as a garage and contains a modern lighting plant to light the entire structure.

The theatre is located on the second floor, while the third floor will be used as a lecture hall and for lodge purposes. The theatre floor has a seating capacity of 400 and suspended balcony seats for an additional 100. Exits and fire escapes are conveniently arranged and a complete and thorough system of ventilation is in effect throughout the building. H. Israel is manager of the new theatre.

Duchess, a Converted Church, Opens in St. Louis

The Duchess Theatre, at Grand and Washington avenues, St. Louis, opened Saturday, November 26. The Duchess was formerly a Presbyterian church, but the architects in charge of the alterations planned two rooms on either side of the steps that lead into the building, that can be used as shops or offices, and serves to rob the structure of its churchy appearance. The interior of the building adapted itself very readily to the needs of a theatre.

The auditorium, which has been fitted with 800 seats, is very roomy, with generous spaces and aisles, and the high ceiling, with its beautifully finished woodwork, adds much to the beauty of the place. The large stained glass windows of the church will not be disturbed.

W. W. Busby is the owner of the new theatre, and C. H. Tabler, who is a son of Frank Tabler, manager of the General Film Company's local office, is the manager. The performance will be continuous from 12 noon to 11 at night. Ten cents admission will be charged and five reels of pictures shown.
Music and the Picture

Editor's Note.—This department is prepared to answer all questions from exhibitors relating to the use of music in connection with photoplays, and to suggest suitable music for current pictures. Correspondence will be welcomed.

One-Man-Orchestras Run Gamut of Musical Effects
By H. S. Fuld

Higher prices, better films, larger and more pretentious theatres, and with the advent of the feature films more appropriate music is the trend of today. There was a time when exhibitors believed that pictures alone constituted the show, and that as long as there was a piano, or piano and drum hanging away, it was sufficient for the musical accompaniment to the pictures. This was the era of the converted store theatre, but with the coming of the feature film things started for general betterment. Theatres that formerly seated up to three hundred were quickly altered to enlarge their capacity and in some cases trebled it. New theatres seating from nine hundred to three thousand were rushed to completion.

But with better theatres, better films, better projection and better everything except music, the public became critical, and the cry on every hand was "Why not better music?" Manufacturers of musical instruments were quick to see their opportunity and immediately centered their attention on the making of instruments especially intended for the motion picture theatres, with the result that a number of so-called one-man-orchestras was soon on the market.

These instruments are a combination of piano and organ, with chimes, xylophone, drums and drummers' traps, sound effects for use with the pictures all combined in the one instrument and operated from a keyboard; played the same as one would play a piano or organ. Most of them have the additional advantage of being capable of rendering the musical and trap accompaniment automatically, with the aid of specially punched music rolls, or as is the case of one of them, a regular or ordinary roll such as is used in any automatic piano-player.

Different Size Orchestras

These one-man-orchestras differ in size and general arrangement, but taken collectively, every instrument used in band or orchestra has been successfully imitated by an equivalent pipe-stop or percussion effect; also many old-time and ancient instruments now obsolete have been resuscitated and put in use in these machines. An additional advantage credited to these instruments is, that some tones that are not possible to render with an orchestra or band instrument, such as Vox Humana and so on, are possible with these.

With violin, cello, clarinet, horn, cornet, flute, harp, chimes, xylophone, piano, either singly, in group or all together, all manner of sound effects, drummer's traps and so on are possible of accompaniment with these machines. Among the sound effects capable of being produced with one of these instruments are wind, rain, railroad train or whistle, steamboat whistle, automobile or motor boat engine, auto-born, locomotive bell, tambourine, castanets, tom-tom, horses' hoofs, crash, cymbals, base and snare drums, triangle, cat, dog, chicken calls, lion roar, baby cry, and so on indefinitely. Almost any sound effect that could possibly be called for by the action on the screen is possible with one of these machines.

The instrument is played from the keyboard as previously mentioned and the traps by pushing a button, pressing a pedal, or pulling a cord, as the case may be. Any instrument, whether it be violin, horn, flute, etc., may be played solo with or without piano or all may be used in any combination desired by the operator. The pipe-organ being the basis of this one-man-orchestra, a selection by a competent performer is a welcome addition to any program and enthusiastically received by any audience.

These instruments are in some cases equipped with a solo self-playing attachment, a separate solo manual or keyboard placed a little above the main keyboard, or both an upper and lower manual and automatic.

Probably the best known manufacturers of these one-man-orchestras are the Rudolph Warhitzer Company, American Fotoplayer Company, J. C. Seebrug Piano Company, the Musical Instrument Company and the Marquette Piano Company.

While it is not logical to suppose that these instruments will immediately replace pianos and untrained orchestras in all the theatres, nevertheless they are rapidly being installed by the exhibitor who can see the "hand writing on the wall." There is still a number of theatres whose proprietors are having but indifferent success with their present musical equipment, and they would do well to install one of these instruments as soon as possible.

When one stops to think just what can be accomplished in the way of accompanying the pictures with one of these machines, it is not to be wondered at that these one-man-orchestras should take the place of the piano and drum and other orchestras. Any person who can play a piano or organ can operate one of these instruments, can follow the plot or story of the film, with appropriate music and sound effects, and, most important of all to some exhibitors, the instrument can be paid for in a year or two by the saving on the salary list.

Orchestras Capable of All Effects

It has been been proved that these instruments embody every orchestral effect, and by improvisation the performer or operator can closely follow the story as it appears on the screen, adjust the music to suit the action, jump on the instant from comedy to tragedy music, and also have at his immediate hand any and all traps and sound effects necessary to make the picture more realistic. And all this is under the control of one performer and one mind.

There is only one way to play music for the accompaniment of the pictures and that is the right way. As has been advocated in these columns over and over again, "FIT THE MUSIC TO EACH SCENE," and don't play any long selection that will run through numerous scenes without any possibility of being in any way appropriate.

The advantages of the one-man-orchestras stand out prominently. They combine all the advantages of a full orchestra, and what is more important, none of the disadvantages. They also have the additional merit of being operated by one person.

The operator can change his tune or selection; he can change and select any combination of instruments; he can on the instant change from horn to violin, or flute to full orchestra, and jump to cello solo or make any other combination which may occur to him. All this is possible without any stopping or hesitating or any apparent break in the music, and to cap it all, at supper hour the machine can run itself—"just start the roll."

It might not be a bad idea for the managers and proprietors of these theatres who are desirous of improving the musical equipment of their respective theatres to write or get into communication with the musical department of Motion Picture News.

One of the most up to date agencies for doing this work is the Rex Film Renovating Process, which has resulted from many years of painstaking research and experimentation in renovating films. In its first form it was developed by the French Film Restoring Company as a process of cleaning films by hand. This company operated several successful film exchanges, which were finally merged with the Mutual Film Company.

Successful Renovation of Films

The early experience of this company in restoring films revealed a great demand for that sort of service. Films were sent in from all parts of the country to be renovated. The success of the process and the demand for the work led to the undertaking to construct a machine which would do the work more cheaply than it could be done by hand. The result showed that the machine not only did the work more cheaply, but that it accomplished more uniform and better results than hand labor.

The first model of the machine was placed in operation in the exchange of the Mutual Film Company, of Columbus, Ohio. This machine gave excellent satisfaction. It has now been replaced with the latest model.

The Rex film renovating machine long ago passed beyond the experimental stage. The machines are now in use in some of the leading exchanges of the country. This process of restoring films is fully protected by patents allowed and pending in the United States and foreign countries.

Proper renovating postpones indefinitely the coming on of film old age. It is primarily a cleaning process. It is also a process which rejuvenates the films and greatly lessens the rate of deterioration. It is also a process which enables the exchange to supply the exhibitor with a film service which satisfies his patrons. In doing these things it greatly increases the profit of the exchange and the exhibitor.

Everything used by man should be cleaned. This is especially true in the case of things whose serviceability depends on transparency. For example, windows, show cases and lenses must be cleaned frequently to permit the light to pass through them freely. The need for cleansing is still more imperative in the case of the films. The uncleaned film loses rapidly in transparency on account of the accumulation of sweat and dirt.

The problem of cleaning films is not as simple as that of cleaning windows. Yet this delicate and difficult operation can be accomplished very satisfactorily, and in an easy way.

The Rex renovating process removes from the film the sweat and dirt which cause the hazy, blotchy, rain-streaked appearance of a film in bad condition. This process of renovation renders the picture more brilliant and makes its various features more easily distinguished.

Transparency of Film Restored

Proper renovating treatement restores the transparency of the film; it renews the pliability of the celluloid and prevents the breaking which occurs easily at the sprocket holes. It lubricates the film so that it is not so readily worn out by friction.

The gelatin coating of a properly renovated film will not adhere to the tension springs and idlers. The process thus prevents the damage done to the film in the form of scratches caused by such adhering masses of gelatin.

A film which has been properly renovated a few times will be much more acceptable to the exhibitor and his patrons after it has run ninety days than an unrenovated film which has run thirty days. Many films which have been run two hundred days will please the spectators almost as well as new films. The process will improve any film from 50 per cent. to 75 per cent.

The exchange which employs an up to date renovating process such as the Rex will have far fewer "licking" exhibitors on its list, and will change the demand of the exhibitor from newly released films to freshly renovated films.

This will greatly increase the good will asset of the exchange by making its service more acceptable to its patrons, as well as greatly lessening the rate of decrease in the earning power of films, thus prolonging the period during which the films are productive of profit.

The Rex film renovating process will accomplish the above results at a monthly cost to the exchange of but a few cents per reel.

Make an Art Gallery Out of Your Lobby

Shake hands with yourself, Mr. Exhibitor, that this Ad caught your eye, then listen to this horse sense array of hard facts. The great American public are Hero-worshipers, do you appreciate that? And did you ever stop to think how lucky you are to be in a business where you can coin that Hero-worship into profitable dollars? Shall we speak plainer? All right—Can a laundry send out pictures of anything or anyone connected with their plant that will cause the public to become hero-worshipers? Can the grocery man make hero-worshipers by showing a bag of potatoes in front of his store? Can a Clothier make hero-worshipers because of the brand of clothes he sells? Funny questions, eh? but answer them and see where you get off at.

But Mr. Exhibitor—where the Laundryman, the Grocer and the Clothier can’t make Hero-worshipers, your business can and has already established Hero-worship in the breast of every patron who attends your theatre. Have you ever stopped to realize what a tremendous asset this Hero-worship is to your business? Then why not still further boost this great power that lies right in the palm of your hand? Why not make your Lobby an Art Gallery of Movie stars? Why not make your Lobby so interesting, so elaborate and so attractive that your patrons will go out of their way to see the Gallery you have created? To show you what WE think of this Hero-worship we have designed and produced a series of magnificent poster portraits of Universal players as follows:

King Baggot, Mary Fuller, Cleo Madison, Robert Leonard, Ella Hall, Max Asher, Pauline Bush, Grace Cunard, Wm. Clifford, Francis Ford, Victoria Ford, Hobart Henley, Warren Kerrigan, George Larkin, Edward Lyons, Anna Little, Murdoch MacQuarrie, Lee Moran, Nat Moore, Edna Maison, Violet Mersreau, Harry C. Myers, Dorothy Phillips, Mary Pickford, Herbert Rawlinson, Ford Sterling, Rosemary Theby, Marie Walcamp, Ben Wilson, Frances M. Nelson, Billie Ritchie, Gertrude Selby—and still more to come. These are single sheet size elaborately done in 6 colors, and are made up either for unframed or framed display. We advise framing by all means.

No business on earth has such a power for Hero-worship advertising and the immense resulting benefits as YOUR OWN BUSINESS. Then USE IT, wire or write your Exchange and ask them to send you samples of ALL the above stars. They will send you samples and prices—and if your own Exchange can’t supply you, wire or write the Morgan Lithograph Co. at Cleveland, Ohio, who will give your request immediate attention. We advise and urge that you write your Exchange first, and then if they fail to send you the necessary samples and prices, write to the Morgan Lithograph Co., Cleveland, Ohio.

THANHOUSER PHOTOPLAYS

TRIUMPHS IN HIGH CLASS MOTION PICTURE PRODUCTION

In every industry you will find one organization that is recognized as the quality institution—as the producer of the highest class of merchandise in that line. In the motion picture industry the Thanhouser Film Corporation has won this honor. The exceptional merit of Thanhouser Photoplays is known throughout the world. In the Thanhouser organization are such eminent stars as James Cruze, Florence La Badie, Arthur Ashley, Sidney Bracy, Marguete Snow, Carey L. Hastings, Morris Foster, Nolan Gane, Arthur Bauer, Madeline and Marion Fairbanks, David Thompson, Mignon Anderson, Frank Farrington, Muriel Ostriche and Helen Badgley. In no other film organization will you find such a list of noted players. And back of this collection of stars is a group of directors and executives that stand supreme in filmdom. Then, too, you will find evidence of the high quality of Thanhouser photoplays in their beautiful settings and clear photography. Three Thanhouser productions are released each week in the United States and Canada exclusively through the Mutual Film Corporation. Exhibitors can arrange bookings for Thanhouser releases at any Mutual Exchange.

For the current week we announce:

Tuesday, Dec. 29th, "Lucy's Elperent." A two-reel drama by Howell Hansel. In the cast are Justus D. Barnes, Mignon Anderson and Morris Foster—thus assuring a splendid production.

THANHOUSER FILM CORPORATION
NEW ROCHELLE, NEW YORK
A League Built For Business

LAST week a meeting of the national executive committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was held in New York City.

There were present Messrs. Pearce, Jeup, Corey, Brylawski and Wilson. These men came from California, Michigan, Ohio, Maryland and Washington. They paid their own expenses to and in from New York.

They left their businesses for a week or more and day after day they gathered early and sat late in session.

* * *

THEY worked hard, seriously, conscientiously, with but one end constantly in mind—the welfare of the Exhibitors' League.

And that means the welfare of every exhibitor in this country.

No politics were discussed. They talked business—these men, just plain business. They are plain business men.

* * *

I WAS invited to attend one of the committee's conferences, and I would like to say this, in all earnestness: that if every exhibitor in the country had been in my place, had talked with these men, listened to their plans, sensed their one-minded determination and sound judgment—then every exhibitor in the United States would be a member of the Exhibitors' League.

Moreover, he would give this committee his absolute confidence and unequivocal support.

* * *

THEY are honest, able men, with so sincere a belief in the necessity of organization that they make heavy personal sacrifices in its behalf.

They are out for a business administration—the first the League has ever had or could hope for. They are going to give the League a business administration, and there will result from their efforts an organization of such downright business value to the individual member that no exhibitor can afford to remain outside of it.

* * *

IT is their intention to have a permanent office which shall be a bureau of information and of helpful activity.

Data will be collected and made accessible to members which will not only direct them in their main problems of management, but be of direct and profitable assistance to them in the conduct of their daily business.

In other words, the very kind of business help the exhibitor has wanted, never had and does not now have.

The committee realizes the necessity of solid state organization and already this work is going on with a new vim and in a businesslike way.

* * *

THIS issue of Motion Picture News carries a call to the exhibitors of New York State to "get together."

The idea is an excellent one. It is a striking evidence of the new business policy of the national League and the new state League about to be.

The call is made to all the exhibitors of the state, regardless of their affiliations with any association. They are asked to forget politics, personalities, constitutions and bylaws and get together on purely a business welfare.

President Pearce will ask for the resignation of present League officers. He will throw the meeting into an open discussion of those serious problems now menacing the exhibiting business in the Empire State.

Business committees, headed by business men, will be formed to tackle these problems immediately—and a business organization will be effected.

* * *

THERE is every practical reason why every exhibitor in the state should heed this call. There is no reason to keep an exhibitor away except an utterly selfish one.

Again, there is every reason why every exhibitor in the District of Columbia should act upon the forceful and dignified call for a mass meeting of exhibitors in the national capital.

To quote from this excellent appeal:

"Reckless competition among ourselves, together with the unwise policy of attempting to stand alone against combinations in other branches of the business with which we are compelled to deal, have worked great harm.

"Your money is invested and good business judgment dictates that you use every honorable means to protect it.

"We must strive to protect that interest."

Similar businesslike calls have been sent out by Oklahoma and Minnesota. Read them in this issue.

* * *

BIG, broad things were done at the recent meeting of the League's national executive committee. Motion Picture News will have the pleasure shortly of announcing them and supporting them.

In the meantime there need not be—there must not be—the slightest doubt in any exhibitor's mind of the utter honesty and the substantial ability of President Pearce and his associates, nor of the fact that at least we are going to have a business League.

FABLES GOES INTO EDISON STOCK

Being "the goat" has no terrors for William Fables, for it is due partly to the fact that he is so good a goat that he has been selected for the Edison stock company of stars—not to say, of course, that Mr. Fables is not also a good actor.

In the Edison "Buster Brown" series, Mr. Fables as the wise goat companion of Buster, ever bent on trouble, made more of a hit than Buster himself. That so much humor could be extracted out of so serious an animal as the goat—and still be "life like"—was the surprise of Mr. Fables' quaint art. He also added a new character to the film version of "Fantasma," the Edison feature, as the clown's faithful ally and companion, the goat.

Pennsylvania Building Code Is Killed

Proposed Law Will Probably Never Reach Legislature—Standards Committee Convinces Industrial Board That Mandatory Code Is Unnecessary

Special to Motion Picture News

Dec. 15

d news for present owners and prospective builders of motion picture theatres throughout the state of Pennsylvania is contained in a statement obtained today by the representative of the Motion Picture News from the Department of Labor and Industry, at the capital, that it is now altogether probable that the proposed law providing a mandatory building code for the construction of motion picture theatres in this state will never be introduced in the Legislature.

The Legal Department, it is learned, has practically decided to drop the plan for the proposed law which has been so much dreaded by all the motion picture interests of the state. This decision, it was learned, has practically been reached since the Industrial Board, which is a commission appointed by the state authorities to frame legislation concerning matters affecting the work of the Labor Department, has conferred with the Committee on Motion Picture Standards, composed of various representatives of the business. This committee has about convinced the Board that the proposed code is not necessary.

This committee on standards includes managers of theatres, building inspectors from Pittsburgh and Philadelphia, film men, insurance people, architects, motion picture operators, labor representatives and others identified closely with the business.

At the recent meeting of the Board with the committee the matter of preparing a building law and introducing it in the Legislature, the new session of which starts next month, was talked of, but since then the motion picture men have offered suggestions that, blended in a whole, have constructed a standard that is considered to be as nearly perfect as possible. In the observance of this standard all the important picture interests of the state are said to have agreed, so that a law is hardly necessary. The standard has not yet been prepared as a whole, but it will be made up of the different suggestions and recommendations already made and published in the Motion Picture News, and it will be prepared for the public in the course of the next few weeks.

Another meeting of the interests involved will be held at an early date, which has not yet been selected, when the entire scope of the proposed safety arrangements will be gone over, following which it is thought to be practically certain the Industrial Board will abandon the idea of advocating any mandatory legislation on the subject.

Vitagraph's Policy for the New Year

Company Will Release Every Alternate Broadway Star Features on Tuesday and Saturday Three-Part Broad-

IN response to the many suggestions and requests of the exhibitors, the Vitagraph Company has decided to release the Three-Part Broadway Star Features in the regular program on every alternate Tuesday and Saturday, thus giving exhibitors in different localities fair opportunity of booking one of these features in their programs.

The first releases will be "Two Women" on Tuesday, January 5. The second of these releases, "The Sage Brush Gal," will be on Saturday, January 16, and so on through each month. The second week of January, "The Evil Within" will be released on Tuesday, January 19, and "Underneath the Paint" will be released on Saturday, January 30; and so on throughout each month.

All the pictures will be first shown at the Vitagraph theatre, New York City, as formerly, and considerable publicity will continue to appear simultaneously in the daily papers. The operation of both modes of publicity will have the effect of stimulating an interest in patrons of neighborhood houses as well as acquainting the general public with the merits of Vitagraph pictures, which have long maintained a high standard of excellence.

The policy of long runs at the theatre of the company has been discontinued, and from now on the pictures will be put on only long enough to serve as an advertising aid to exhibitors.

The Mondays' releases will be changed from a drama to a comedy, making three Vitagraph comedies a week—Monday, Wednesday and Friday. On Saturdays a two-part comedy or drama will be released for booking.

Alco Will Make Series of Star Releases

Companies Engage Orrin Johnson, Irene Tooker, Minnie Dupree, Jane Cowl and Ethel Barrymore

THROUGH its various producing companies, the Alco Film Corporation is making a series of star releases.

Among the many new engagements for the forthcoming season are those of Orrin Johnson and Irene Warfield for B. A. Rolfe Photoplays, Inc. Catherine Countiss, William H. Tooker and Minnie Dupree are recent engagements by the Life Photo Film Corporation.

Jane Cowl and Ethel Barrymore have been engaged for further productions by the All Star Feature Corporation, while Thomas Jefferson and Adelaide Thurston and Madame Olga Petrova have signed contracts with Popular Plays and Players, Inc. B. A. Rolfe Photoplays have engaged Mrs. Fiske's famous dramatic vehicle "The High Road." Whether Mrs. Fiske herself will appear in her original role cannot be said at present, but Mr. Rolfe expects to make a definite announcement soon.
GREAT excitement has prevailed in certain motion picture circles this week over the Government suit brought to dissolve the Motion Picture Patents Company.

The argument was heard before Judge O. B. Dickinson of the Federal Court. Edwin P. Grosvenor, special assistant to Attorney-General Gregory, upheld the side of the United States, while the defendants were represented by a large array of legal talent.

The Government charges that the alleged monopoly was formed in 1908 by practically all of the manufacturers of motion picture films in the country.

Charges of the Government

Under an agreement made by these concerns, the Motion Pictures Patent Company was made, the Government alleges, the holding company of all the patents that have ever been issued in Washington. A list of theatres was then prepared and no film exchange was allowed to distribute films to any theatre except those named on the list. If it was charged, uniform prices and rules were made, and if the middleman did not observe the orders of the so-called trust, his supply of films was cut off and he was forced out of business, is alleged.

In a brief outline of the Government's case, Mr. Grosvenor referred to the Supreme Court's decisions in the Standard Oil and Tobacco cases, and contended that the present action came within the scope of the rulings in these cases. In reply Mr. Moon contended that at the organization of the company in 1908 there was a disastrous feud among the motion picture factions, and that because of this warfare and the general infringement of patent rights by dissenting interests, the paths of commerce were obstructed.

He further declared that the Motion Picture Patents Company was only a trustee of the patents company and not designed to absorb the business of competitors. In the ten years before the organization of the company he claimed that there were so many infringement suits brought by rival interests that several manufacturers were almost financially ruined.

Mr. Moon farther asserted that the motion picture art had increased infinitely more than any other industry in interstate commerce and he insisted that a New York exchange dealer and not the Government was the real plaintiff in this case.

Claims Patents Were Rightfully Applied

Continuing, Mr. Moon maintained that the patents instead of being applied to unlawful purposes, were employed in a normal manner to the development of business, and without the amalgamation of the patents the evolution of motion pictures would have been impossible.

In his final argument, the Assistant Attorney-General indicated to the Court the enormous profits made by the so-called trust.

He claimed the General Film Company absorbed 68 companies, and of the 116 competing exchanges before the formation of the combine, only one survives, he declared. Mr. Grosvenor also alleged that severe penalties were incurred by any exchange dealer who violated even in the smallest degree the regulations in his license.

As an example, he cited the case of Lewis M. Swaab, of Philadelphia. Mr. Swaab, in order to catch an eight o'clock train to Baltimore, had to release, it was said, a film at 7:50 p. m., for an exhibitor who wished to show this film in Baltimore before noon.

The hour set for releases by the General Film Company being 8 a. m., Mr. Swaab was fined $80 a minute, $100 in all, by the manufacturers, the penalty of non-payment being the curtailment of his supply, Mr. Grosvenor asserted.

The Government's lawyer wished to know "if such action were not an arbitrary interference in interstate commerce with the rights of an American citizen."

Alleges 1,600 Per Cent. Profit

Mr. Grosvenor claimed that in the first 18 months of its existence the General Film Company expended more than $2,000,000 purchasing independent exchanges and paying manufacturers, and yet paid 7 per cent. on the preference and 12 per cent. on the common stock to its shareholders.

In fact, emphatically declared the lawyer, on an investment of $10,000 each, ten manufacturers made a profit of 1,600 per cent. in 1911.

During the progress of the trial the courtroom was filled with all sorts of moving picture paraphernalia showing the different inventions and patents involved in the suit.

Pictures were shown the judge and every point possible brought out by the counsel on both sides. The counsel for defense will submit further arguments. Chas. F. Kingsley assisted Mr. Moon in the conduct of the case and made some of the arguments.

The suit was begun on Tuesday, December 8, and continued daily, the Court even holding a night session on Thursday to facilitate the progress of the proceedings. The final arguments in the suit were heard on Friday morning. Judge Dickinson reserved his decision.

AUGUST PICKS CAST FOR KINETOPHOTE PICTURES

Edwin August has picked his cast for the first picture which he will make for the Kinetophone. As has been announced, his leading woman is Bliss Milford, who has been an Edison star for some time back. The others in the cast will be Clare

EDWARD J. PEIL

The picture which Mr. August will produce has been advertised as a "mysterious thing." Some ideas are to be tried which have never before been tried in moving pictures and the effects which are promised will be different from anything yet shown on the screen.

Mr. Peil, who will have the principal male role, next to that which Mr. August will take, is well known to the motion picture world. He made his stage debut at the age of eighteen years, playing then with Mme. Modjeska. He appeared in the first five-part picture which was ever made by the Lubin Company. Hal August has been associated with his brother in pictures for some time.

CREATING A CITY FOR MAKING MOTION PICTURES

Universal City, Near Los Angeles, is a Community Devoted Exclusively to the Manufacture of Films—Its Establishment Important Because it Signifies the Security and Permanency of the Entire Industry—How William Horsley Created an Inhabitable Town Out of an Old Farm on a Rush Order

Universal City, situated near Los Angeles, Cal., represents one of the most important moves yet made in the motion picture industry in this country. Not only does this remarkable plant represent great progressiveness on the part of its promoters, but it also is significant of the feeling of security and permanency which is felt throughout the film industry as the result of modern methods.

Briefly stated, Universal City is a complete manufacturing plant for the production of motion picture films, but this means so many things that it is wholly inadequate as a description.

The idea of Universal City was originally conceived by Isadore Bernstein, general manager of the Pacific Coast Studios of the Universal Film Company. Mr. Bernstein has long realized that the days of haphazard arrangements for the making of motion pictures were past, and that films could be best produced in a place specially arranged to meet the requirements of every branch of their manufacture.

Such an establishment was in part provided on the ranch which the company occupied up to May of this year, but the equipment on this place was bound to be somewhat unsatisfactory, owing to the fact that it was only under lease, and equipment of a permanent nature could not well be provided.

The lease on the old ranch expired about the middle of the year, but thanks to some very hard work on the part of William Horsley, the man who had charge of all the construction, everything was ready when the time for moving came.

Ground Suited to Purpose

The property on which the new plant has been established is one which is particularly suitable for the purpose. It is a few miles from Los Angeles on the electric line from that city. Most of the land lies on the south bank of the Los Angeles River.

The shape is irregular, with a length of about three times the width. There is a great diversity of scenery. Many varieties of water views can be obtained along the banks of the stream, and a small dam located near the mouth of a creek makes it possible to have a little lake when needed. Scenes supposed to be in desert or arid country can be easily found, as can those representing prosperous farm and ranch regions.

A range of saw tooth hills, which are the lower portions of the Santa Monica Mountains, provide excellent backgrounds for Western mountain scenery. At a number of points the best suited for this purpose, grounds have been laid out. On this various types of outdoor scenes can be erected, especially those representing small villages, farms or city streets.

Altogether it is possible to find almost every variety short of marine views on the ranch itself, and these can easily be obtained by a short trip to one of the nearby beaches.

For a plot of its size the site of Universal City presents a surprising variety of country. Its area is approximately two hundred and thirty acres. In general the soil is very sandy. In fact Mr. Horsley found it necessary to spend two weeks building roads before he could do any actual construction work. The operating grounds were also covered, the material in their case being a heavy clay which is found on the higher portions of the property.

Horsley in Charge

When the Universal Company took possession of the ranch on about the first of May of this year it was entirely unimproved. Near the highway which passes the west end there were two or three small barns.

There were also several large fields of barley. The rest of the farm was practically in its original condition. Mr. Horsley was put in charge and told to make the dirt fly, a request which was quite to be expected, as it was then only six weeks until the company’s lease would expire and it would be necessary to move.

As mentioned above, Mr. Horsley had to spend the first two weeks working on roads. This left him just about a flat month in which to construct an entire motion picture plant. On account of the shortness of the time it had already been decided to build the first structures of wood and after their completion to start work on the tile and concrete buildings which are the only sort that will be allowed when the whole city is completed.

Following this scheme the ranch was laid out in two sections, and a road called Laemmle Boulevard, after the president of the Universal Company, was built to connect the two parts.

It was at the back of the ranch that is the part farthest from the highway—was chosen for the temporary buildings. A general view of this colony is shown in the accompanying birdseye, which was taken from the summit of a nearby hill. In the left foreground is seen the outdoor stage.

This is two hundred feet in length, and is flanked by a double row of dressing rooms. It has a wooden floor and overhead is the standard equipment of screens and other devices for obtaining the right lighting effects. This stage and all of the buildings in the group were built and equipped in about four weeks, and were ready for use when the time for moving from the old quarters arrived.

Commodious Quarters

This settlement includes stables, saddle and harness shops, and other buildings connected with the care and management of the place. Besides these are the animal pens and cages in which the various wild beasts are kept, as well as the arena depicted herewith in which animal scenes are staged.

A few of the structures are temporary, notably the sleeping quarters and general living places for the cowboys and cavalrymen, a separate house being provided for each group. Each of these is equipped with a clubroom, and other arrangements for the convenience of the men.

So far, the real architectural features of Universal City are to be seen at the front of the ranch. Here along the highway a really remarkable group of buildings has been erected. These are built in the best mission style of architecture.

They are constructed entirely of concrete and hollow tile, and they house the most modern sort of equipment for finishing films as well as general offices, a restaurant, dressing rooms and the like.

The two huge eucalyptus trees shown in the accompanying cut mark the main entrance to Universal City. They stand on the edge of the highway, and directly between them, set well back from the road, is the doorway to the general office or administration building, which is the center of the group.

A rear view of this, showing the structure on the roof and the small balcony is also given. The room on the roof is the office of Mr. Bernstein, and the balcony commands a view directly down the three hundred foot outdoor stage, which is just being completed.

This stage is sixty-five feet wide, and its center line is directly to the rear of the administration building. It has a double row of concrete dressing rooms for the use of the regular players. A special building some distance away is provided for the use of the extras.

Visitors Always Welcome

Closely adjoining the twenty-two room administration building is the restaurant. This is so constructed that it can be used both by Universal employees and by tourists to grounds. Visitors will be welcome at all times, and it is expected that many tourists on their way to or from California's two expositions next year will stop to see how motion pictures are made at Universal City.

On the opposite side of the quadrangle at the main entrance is the laboratory building, and near it the theatre. The laboratories are of the most modern sort of construction and have separate work rooms for developers and printers, camera men and directors. The directors have ample opportunity to cut and arrange their own film.

The theatre has three projection rooms in which sample prints can be run off and judged. As can be seen from the photographs this entire colony of buildings at the front of the ranch forms a group which is as attractive as it is useful. It represents the highest achievement in the line of special equipment for the making of motion pictures.

In connection with the general plan of Universal City it is interesting to note that it has a complete water and sewage system of its own, each with about four miles of pipes. The water is supplied from four wells, each with a pumping plant and tank.

There is also a very large garage which is being used as an indoor studio pending the completion of a building which has been started for that particular use.

The entire plant was designed on the spot, and much of the furniture was built there or in the Hollywood shops of the Universal Film Company. Thus Universal City was conceived, designed, laid out and built by Universal men for the sole purpose of producing the best pictures for the Universal program.

Betty Nansen to Pose for Fox Pictures Here

Danish Actress, Only Woman to Receive from King of Denmark the Order of Literature and Art, on Way with Large Retinue

BETTY NANSEN, conceded to be one of the greatest exponents of tragic and heavy character roles on the stage, is on her way to America to pose for a series of William Fox's productions extraordinary. The actress, who is leading woman of the famous Theatre Royal of Copenhagen, Denmark's endowed and government-managed playhouse—a temple of the drama which is to northern Europe what the classic Theatre Francais is to France—has been decorated by the King of Denmark with the coveted Order of Literature and Art. She is the only woman ever to be so signally honored.

Throughout Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Germany and Russia Miss Nansen is hailed as one of the greatest interpreters of Ibsen and Shakesperian characters on the boards today.

Miss Nansen is coming to this country on the United States of the Scandinavian-American line. She brings with her a retinue of servants and an immense variety of wardrobe carried in forty-five trunks. The estimated value of the stage costumes she possesses is upwards of $50,000. On account the mined northern seas the United States may be delayed.

Present arrangements are that Miss Nansen will be met down the bay by a delegation of Scandinavian residents of New York and other cities, headed by the Danish ambassador and the Danish consul at this port. After her arrival a reception will be tendered to Miss Nansen.

Alliance Will Have Entire Floor for Offices

Company Makes Extensive Alterations and Additions to Its Premises in the Leavett Building, on Forty-sixth Street

A BIG crew of workmen have been working overtime making extensive alterations and additions to the executive offices of the Alliance Film Corporation. The offices when completed will occupy practically the entire eleventh floor of the Leavett Building in West Forty-sixth street, New York City.

The new additions were made imperative by the rapid growth of the firm's business, and will give much needed accommodation to all the departments.

One of the features of the new arrangement will be the projection room. This will be one of the few private exhibition halls having the advantage of adequate ventilation.

Mr. Cobe, the general manager, and his secretaries will occupy a suite of offices to the front, while between the offices of Mr. Kosch, the treasurer and the auditing department, in a large double office, will be the headquarters of the advertising and publicity manager.

The sales and the shipping departments together with the exchange will have commodious quarters at the rear of the main hall.

BOSTON EXHIBITORS HAD BUSINESS BANQUET

Special to Motion Picture News
Boston, Dec. 17.

A dinner of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts was held Wednesday evening, December 16 at the Georgian. A social session and business meeting was held, and the report on the recent ball at the Arena, made by Samuel Grant, chairman of the executive committee in charge of the affair. A campaign was also put under way to increase the membership in the organization, and plans to this end will be submitted. The present membership is about 140, and it is purpose to raise this to 200 by the first of the new year.
THEATRES CANNOT DEPEND SOLELY UPON LOCATION

"On account of its location that house will be successful," said the interviewer to A. J. Gillingham, the owner of a leading Woodward avenue picture theatre, in Detroit.

"Don't you think so," came the answer right back. "Whenever a theatre in a good location does a big business, people get the impression that the house will take care of itself. That is absolutely wrong. The better the location, the more attention a theatre needs."

"Take in our particular theatre; our people demand a lot of personal attention and must have courteous treatment from the ticket seller to the usher and to the boy who opens the exit doors. And the manager of the theatre must be on the job every minute to see that the attaches of the house live up to these requirements.

"Quite often, and, yes, very often, employees forget their duties and become indifferent and gruff to patrons; these facts seldom come to the manager's attention, and as a result the theatre loses patronage and the owner wonders why. There is no line of business that needs so much watching as the moving-picture theatre; people are coming and going constantly, the attachments differ each day, and the patrons must be satisfied."

"The manager must know what the patrons of his particular theatre prefer in the way of attractions and must cater to them. A theatre must be kept looking clean, so that a live manager has his hands full trying to keep up the appearance of his theatre, seeing that his patrons are properly handled and giving them the proper kind of entertainment. The bigger the house the more business it does, and the better the location the more personal attention is required."

NURSERY IN THEATRE BASEMENT

In the lobby of Clan's theatre, Los Angeles, is an attractive sign, the size of a one-sheet, bearing the following: WE CHECK THE BABY You Enjoy the Show "What's the baby doing?" a stranger asked Manager W. W. Dunlap the other day, whereupon he took him to the basement. There was a play room with sand pile, hobby horses, swings, blocks and other indoor sports for the children. In charge was a pleasant-looking nurse, who at the time was caring for four children.

The woman explained that she cared for all the way from 15 to 30 babies each day and added:

"There will be more left me with as soon as the women find out I am here." And no doubt there will.

FREE BALLOONS ON CHILDREN'S DAY

MANAGER ALPHA FOWLER has inaugurated children's day at the Alpha, Atlanta, Ga., with great success. As a special inducement to the young people a big, durable balloon was given to each child under the age of 12, with the result that the Alpha was very desirably advertised in every section of the city.

Manager Fowler announces that he will give away souvenirs for children's day each week and that on these days films especially censored for the young will be shown.

The first day's offering indicated great success for Mr. Fowler's plan. The Alpha is one of Atlanta's newest theatres and is already one of the most popular.

BREAD CAST UPON THE WATERS

BREAD, indirectly, has been useful in gaining admission to film exhibitions in New Haven. The L. L. Gilbert Baking Corporation issues a premium coupon with each loaf of its patent Butter-Krust bread at a cash value of one-half cent in redemption at the motion-picture theatres.

So far, Wilcox's theatre, at Savin Rock, has done business in advance of other exhibitors. The coupons are only good for children's admissions, ten being exchangeable for one ticket to a matinee performance. Saturday's matinee at Wilcox's usually finds the house full of Butter-Krust kids.

APPEALING TO PATRIOTISM OF SCHOOL CHILDREN

MANAGER MACK, of the Crescent theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., noticed the announcement that Edison was going to release the "Midnight Ride of Paul Revere" and accordingly he wrote his exchange requesting that same be booked.

Three days before the feature was to be shown Manager Mack got busy on the telephone, talked with the principal of every school in Syracuse, told them that the picture was something that every school boy and girl should be permitted to see and requested that the announcement be made to the children in their rooms by their teachers.

A few of the principals refused for various reasons, but the majority were pleased to comply, and in some instances expressed their appreciation of the fact that the motion picture people were trying to cater to the school children.

Two days before the showing Manager Mack secured the loan of a Gatling gun, old rifles, guns and various other war implements from the local armory which he placed on exhibit in his lobby. In front of the cannon appeared a neat sign:

WANTED! A LIVE WIRE!

There is a good chance for a "live wire" exhibitor to locate advantageously in a "live wire" suburb of Cincinnati. Citizens of College Hill, which is located about eight miles from the heart of the city, have demonstrated that they would welcome the coming of a motion picture theatre. The College Hill Boosters Club, a civic organization, has met this demand by giving its own picture show.

Before College Hill was annexed to Cincinnati, it transacted its own municipal business in a town hall. The auditorium of this building has now been converted into a motion picture theatre, and on Wednesday and Saturday evenings of each week a show is given for the benefit of residents in the suburb. Famous Players Obtains Rights to “Bella Donna”

THE Famous Players Film Company will shortly begin an elaborate film production of “Bella Donna,” dramatized from the celebrated novel of Robert Hichens, by J. B. Fagan, in which Pauline Frederick will be presented in the title role. Miss Frederick and supporting company will be sent to Florida for the exteriors, the atmospheric and geographical conditions of the Southern Atlantic coast being ideally suited for the environment of the play. The film version will be produced under the direction of Edwin S. Porter and Hugo Ford.

“Bella Donna” brought stellar distinction to Mrs. Pat Campbell in England, and it was also in this play that Mme. Alla Nazimova won one of her earliest American triumphs. With the thrilling story itself, the exotic atmosphere of Egypt and the desert, the magic of the mysterious and sinister Nile, so strangely like the dangerously beautiful and alluring heroine, “Bella Donna” promises much that is valuable in a photoplay.

Pauline Frederick will play the part of Ruby Chepstow, known to her admirers as “Bella Donna,” who, falling in love with a handsome and wealthy son of Egypt, deliberately tries to destroy the man who loves and trusts her, and who has given her her name, in order to be free to wed the Egyptian prince. How the husband is saved by a friend who visits Egypt and unravels the deadly plot, and how a poetic justice is meted out to the beautiful siren, who is at last enmeshed in the toils she herself had woven, is picturesquely and grippingly developed in this unusual drama.

Pauline Frederick, who has won a personal triumph in the current success, “Innocent,” is under contract with the Famous Players Film Company for her exclusive motion picture services.

New Year Brings Changes in Universal Program

Tuesday Crystal, Wednesday Joker and Saturday Frontier to Be Discontinued—“Big U” Brand, Second L-KO and Powers Replace Them

BEGINNING with the week of January 4, 1915, the following changes in the Universal program will go into effect:

The Tuesday Crystal will be discontinued after the release of December 29, and in its place will be released the new Universal brand, the “Big U,” featuring Sidney Eyres in one company and Murdoch MacQuarrie in another company.

The Tuesday Nestor, which has heretofore been a drama, will be confined to comedies only beginning with the release of January 5. This new company will be directed by Eddie Lyons and will feature Billie Rhodes and Jack Dillon.

The Wednesday Joker will be discontinued and replaced with the second release of the L-KO, featuring Billie Ritchie, Pathe Lehrman, Gertrude Selby and Louise Orth. This goes into effect January 6.

The Thursday Imp will be transferred to Friday, and will be replaced with the second release of the “Big U,” featuring Sydney Eyres in one company and Murdoch MacQuarrie in another, same to go into effect January 7.

The Friday Powers will be transferred to Saturday, and will be replaced with the Imp beginning with Friday, January 8.

AGNES VERNON'S QUICK RISE TO STARDOM

AGNES Vernon, who entered the extra list of the Universal West Coast studios last February and is now one of the most popular leads of the company, was born in Oregon in 1894.

On the removal of her family to Chicago she attended a convent in that city. She received the rest of her education in a similar institution in Kansas City, where she remained until the family went back west in November, 1913.

In less than eight months Miss Vernon has risen to a place of prominence in the Nestor dramas under the direction of Charles Giblyn.

Using one of the most elaborate sets ever employed in the studio of the Vitagraph Company, the first scenes in Charles L. Gaskill's latest picture, "The Mansion" at G street and Erie avenue, Philadelphia, was burned to the ground under the direction of the Philadelphia fire department. The fire scenes will be used in George W. Terwilliger's new drama, "The Black Sheep."

The mansion, a two-story and a half affair, was over one hundred years old. In its day it was the center of many social gaieties and scores of distinguished men have accepted the hospitality for which Philadelphia is famous under its roof. For the past twenty-five years, however, it had been known as the haunted house and many weird legends were told concerning the spectres that dwelt therein.

In order to complete a street it was necessary for the city to pull down the building. The Lubin Company made this much easier by purchasing the old mansion and burning it down. Several thousand spectators watched the spectacle.

MISS McCoy PRAISED AS THE MADONNA

Gertrude McCoy has received a number of commendatory letters from clergymen who were invited to a studio showing of the Edison "The Birth of Our Saviour," released December 19. In that film Miss McCoy appears as the Virgin Mary and the ministers are warm in their praise of what they term "a highly spiritual portrayal of a difficult character to depict."

Company of Sixty Will Enact "Runaway June"

THERE are more than sixty of capable actors and actresses, chosen with special regard for the requirements of the story to be told on the film, who will appear in the initial installment of Runaway June, the novel written especially for the Reliance Motion Picture Company, by George Randolph Chester, writer of the Wallingford stories and his wife, Lillian Chester. The scenario on which the fifteen installment photoplay of Runaway June is based by Marc Edmund Jones, and Oscar Eagle is the director.

George Randolph Chester has apparently loved writing about, will be impersonated by Miss Myra Brooks, who formerly distinguished herself by her work in the company of the late Richard Mansfield. Winifred Burke will be seen as the slye and interesting Iris Blethering, June's closest friend, and Mademoiselle Evelyn Duno has come all the way from Paris to play the part of Marie, maid in the Moore household, and incidentally afford herself and her parents, left penniless by three sons who have died for France a living.

LUBIN BURNS DOWN ANCIENT MANSION FOR PLAY

The Lubin Company gave a large crowd of interested spectators another thrill when the famous "Old Lippincott Mansion" at G street and Erie avenue, Philadelphia, was burned to the ground under the direction of the Philadelphia fire department. The fire scenes will be used in George W. Terwilliger's new drama, "The Black Sheep."

The mansion, a two-story and a half affair, was over one hundred years old. In its day it was the center of many social gaieties and scores of distinguished men have accepted the hospitality for which Philadelphia is famous under its roof. For the past twenty-five years, however, it had been known as the haunted house and many weird legends were told concerning the spectres that dwelt therein.

In order to complete a street it was necessary for the city to pull down the building. The Lubin Company made this much easier by purchasing the old mansion and burning it down. Several thousand spectators watched the spectacle.

NORMA PHILLIPS AND "RUNAWAY JUNE" COMPANY

One of the more important roles in the play, that of Gilbert Bly, the man with the black Vandyke, in the wake of whose motor all the crowd comes streaming, will be embodied for screen purposes by Arthur Donaldson, who will be remembered from the cast of "The Prince of Pilsen."
In and Out of Los Angeles Studios

Special to Motion Picture News
Los Angeles, Dec. 13.

The ether of Los Angeles film colony atmosphere is at the present time charged with rumors of every description, but so far no receiving station has been discovered that has successfully received the facts. As the contract of Charlie Chaplin expires December 15, that of Ford Sterling and some even bigger lights, there is much speculation here. It would require an entire edition of Motion Picture News to tell all the stories to be heard, and then no doubt margins would be appropriated. Sufficient to say there is not a statement to be had at the offices of the companies.

Christmas festivities are planned on every hand. Producing companies will have Santa Claus come with his bags of playthings, and in some instances the entire stock companies of studios are making preparation for a big event of one kind or another. Every studio will be deserted save for the watchmen.

Willis L. Robbards, managing editor of St. Louis Motion Picture Company studio at Santa Paula, sixty miles north of Los Angeles, recently spent a part of a week here organizing a new company for the production of comedies in addition to the western Frontier brand dramas for the Universal program. Hal Clemens was engaged as director; Lillian Hamilton, former ingenue for Usona company, as leading woman, and several other players.

Mr. Clemens will play his own leads. Phil Walsh, for the past year connected with the U scenario department, was employed as scenario editor, and leaves a record of 61 scenarios, from slap-stick to psychological problem plays included, making up a total of 87,600 feet of negative, written within the year. Mr. Walsh is a trooper of the first water—he had charge of stage direction for the Andrew Mack world tour several years ago, and since entering the celluloid realm, has found his stage experience of very great value.

"Love and Water"

"Love and Water" is a Sterling put over this week by Director Dave Kirkland, featuring Lloyd Ingraham and Dot Gould. All the exteriors were made at Hollenbeck Park, Los Angeles, where a skateboard, a boat ride, an accident and the wife of the street sweeper rescuing the drowning dandy brings forth situations of a comedy character.

The first John Brennon picture of the Sterling release on the Universal program will be "The German Bowler," personally directed during the past week by Fred Balshofer, manager of the Sterling company. Louise Fazenda plays the feminine lead. By the aid of soft soap the German defeats his adversary and adds a real novelty to the film.

Little four-year-old Olive Johnson, leading woman, is again with the Sterling juvenile company directed by Robert Thornby, and last week played the name role in "Olive's Love Affair," working opposite Billie Jacobs, who is proud of the fact that he is six months older. It may be added that the kiddies have worked up a real romance, and when complications arose—in the scene plot—which caused a separation for a few scenes, Olive was real peevish and displayed her first temperamental attack.

Harry W. Wulze has been added to the scenario staff of the Sterling company, after two years' success with several other companies.

Eddie Fallo, for several years with the Barnum & Bailey circus, where he was successful in twice daily catching his partner of the trapeze act after he had turned three somersaults in the air, has been added to the stock company of the Francis-Forde special feature company, now making the six-reeler "The Campbells Are Coming," and will make a 110-foot leap from a tower into a net.

Universal Studios Help Celebration

Lankersham, a town of four thousand, celebrated the switching on of a new street lighting system for their village with a festival and carnival, Saturday evening, December 12, all the attractions for which were furnished by the several Universal producing companies gratis. A big feature was the Wild West Circus put on by the Henry McRea 101 Bison Company with animals from the U minor. Next Monday the Henry McRea company, with twenty or thirty extra people, will leave for Truckee, Cal., to secure "snow stuff" for the four-reel Universal feature "Ridgeway of Montana." The players taking the leading parts in this are William Clifford, Rex de Rosselli, Sherman Bainbridge, Marie Walcamp and Lulu Warrenton. They will spend several weeks in the high altitude where the snow is now several feet deep, and in all probability will be the only L. A. photoplay company to see a white Christmas.

Series five and six of the "Master Key" is finished and the mechanical wonder used in this, the brick circular room within a brick circular wall, is being torn away from the center of the U studio. But a few scenes for the seventh and eighth are yet to be made. In this many of the scenes will be made at Beverly Hills Hotel, located on the top of a range of foot hills, and familiar to all Southern California winter guests as a most pic-

Typical Scenes from Some of the Coming Releases on the Universal Program

Burton King with Universal

Burton King, director and general manager of the Usona company, which made sixty odd pictures for foreign release and was forced to close on account of conditions in Europe brought on by the war, has been engaged by Manager Bernstein of the Universal company, and is making his first picture for the reviving globe brand. The title of this is "Roses and Thorns," in which Edna Maison, L. S. Reynolds and Ray Gallagher will play the principal parts. The scenario is by Helen Bailey and has a decidedly novel climax.

Journeying to Cario, Egypt, by the atmosphere route, the Jacques Jaccard company is this week filming number six of the Terrance O'Rourke series.

The Sidney Ayers company is making a Western picture, "The Sheriff of Shasta," in which tattooed stars, placed on the arms of brothers by an old sailor, serve to identify each to the other when in later years one becomes the sheriff, and the other induced to take part in the robbery of a stage, refuses at the last minute and is about to be convicted on circumstantial evidence when one of the gang makes a confession.

The Rex company is filming "Other People's Children," a satire on the life led by the wealthy, in which Gretchen Lederer plays a leading part. The cast includes Frank Lloyd, the director, as a

"Changed Lives" Produced by Turner

The three-reeler "Changed Lives," written and being produced by Director General Otis Turner, will be completed by the latter part of this week. In this Anna Little plays the leading part, that of an adventuress who, when unsuccessful, becomes a Red Cross nurse located at an improvised hospital at Antwerp.

At the death of another nurse, killed by an exploding shell, she learns of a valuable estate left to the stricken companion, and decided to lay claim to it after sending evidence from letters and papers left by the nurse.

In proving her claim she employs a young attorney (Herbert Rawlinson) and succeeds in holding the legacy when the butler (William Worthington), to hide the theft of a come-back because the jew-ministers an overdose of headache medicine to the grandmother, who is about to expose the imposture, and the elderly lady (Laura Oakley) dies from the effect.

The Christie-Lyons company is staging a burlesque on the jewel robbery, in which a newspaper reporter (Eddie Lyons), on filling a forgotten assignment, has an opportunity to play the part of a sluth and catches the thieves before the real detective. (Lee Moran) has ample opportunity to verify his clues secured by his scientific method and he comes out a bad second.

In another Nester comedy now being filmed by Al Christie, "Pop" Manley, the oldest stock member of the L. A. film colony, is featured as the minister who gives a barn dance and old-fashioned basket auction to raise funds to pay off the mortgage on the church, which is held by the deacon, who insists that payment be of a come-back because the pastor will not lend his aid to the deacon in a love match. The deacon bids a hundred for the basket he thinks the property of the one he loves and finding it belongs to an old spinner, to use the title, "The Deacon Swore."

Lee Moran in Funny Role

Lee Moran has just completed playing the part of a spinner in such a realistic manner that visitors at the U studio, who saw "her" smoke a cigarette on the stage, with hundreds all about, were shocked, and left with the feeling that motion picture players were surely the limit. The title of this is "A Maid by Proxy."

That speaks-for-itself gown of Fay Tincher's is being photographed again as the comedienne is appearing as Ethel, the stenographer, in William the XIV, of the Komic series, titled "Ethel's First Case." She falls in love (again) with the young man she learns is married and brutally treats his wife. Ethel then aids the distressed wife, secure a client for her employer, Tod Browning, the attorney, and even makes faces at the low-down thing that flirts with her.

Donald Cline, the Majestic-Reliance director, is again at the studio after an absence of several weeks, due to a dentist splintering his jaw bone in extracting a tooth. He is now directing "A Night's Adventure," in which Howord Gaye plays the part of a sojourning physician in a small town, and finds a section man badly injured. The injured man is cared for, and after the incident the M. D., for want of recreation, takes a flyer at faro and breaks the bank.

The gamblers plan to rob him as he goes to the railroad station, but their plans are destroyed by the appearance of the section man's daughter. Walter Long has an important part, and one of the features will be a rough and tumble fight.

Spottiswoode Aitken in New Majestic

Spottiswoode Aitken is being featured in a two-reel Majestic, "The Old Fisherman's Story," a heart interest story being

MR. AND MRS. GEORGE ARLIS AND D. W. GRIFFITH AT LOS ANGELES

Love, hatred and revenge are portrayed in "A Lost Receipt," written by Frank E. Woods, for the Reliance release and produced last week by a cast composed of Eugene Pallette, Anna May Walthall and George Cosgrove. The plot hinges about a receipt which is lost and later found when being used by a little girl to curl her doll's hair. An especially constructed factory building was burned for one of the scenes of this feature.

The Cyrus Townsend Brady story, "The Child of God," is being filmed under the direction of John G. Adolfi for a Reliance release of four reels. This is a live story of the West and in the film version the part of the rancher will be played by Sam de Grasse, and the sweet-heart by Frances Billington.

This is the story of a young western man who scorces religion and for that reason the girl he loves refuses to receive his attention. Coincidently he is forced to read the Bible when he is pressed into service as a godfather to a baby whose mother is dying. This incident causes a change in his life. He becomes a God-fearing man with an object in life, and fights for success. This picture will have a very superior cast throughout and every effort is being made to produce a western picture of exceptional merit.

General Manager D. W. Griffith has advanced George Seigmann, who has been playing with him for the past year, to the position of director, and he is now making his first picture. "Vengeance in the West" is scheduled to be a two-reel Majestic release. The scenario is from the stub pen of Frank E. Woods and has to do with a country girl, played by Billie West, who is tricked into a mock marriage by a city youth, who afterwards marries another girl. Seigmann, has become the world's goods in the name of her father. The country girl plans and secures revenge. Others in the cast are W. E. Lawrence and Florence Crawford.

Dorothy Gish Out of Danger

Dorothy Gish, who was run down by a speeding automobile on Thanksgiving Day, and dragged almost fifty feet before the car could be stopped, is not out of danger, and her physician states she will be able to resume her work in from thirty to sixty days. Besides her foot being painfully crushed when the wheel ran over it, the little photoplayer sustained a deep cut in her side and was bruised from head to foot.

W. M. Ritchie, former newspaper man of Chicago, who has been a free lance scenario writer for the past two years, and is present editor of "The Script," the official publication of the Photoplay Author's League of America, has accepted the position of scenario editor of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company, following the filing of the resignation of F. M. Wiltermood.

Mr. Wiltermood will devote the next few months to the writing of a book dealing with experiences in the making of moving pictures from a series of articles he prepared for a well known magazine, sale of which has been contracted.

All animals of the Selig Zoo being used in vaudeville have been called in that they may be at the zoo for the public opening. "Princess Olga and Her Five Leopards" have arrived home from a tour of nine months, and other animals are expected from Australia and the East during the next two weeks. Work on the $50,000 entrance to the grounds is being done by three shifts of men working day and night and Sundays, in the hope that it will be possible to fulfill Col. W. N. Selig's expressed desire that everything be completed on the opening day.

The Norval MacGregor company is filming the magazine story "Come and Take That Elephant Away," which has to do with the superstitions of a wealthy miner, who buys a medicine show outfit because of a dream that it will be a two-reel Western comedy.

Two James Oliver Curwood stories are being filmed at Selig Jungle Zoo. Tom Santschi is directing "The Great Experiment," a story of a wealthy bachelor who cares for an orphan's child after seeing the mother killed in an accident. The sets will represent London, Bombay and aboard an ocean liner, and the story brings out the fact that all people appreciate kindness, but some fail to make a show of their appreciation. Bessie Eyton plays opposite Mr. Santschi in this subject.

Story of Corrupt Politics

The other Curwood story is in charge of F. J. Grandon. This has been named "Retribution," and is a story of corrupt politics, in which Edith Johnson and Lamar Johnstone play leads, with Franklin Hall as the huck-back, who is like the Irishman of the by-gone melodramas—he saves all.

A two-reel comedy drama, "Lonely Lovers," is being produced by E. A. Martin, with William Stowell, Edwin Wallock, Marion Warner and Ada Gleson playing leads. This has to do with the unfortunate experiences of legitimate stage players at a theatrical boarding house.

At the Selig Edenacle studio "The Lady of the Cyclanens" is being filmed by E. J. LaSaint. This is from the story of the same name by Maybelle Heikes Justice which is now being published and is of a heart interest nature. The leading parts are taken by Stella Roseta and Guy Oliver. The first four-reel feature of the Harry Pollard American company, "The Quest," was finished last week. The company spent ten days on Channel Islands, about twenty miles from the shore near Santa Barbara, where many of the exteriors were made. In this Mr. Pollard and Margarita Fischer play the leads and are supported by Joseph Singleton, William Carroll and Robyn Adair.

Director Joseph de Grasse, of the U. Rex brand, is playing the lead character part in filming "Where the Forest Ends," a western story of the early days, in which fade-ins show colonial day scenes. The cast includes Pauline Bush, William Dowlan and Lon Chaney.

Savages in "Last Chapter"

Many of the fine distinctions on which much labor is spent in producing a picture are actually lost to the average beholder, but William D. Taylor and Carlyle Blackwell do not think that any detail is too slight for their careful consideration. The band of Damawa warriors used in the "Last Chapter" are typical of the stalwart, blood thirsty fighters of the West African coast. All of them show the retreat of the front, that nose and short kinky hair, of the pure negro blood of the West African coast. The man picked out for chief bore his insignia of office. The band upon his forehead, topped off with a plume, characterizes the height of leadership. Minor officers in the tribe are permitted to wear one or the other of these, but only blood relations of the king himself may flaunt the true scarlet plume of royalty.

The territory in which "The Last Chapter" is localized is that section of Africa stretching from the Guinean Coast inland to Lake Chad, which lies almost on the southern border of the Sahara Desert, and the intervening territory traversed by the story of the picture lies almost under the equator.

"American" Actor Near Death

"Waiting" is the name of a two-reel spectacular picture now completed at the American studio, Santa Barbara, under the direction of Henry Otto. The scenario called for a land slide which was put on in a very realistic manner. In fact it was only by the quick witted work of Mr. Otto, that one of the players, George Fields, was not badly injured, if not killed.

Field was doing his part while the camera was being operated and did not know of the coming of a great rock. By signaling, the director advised the player to change his position, and thus led him away from the path of the tumbling boulder. Mr. Otto is now putting on a one-reel Indian and cowboy story in the mountains near Santa Barbara. The Masterpiece players spent a day recently on the Pacific ocean, about a barge leased for the day, where one of the Little Joker's jokes of the "Truth Wagon," the December release of the company, was filmed. This consisted of John Ross (Max Figman) inducing all his friends to leave their ladies at a ball and go to see a prize fight he had arranged. The fight is pulled off on a boat and the principals were Roy Stewart of the Masterpiece stock company, and Bud Willis, former sparring partner of Jeffries, and a professional puglist now in training for a ring bout the latter part of December. The forty-five players, all in evening clothes, caused much wonder among passengers of other boats passing during the day.
ROLFE ENGAGES IRENE WARFIELD

Pretty Irene Warfield, formerly leading ingenue with Essanay and latterly playing opposite Robert Edeson in Belasco's "The Girl I Left Behind Me," was engaged this week by B. A. Rolfe to appear opposite Orrin Johnson in the production of "Satan Sanderson," which will be the next release of the Rolfe Photo Plays Company throughout the Aelo Corporation.

Miss Warfield, on a recent occasion when she was being sought after by a producing company, and was introduced to David Belasco, was the recipient of a sincere compliment from the great dramatist.

"Young lady," said the stage wizard, "You have been specially endowed by Providence with an abundance of beauty and your face, in addition to being beautiful, possesses that rare charm, activity and animation so seldom seen in great beauties." Last year Miss Warfield played the two leading roles in "Within the Law" for several weeks.

The actress later decided that she preferred to remain in the east and it was under this specification that she was engaged by B. A. Rolfe.

Mr. Rolfe is considering a second company which will do their production work on the coast, in a studio now being completed and it is thought Miss Warfield will become a permanent feature with the Rolfe interests.

BEST OF ITS KIND

EMPIRE PHOTO PLAYS, Storm Lake, Iowa.

Editor Motion Picture News,
New York City:

Dear: I have been receiving your paper for some time, and the worst thing that I can say of the "News" is that it is one of the best of its kind that I ever read.

With best wishes for the success of your paper, I am respectfully,

K. MORELAND.
In view of the fact that the life blood of the industry is the continual supply of fresh, virile scenarios, the great majority of which are written by "free lances," it is essential that the photo playwrights throughout the country, as well as the staff writers should get a true perspective of the activities of The National Board of Censorship.

Producing directors have learned by hard bumps against the adamant that this and that may be, and that and this may not be; yet still they continue, in an unfortunately large number of picture plays, to insert scenes and "business" contrary to these permissions and prohibitions.

Inasmuch as the Censorship Board is maintained almost entirely by the manufacturers, as a real insurance against the printing and distribution of expensive copies which might be thrown back upon their hands by the black-listing of smaller local bodies and the ever critical public who scrutinize the screen in 17,000 photoplay theatres, it behooves the scenario writer and the director to insure his own certainty of financial return and increasing artistic reputation, by thoroughly understanding the attitude of that critical Board.

To get down to "brass tacks," it is simply a case then in which the scenario writer and the director can increase the value of their own work by keeping the rules continually in mind, and, "beating the censor to it".

Censorable Details Unnecessary

To declare that risky situations, gruesome details, exposition of the methods of criminals are necessary for dramatic punch shows a complete misunderstanding of the possibilities of "struggle," the fundamental of every real play, whether on the screen or the stage.

Only the other day, a prominent publisher said to me, "The people are sick and tired of domestic muck-raking, as well as political. They want the old-fashioned kind of theme—sweet characters, decent heart, interest, and a pleasant after-taste in plays and books."

"There are millions of combinations possible with the clean elements, and I tell you the fashion for prurient, morbid subjects is out of date."

I lie not a publisher of poems, essays and religious works, but makes his money from popular priced fifty cent editions. He should know.

The essential matter, with which the Censorship Board deals, are several times low and suggestive scenes; wanton and brutal murders or attacks; excessive indulgence in liquor, gambling and the other evils of "fast living" without adequate punishment; criminal methods as in robbery, forgery and the like by which the acquisitive minds of young people may be instructed and imbued with a desire for imitation; themes offensive to good taste, in matters of race, religion and politics.

"Behind the Times" Scenario Writers

So, the scenario writer who lingers in the cheaper melodramas, sex thrillers, vice mongering is trying to reap a harvest from a field already trimmed to the stubble. His themes must keep pace with the fashions and the demand of the universal board of censorship— the patrons who pay the nickels, the dimes and the quarters.

Never before in the history of the business has there been such opportunity for true artistry in the development of theme and action. The production of classic plays, poems and stories, as well as the staging of all manner of famous modern theatrical successes has educated the photoplay patrons to a demand for higher grade stories, interpretation and even photography.

Every scenario writer, every director, despite the vaunted value of loyalty to the "firm," is working primarily for himself. As a business proposition, every cent saved by avoiding enforced alteration in a costly production lends added value to the scenario and to the picture into which it was developed.

From a purely mercenary standpoint, every director and playwright should have in his possession the pamphlet of rules and standards, which will be sent upon the receipt of a written request by the secretary of the National Board of Censorship, 7th Fifth avenue, New York City.

Censor Board Will Advise

From this purely mercenary standpoint, as well, the manufacturer or his scenario editor would do well to insure the general "passability" of a story on which there might be the smallest possible doubt, by sending a copy of it to one of the secretaries of the Board.

The organization is glad to give its advice on possibly dangerous points and thus save a great deal of money in advance, without cost to the director or manufacturer.

The Censorship Board is not a body organized for the criticism of the literary, dramatic or artistic qualities of plays, but this service to producers, "accessory before the fact," while not a guarantee of immunity after the production, is of no little value in many instances. A scenario by itself may have no objectionable features; the director in his visualization of its scenes may add touches here and there which will necessitate cutting of a most unfortunate nature, later on. For this reason, an acquaintance with the Board's purposes, methods and development should be maintained.

The executive officers welcome friendly, personal co-operation with the directors and the playwrights, for their work is essentially altruistic in the finest sense; it is a defense of the moralities and sensibilities of the millions of theatre patrons, and its power has been so thoroughly developed that it affords an invaluable protection to the film producers.

What the Board Has Done

When it is considered that the National Board of Censorship has been the protecting bulwark of the film manufacturer against the dangers of a legal censorship, and the almost certain growth of grafting among political appointees in the case of state or federal control, the director and playwright may consider himself not harbored by the sensible standards and sympathetic attitude shown by the executive officers and the members of the General Committee, made up of cultured men and women, who have been qualified to represent the finest and broadest ideals of the American people.

The development of the programs, features and serials based on lavish outlays of money, a highly organized, creative and interpretative technique and a commercial system of distribution and sales which ranks with the biggest factors of so-called "Big Business," with the continual stimulus of keen competition between the large number of producing companies, means survival of the fittest.

Owen Moore Goes to Bosworth

Owen Moore is now with Bosworth, Inc., coming from New York to play opposite Elsie Janis in her new comedy drama, "Betty in Search of a Thrill."

Mr. Moore has distinguished himself as a screen artist, and in this new photoplay by Miss Janis he has every opportunity for impressively clever acting.

Proud of Excelsior Camera

Harry Handworth, director of the Excelsior Feature Film Co., said recently: "I am not a little proud of the photography in my pictures. In every picture produced by the Excelsior starting in with 'The Path Forbidden,' continuing in 'When Fate Leads Trump' and 'In the Shadow,' the photography has been of the highest grade, and I am busily engaged on some lighting effects for my next picture."

Lowry Returns from Coast

Ira M. Lowry, general manager of the Lowry Company, during the past six weeks has been on a trip to the Pacific coast, has returned to the home plant. Mr. Lowry gives glowing accounts of the development of the Los Angeles studio.
Revival of the Censorship Question Makes Organization Imperative

By the time Motion Picture News is in the hands of its readers this week, the eyes of all associated with the film industry will be focused upon the Supreme Court of the United States, where the appeal of the Mutual Film Corporation from the dismissal by the United States Federal Court for the Northern District of Ohio of the injunction against the Ohio censors, is scheduled to be heard.

Once again, as last spring, it is time for everyone whose prosperity depends in any way upon motion pictures, to realize the momentous consequences of the action which will be taken by the nation’s supreme tribunal.

* * *

The Federal judges of the District Court in their decision last April, held, it will be remembered, that the charge, made by the Mutual, of unconstitutionality against the state censorship law was unfounded—that the State of Ohio, in creating a board to supervise and censor motion picture films, acted within the lawful limits of its police prerogatives.

The well-known reluctance of an inferior Federal court to enter into a discussion of the constitutionality of any law was reflected in the bench’s decision. In effect, it politely passed the real problem along to the highest court of the land. The Ohio judges contented themselves with pronouncing the state within its technical rights, and avoided all the graver and more radical issues.

* * *

What the decision of the Supreme Court will be no one can forecast with certainty.

The tendency of that body of recent years, however, as markedly reflected in numerous decisions, has been to give broadest possible construction to the police power of the state and to place no limits to its exercise of any kind.

This may foreshadow a verdict, upholding the Ohio law, and vindicating its constitutionality.

To expect such an outcome would be no more than logical, in view of the manifest disposition of the court on all questions of state and municipal guardianship of the public welfare.

The film manufacturer and exhibitor, in the event of such a verdict, has only one other resource—to commence a campaign in every state where censorship laws now exist for their repeal by the state legislatures.

* * *

Fortunately for both manufacturer and exhibitor, they have a powerful and efficient ally in the National Board of Censorship.

That body has already under way a campaign in Ohio which can hardly fail of culminating in the repeal of the law now on the statute books of the state. Exhibitors and the National Board are working shoulder to shoulder, and the law which M. A. Neff—which the Mutual and everyone else inconvenienced by it have to thank for its enactment—foisted upon the exhibitors of Ohio, is soon likely to be a dead letter.

Events are shaping themselves in similar fashion in Pennsylvania.

There Fred Herrington in the West, Ben Zerr and half a dozen others in the East, are working night and day to perfect an organization which shall represent the united strength of Pennsylvania motion picture men, and to whose demands the Harrisburg legislators will listen with more than passive respect.

* * *

The revival of the censorship peril ought to drive home to every exhibitor with redoubled force the imperative need of organization.

Relief is not to be looked for with hopefulness from the Supreme Court.

Without being unduly pessimistic, it will be well for manufacturer and exhibitor to look for a clean bill of health for the censors from that body.

The sooner they begin to arm themselves for a repeal campaign, the more completely prepared they will be to take up the fight the moment it becomes necessary.

* * *

And only an organization can deal with a state legislature.

Any individual exhibitor, or any number of individual exhibitors, would be laughed out of the legislative chamber, if they came on such an errand. Politics is conducted solely by organization, and the politician does not understand anything but organization.

It is the only way to gain his respect and attention.

Again be it said, that the exhibitor has a powerful and efficient means of offense and defense, ready to his hand—the Motion Picture Exhibitors’ League.

The exhibitors of the United States can convert that league into the most formidable organization of its size—an organization powerful out of all proportion to its size—to be found anywhere in the world.

Their undivided and unanimous support is all that is necessary.
Inceville Will Soon Become a City

First Step Indicated by Action of the Government in Appointing a Postmaster, the Studio Population Has Made Such an Increase

INCEVILLE, the plant and environs of Thomas H. Ince's production for the New York Motion Picture Corporation, is to become a city. Such is the important announcement that has just come out of that part of the California coast where Kay Bee, Broncho and Domino films are made.

Already authorization has been received from the government for the permanent establishment of a post office. That in itself constitutes a big step in the organization of a city. Plans are being drawn for the erection of a building. A postmaster has been appointed. An additional route is in the process of formation and mail schedules are being arranged.

The county has taken cognizance of Inceville by reconstructing the shore road, beginning at the Santa Monica canyon and extending all the way to Topango. Work is still progressing on the job, and it is likely that within another week the men will have their scrapers and oilers, satisfied that they have made a perfect highway.

County officials have done even more. They have consented to consider the establishment at Inceville of a voting precinct or two and possibly within a short time we will be hearing of the Inceville school district. Police protection and fire fighting facilities, in addition to those of the plant itself, present with their entrance also, and that auspicious event may be accompanied by the intrusion of a street car line.

As far as the company is concerned it is taking great pains to meet these forthcoming improvements in the proper way. To get away to a good start an election will be held at which the various officials necessary to an up-to-date municipality will be elected.

A brand new power house has been installed and electricity now is penetrating the darkest recesses of the adjoining canyons. A mammoth blacksmithing shop is nearly completed—and when it is the herds of horses need not be taken to Santa Monica to be shod.

At present transit facilities are confined to a street car line that runs from Santa Monica to what is known as the Long Wharf—at a distance of several miles from the plant. That means that the company's stages must meet people every morning and convey them to the car every night. Frequent delays in the service have given Mr. Ince the idea of erecting a hotel, so that permanent residence may be enjoyed, if desired.

Picked Cast for Fox Feature, "The Idler"

Charles Richman, Catherine Countiss, Walter Hitchcock, Claire Whitney, Maude Turner Gordon, W. T. Carleton and Stuart Holmes in Haddon Chambers' Play

Seldom, if indeed ever, has a more competent or better-known cast been gathered for a production. The Fox people have selected to present the William Fox feature extraordinary, "The Idler," to be released through the Box Office Attraction Company, based on the highly successful and dramatic play by C. Haddon Chambers, one of England's foremost dramatists, which, when presented on the boards, was one of the most talked of dramas of the day.

Headed by Charles Richman, a star whose fame is equally great on each side of the Atlantic, it includes Catherine Countiss, an actress of unusual charm and ability; Walter Hitchcock, a finished artist of marked power; Claire Whitney, a beautiful and accomplished leading woman; Maude Turner Gordon, W. T. Carleton and Stuart Holmes, all of whose names are prime favorites with admirers of good stage work.

Mr. Richman as Mark Cross takes full advantage of his opportunity to develop this character, which is one of the strongest in which he has appeared. Mr. Richman's long association with Augustin Daly, at the latter's famous playhouse, where Mr. Richman played opposite Ada Rehan, and his subsequent experiences, including a tour in "The Revelers," a successful play written by himself, equip him admirably for the role.

The same may be said of Miss Countiss, who plays Lady Harding. Miss Countiss is known to players of every considerable city in the United States. She has had a successful stage career almost from the moment when she left a convent and took up the stage as a voca tion. Miss Whitney appeared in the leading role of "Life's Shop Window," and has played important parts in scores of big feature photo plays before she had a thorough training on the legitimate stage.

Walter Hitchcock is another actor whose experience and talent make his work stand out in everything he does. Mr. Hitchcock is a graduate of Leland Stanford, Cal., University, and was a champion hurdle race-come in his college days. He has done much noteworthy work on the stage. Stuart Holmes played a leading part, opposite Miss Whitney, in "Life's Shop Window," and is a great favorite, a position his ability fully entitles him to.

WHAT EXHIBITORS SHOULD KNOW

THE NEW CRYSTAL THEATRE, Flandreau, S. D.
Editor Motion Picture News, New York City.

Dear Sir: I am certainly reading the "Motion Picture News" and find it not only interesting to an exhibitor, but that it contains many things he should know.

Wishing you the best of success, I am very truly yours,

P. R. MATSON.
The Exhibitors' Forum

What Exhibitors Owe to Their Organization

Editor, Motion Picture News, New York City.

Dear Sir: Can the needs of the motion picture exhibitors and the accomplishments of the exhibitors' association be harmonized so that the organization can approach a perfect score?

Considering first the needs, we must decide what are actual legitimate needs. Often we think of something we think we should have and we don't think of it more. We think perhaps the association could get it. Real applied study might reveal that it is not a need, but rather a wish or possibly a suggestion.

The exhibitor in my opinion wants only justice and a right to carry on a legitimate, clean and progressive business. This right includes many things. What one exhibitor thinks he needs another thinks is not needed at all. Only by friendly and earnest deliberation can we decide what the needs are. I believe we are agreed that the exhibitor should not be subject to an unreasonable tax, that he should not be required to do things that the old school theatres are not required to do and that he should have theuble back of him in any just effort. He should have consideration and just prices from the film companies and should have fair treatment, even boosting from every other exhibitor. These things are reasonable. There are many other things.

Now as to these things, his association can accomplish every one of them. By having efficient officers demands for fair treatment can be secured from all sources. By having officers of good judgment backed solidly by every exhibitor member, a favorable impression can be gained among the people.

Sometimes the exhibitor does not take himself or his association seriously enough. We should consider this business as a on a par with any other business in the country. The exhibitor should feel his own responsibilities toward the people and then the people can be made to know that he is a responsible man entitled to consideration.

Let every exhibitor consider all sides of a suggestion before he asks the association to take it up. Be sure that it will benefit all and then he has a right to expect every member to back it.

Lastly, every exhibitor should consider the association as a branch of his own business, and give it the same attention that he would give any department. The association is the exhibitor's bank for the supply of energy and life to the motion picture business. He should expect to deposit as well as to draw and he should give it the dignity he gives the bank that keeps his checking account.

Yours truly,

JOIN YOUR STATE LEAGUE!

THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS LEAGUE OF AMERICA

Oklahoma State Branch
Muskogee, Okla., Dec. 6.

Dear Sir: Will you kindly publish the attached communication, which is self-explanatory?

Thanking you in advance, I am with best wishes,

Yours truly,

L. W. BROPHY, Sec. M. P. E. L. of A.

Oklahoma Exhibitors: It is to be hoped that you paid your War Tax promptly within the time prescribed, otherwise you will have a penalty of fifty per cent. added. Uncle Sam never does things by halves, and in this instance, he has no intention of overlooking anyone. When it became necessary to raise the War Tax, Congress at once decided that theatre proprietors should contribute liberally. The first declaration was that all theatres, large and small, throughout the United States should pay $100, this amount was finally reduced to a minimum of $25, graduating from that to $100, according to seating capacity for each theatre.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors’ League of America, through our president, Mr. Pearce, Fulton Brylawski and others, worked with the Congressional Committee, and were finally successful in having the tax reduced.

It looks as though this one act would be sufficient consideration that every exhibitor in the United States would be desirous of having his name placed on the roles of an organization that is continually working for the betterment of the Motion Picture Industry.

Remember, there is not only National Legislation, but State Legislation that is continually being projected by persons who are not financially interested in the business. The following, which I clipped from the Daily Oklahoman of this date, is self-explanatory:

"An Oklahoma State School Superintendent, R. H. Wilson, makes a recommendation to new Governor and Legislature that a more rigid censorship be required so that all moving picture shows which school children are permitted to see, and that nothing of a licentious or outlawry nature shall be shown before children of a school age.

The moral is, "Join the Oklahoma State League. Do not shift responsibility. If you cannot look after your own interests, contribute your mite in dues to some one that will."

L. W. BROPHY, Secretary.

Enjoys the "News" More Than the Daily Papers

ROYAL THEATRE, Cannelton, Ind.

Editor, Motion Picture News, New York City.

Dear Sir: Your letter of today, asking if I read the News you are giving. You are "dog gone right" I am. Excuse the expression, but I do look for its coming as eagerly as I do for a good night's show. I enjoy reading it much more than the daily newspapers.

I want to extend my thanks for this favor. I will assure you that I appreciate the News.

Why, the school children beg to get the old copies when I get through with them. Thanking you again, I am respectfully,

J. S. GERBER.

A Decided Hit

77 Bank St., Lebanon, N. H.

Editor, Motion Picture News, New York City.

Dear Sir: I have thought for some time that I should write a line to give your very valuable magazine a boost, as I consider it equal to any picture magazine I ever had, and I think I know most of those in publication, as I have been a subscriber to them in the past. Your good book reached me in the way of a "sample copy." Once I read it. It was a decided hit. You will have my subscription for a year. It is just right, splendid descriptions, and all anyone could ask for.

I want to thank you again for your kind favors and beg to remain,

Yours very truly,

R. W. JERLY.
LARKIN LEAVES UNIVERSAL FOR BALBOA

Special to Motion Picture News

George Larkin, hero of the "Trey o' Hearts" serial from the story by Louis Joseph Vance, has left the Universal Gold Seal company, and is now playing leads for the Balboa Amusement Producing Company. This week he is appearing in his first Balboa release, playing the role of the idle son of the rich, in which he wears but twelve different business suits, two flannel suits, afternoon, evening clothes, and then some others. The title for this is "The Broken Promise," in which Ann Drew and Edna Mayo play the parts of sisters, both in love with the handsome young man of unlimited wealth. The picture will consist of three reels. Wednesday evening, at the request of Manager Burns, of the Butterfly theatre, 16th and Oak streets, Mr. Larkin appeared at the theatre, following the showing of the ninth installment of the "Trey o' Hearts," in which Larkin jumped from the cross-bar of a mast into the ocean, and for fifteen minutes told the patrons of the thrills he experienced in making the series.

HEDLEY SMITH ON TOUR OF CANADIAN TERRITORY

Hedley Smith, vice-president of the Pathe Freres, is on a visit to Canada in the interest of his firm. Interviewed while in Montreal he stated that Pathe Freres has found Canada to be a large and important field, and as the company has decided to enter it to the fullest extent there will be more, Pathe Freres branches in Canada than before.

Mr. Smith further states that these are busy days for the moving picture operators, and more than ever before have been at work throughout the battlefields of Europe.

"Our company has been particularly keen in this work," he said. "Our men have been sent everywhere, and some of them have not yet been heard from. They may have fallen victims of war or may have been imprisoned."

Daly Brings Artistry to Pathe Serial

Shaw Innovator Will Have in "The Exploits of Elaine" a Vehicle Allowing the Star Free Range to His Particular Talent

ARNOLD DALY, who through his work in "Candida" became in such a short time one of the most talked of actors in America, has signed with Pathe to take the leading part in the new serial "The Exploits of Elaine."

That Mr. Daly stands in the front rank of the theatrical profession today is self-evident, and that he has been signed by Pathe for the new serial proves conclusively that "The Exploits of Elaine" will be a vastly different proposition from "The Perils of Pauline" in that the new story will require most artistic interpretation, and not depend so much upon sensational incidents for its interests.

Mr. Daly is an object lesson to the ambitious young American by proving that there is plenty of room at the top and that ability will be recognized in spite of all handicaps. Some ten years ago he was office boy for Charles Frohman, surely a sufficiently humble beginning in the theatrical profession to satisfy the most ardent admirer of such works of fiction as "From Cabinboy to President."

Born in New York, he showed the average New York boy's sublime indifference to the favorites of fame, and they still tell stories along Broadway of young Daly's scornful attitude towards the famous playwrights and theatrical stars who called upon Mr. Frohman. At an early age Mr. Daly was convinced that he could act and eventually prevailed upon Mr. Frohman to give him a chance in a small role. He soon showed that he possessed an intuitive dramatic sense and his rise was steady. He was fortunate to have a part in "Pudd'n Head Wilson," under Frank Mayo, whose splendid experience and fine talent gave him much invaluable knowledge.

"After that engagement he played the boy in Wm. Gillette's farce "Because She Loved Him So," which was followed by the part of the mad lover in "Barbara Frietchie" with Julia Marlowe. "Engagements in "When We Were Twenty-one," "Hearts Aflame," and "The Girl from Dixie" followed. All this time Mr. Daly's art had been broadening and taking on a finer quality. Unconsciously and gradually he had been fitting himself for his great success "Candida."

It is interesting to note that this production, which afterwards played 132 days in New York, was first put on for matinees only by Mr. Daly to demonstrate "a worthy play which could not be commercially successful in New York." Shortly afterwards against all advice, Mr. Daly needing a play as a stop gap, determined to try "Candida" on the New York public. It was done, and each day saw a growth in the receipts. Before long it was the most talked of play in the city, and Mr. Daly was famous.

"THE LAST CHAPTER" NEXT ALLIANCE RELEASE

The next release upon the Alliance Programme, in which Carlyle Blackwell and Ruth Hartman appear, will be "The Last Chapter," taken from Richard Harding Davis' famous novelette, "The Unfinished Story."

The film, which is in five parts and will be released December 21, narrates the romantic adventures of an African explorer whose exploits in the jungle are vividly portrayed on the screen. The theme is handled by Mr. Davis in his usual effective manner.
ALLIANCE EXCHANGES REPORT INCREASING BUSINESS

THE past week has been a banner one for all of the Alliance exchanges. The reports received by George T. Ames, head of the sales department, show that the volume of business being done by this firm is increasing in all parts of the country with great rapidity. M. F. Tobias, president of the All Theatres Film and Accessory Corporation, says that his concern, which controls the booking rights to the Alliance program in New York State and City, finds the Alliance features the best money-getters on his list.

"In New York City," remarked Mr. Tobias, "where competition among exchanges is the keenest of any place in the country, the Alliance has been most successful. There are but a few of the high class photoplay houses in the city that are not regular users of the Alliance program."

CAMPBELL WILL MANAGE BOX OFFICE IN BOSTON

HARRY F. CAMPBELL, formerly assistant manager of the New England Universal Film Exchange and manager of Warner's Features, has been prevailed upon after much effort to accept the management of the New England branch of Fox's Box Office Attraction Company on Piedmont street, Boston. Louis Levine, who has been acting manager, will remain as assistant manager.

WARNER'S INDIANAPOLIS, MOVES

WARNER'S FEATURES, INC., or United Film Service, Indianapolis, has moved from the Lemeke building to 135½ North Illinois street, in the Lyric theatre building.

ALCO STARTS EXCHANGE REPORT SYSTEM

THROUGH the medium of a new and original arrangement instituted this week by Walter Hoff Seely, of the Alco Film Corporation, the parent office of that concern is being kept in close touch with conditions throughout the entire United States, from coast to coast.

A large, double page report sheet, printed on both sides and captioned "Weekly condition report," has been furnished to the various exchange managers, with orders to fill out accurately each week and forward to home office so as to reach there by first mail.

The report sheets bear lines calling for reports on the following conditions:

Number of bankruptcies in your district:

A machine which injures the film more than ordinary wear and tear.

Further than this it is proposed that a standard rate for photograpbs be established between the exchange men either for leasing or selling lithographs, as well as photographs and lobby displays of all kinds.

The Los Angeles exchanges are to a more or less extent affiliated with the exchanges of San Francisco, and it is very probable that the organization here will be very similar to the one at the northern city.

BARGMAN TO MANAGE GOLDEN GATE, LOS ANGELES

ED L. BARGMAN has been appointed manager of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, at Los Angeles, a branch of the film renting institution of which Sol Lesser, of San Francisco, is president, and which has exchanges in many of the principal Western cities. Mr. Bargman has been connected with the company for the past six months in the capacity of salesman, and has made an enviable record during that period of time.

EDWARDS-ZETLER TO HAVE CINCINNATI BRANCH?

WORD is going through real estate circles in Cincinnati that the Edwards-Zetler Feature Film Company will in the near future open a branch agency in this city. The company has branches all over the country, and its Cincinnati branch is slated to occupy space in the Savoy Hotel Building, on East Sixth street. The lease is said to have been made through the firm of Cleaney, Nourse and Huntington.

UNIVERSALS IN GREAT DEMAND AT WASHINGTON

S. J. MAYER, formerly of the General Film Company, is now at the head of the Universal forces at the Washington Film Exchange. Mr. Lavelle, the former manager, remains there as assistant. Mr. Mayer reports everything prosperous "Universally," with "The Master Key" much in demand.

TRI-STATE TAKES KRITERION

THE Greater Tri-State Feature Film Company of New York has closed with the Mica Film Corporation to handle all their releases under the Kriterion program. David Kren concluded this arrangement, whereby all the eastern district will be handled by them.
This is the first section of the Kriterion Special going through on a clear track and headed in the right direction. It is just crowded to capacity with those people who have been convinced. Are you on it? But don't answer—here is a secret—there is a second section of this train following right behind and this train is going to stop at "Decision Junction." Hop on! You will have plenty of company. Why travel on a local when it is just as inexpensive to travel on an express. And you get there SO much quicker.

You have been held up at this Junction long enough. You know you have been waiting for this very train. Now don't stop to buy tickets, just drop in the station and we will give you a pass to take you to "Co-operative land" where everything is teeming with good stories and good photography.

CONFIDENTIAL CHAT

Do you believe that the film field is already crowded with — —? We know you do, but there is something lacking. We have become convinced that the public is educated in the matter of stories, photography and acting in films. They are absolute critics in this matter and demand of the manufacturer that he produce quality in each of these subjects. They have passed the novice stage and will go where this kind of film is shown regardless of program.

A man goes home from his day's work, eats his dinner, reads his paper and then wishes to take his family to a theatre. Does he wish to go scouting all around the town gazing at the lithos and posters in the lobbies of the show houses to see which one he wishes to go into? He is too tired for that. He wants to know when he leaves home where he is going and that, if he goes to So and So Theatre, he will at least see a good set of films and be pleased.

The public is tired of being pumped by advertising to go and see a well known "star" and then when they see the picture they find they have seen nothing but the picture of the "star" minus a story and good photography. On the other hand they hear that a well known book is being pictured. They go to see it and find that the photography is poor, acting is poor and the story has gone to waste.

How will we remedy this? We will do it this way. By putting on a film service of good stories, good photography and these combined with co-operation with the Exhibitor spell quality and success. Each one essential and the whole lost when one is left out.

THE PUBLIC DEMANDS THIS WE MUST GIVE IT TO THEM

You cannot imagine a manufacturer sending reels of film to his exchanges and Exhibitors for their favor and the film being the first test prints and minus main and sub-titles. Well, that is just what we did. We showed them the goods in the embryo state, undressed and untrimmed, and they enthused over the program. What will they do when they see the finished article? Get in touch with us at once and let us show you our film.

You are the ultimate Judge and Jury. Let us convince you.

THE TRUTH WAGON
(Masterpiece-Alliance-Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY J. C. JESSEN

Max Figman was seen on the screen of the Butterfly Theatre, Monday evening, playing the part of John Ross, the Little Joker, which he created for the original New York presentation of the Hayden Talbot play, "The Truth Wagon," when the second Masterpiece Film Manufacturing Company's production for the Alliance program was given its first screen examination in Los Angeles by members of the company, guests, exchange men and exhibitors. The release date for this subject is, at the present time, fixed for December 14.

This play, founded on "the sober truth," to use the words of the author, a newspaper man, deals with political conditions, the bickering of the public press, and takes for its leading character a son of the rich, who through his early life wiles away his time and his father's money in playing practical jokes on his friends.

His last act of this kind was to "kidnap" all the men from a social function given by his family and take them to a barge where he staged an amateur prize fight. The jests of his friends of "Why don't you tell the truth and go to work" induce the young man to buy a fast dying newspaper, The Truth, which will not be, from William Dean, father of Helen, a newspaper woman.

Under the management of Young Ross, The Truth exposes political intrigues, causes his father to resign from the gubernatorial candidacy, elects the former editor of the paper, lands a knock-out on the political ring that has controlled the state, and wins for the "Little Joker" the hand of the daughter of the governor-elect, Helen Dean.

The production was filmed under the personal direction of Mr. Figman, who appears at his best as the dashing, quick-witted and impulsive young millionaire, who makes a winning fight against odds which include the members of his own family, his circle of friends and the powerful ring of politicians. Al W. Filson appears as Francis Sullivan, the ward heeler, and H. A. Livingston as Forbes, the double-dealing reporter addicted to the morphine habit.

Lolita Robertson impersonates the role of Helen Dean—which she played in the original stage production—the guiding hand at the steering wheel of the vehicle of truth on its trip over rough journalistic roads. The scenario was prepared by Elliott J. Clawson and photography was in charge of George Rizard.

THE MASTER KEY
(Universal Special—Fifth Episode)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

While nothing in the way of sensational thrills, or risk of life, is present in this, the fifth episode of "The Master Key," the story advances over a considerably large space, growing, so it seems to the observer, more tense and more engaging as each foot clicks its way through the machine.

The scene of action is shifted, for the time being, from the hands of Misses Feinnau, Fried, Janover and Horwitz (two of them) should desert their revolving chairs for the revolving film.

All of these young women were present at the ball and were the center of much admiration.

WAR TAX CLOSES SMALL KENTUCKY THEATRES

Special to Motion Picture News
Lexington, Ky., Dec. 15.

Owing to the new war tax, which became effective December 1, one of the two moving picture shows in Hazard, Ky., in the mountain county of Perry, 110 miles east of Lexington, has closed indefinitely. The same is true of several other film houses in the smaller mountain towns, where small patronage will not admit of the increased strain on the profits.
"THE CRUCIBLE"

(Famous Players-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AN unusually large number of players from the legitimate stage have been recruited for the screen of late by many of the picture producing companies. Famous Players have obtained the services of a select majority of these stars, but most of them merely come and go with long intervals between, though leaving, it is true, a memorable impression.

But with the case of Marguerite Clark it is different. She has already appeared in one screen offering, "Wildflower," totally different from "The Crucible," and although it was not our pleasure to see it, judging from her performance rendered in the latter play she is still far from being forgotten. The fact that she has been retained by the Famous Players is illustrative of a wise and happy move on their part.

JEAN SCORES A SOCIAL TRIUMPH

Less accomplished actresses than Miss Clark might have lost themselves in the rather sad and slightly gruesome story which, at times, "The Crucible" presents. As she interprets the principal part, its pathos, its charm, its goodness and its simplicity are almost equally predominant.

Hardly any phrase could be more expressive of Miss Clark's characterization of Jean Fanshaw than to say it teaches her watchers that to return good for evil results in happiness.

"The Crucible," a novel written by Mark Lee Luther, may be accounted by some, slightly exaggerated in its first phases, but, as the story progresses, it becomes more and more convincing. Some, too, may question the possibility of a girl escaping from a reformatory and successfully evading her pursuers, but, strange as it may seem, as pictured and as acted it seems quite probable.

In other words, wherever the story departs from consistency, the ability of the players is great enough to counterbalance the slight faults in the plot.

Jean, the role which Miss Clark so successfully carries, is the abused younger daughter of a widowed mother. In a petty quarrel with her haughty and insolent sister, she accidentally cuts her, with a sickle, and, on Amelia's terrible accusation of attempting to kill her, Jean is sentenced to a year in the reformatory.

Thereafter Jean is forced to struggle against innumerable evils, from all of which she emerges triumphant. She aids her sister, causes her husband to return to her, and at length is rewarded by finding happiness and love with an artist for whom she once posed.

Of the rest of the cast Helen Hall and Harold Lockwood are only a pair for honors. The former, in her rendition of the part of Stella, a periodical habitue of the reformatory, is truly characteristic, and the latter as Craig, the artist, is as good as usual. Justina Johnstone as Amelia has rather a weak part, but makes the most of it. Lucy Parker appears as the mother of the girls, and Barbara Winthrop as the society belle.

The settings are appropriate and elaborate when the occasion permits. The scenes are well chosen, some of them being most beautiful. The photography in the print shown is rather dim in some scenes, but is on the average good and distinct throughout.

"AS A MAN SOWS"

(Aquilla-Sawyer—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY H. S. FULD

THE producers of this film have gone to rather greater lengths than the average, in that they have spared no pains on the interior settings. The scenes representing the banking offices, the living rooms of the principals and the carnival and fête depictions are masterpieces of their respective representations.

The photography and tinting of the film help to accentuate this creditable performance and the scenes are brought forward with a clearness and distinctness that should go far to add to the producer's reputation. There are five reels of rather elaboration melodrama—elaborate in that although the story is one of the familiar type of embittering bank-cashier, the company has taken many liberties and made three complete stories out of the one, but intermingled them so as to make one grand ensemble, as it were, and the result is an interesting conception in its entirety.

There is the story of the watchman's daughter Iris, who, after her father is killed by the escaping cashier, goes on the stage and becomes famous. There is the story of the cashier's son who, twenty years later, after many trials, meets Iris and finally marries her. Then the story of the cashier, after twenty years, now a master crook, who almost killed his own wife; and the son, who, on account of his wonderful likeness to his reprobate father, is accused of the crime. Then all three stories come to a head, the villain is killed—hoisted on his own petard, the young couple are united, the wife recovers, and everybody is happy.

There is one scene or rather a series of scenes that stands out above the others. The fête scenes, close-ups and ensemble are beautiful examples of what a competent director can do with a cast of young dancing girls and good lighting effects and a master camera-man. The girls, and there are twenty of them, would seem to have been chosen, not alone for their excellence as to form and beauty, but for their graceful dancing as well.

The scenes that go to make up this fête or carnival are not alone splendidly photographed, but the tinting of the different scenes especially those of the dancing girls, is nothing less than a work of art.
“YOUNG MRS. WINTHROP”
(Edison—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY CLIFFORD H. FANGBURN

BASED on Bronson Howard’s play of the same name, “Young Mrs. Wintrop” is a picture of more than usual dramatic excellence and force. The problem which it presents, that of an estranged mother and father reconciled through a little child, is not a new one, but the treatment and the sympathetic acting make an offering of much merit.

Mabel Trunelle as the wife and Gladys Hulette as her blind sister-in-law handle their parts with especial success. Miss Hulette carries off her difficult role with surprising realism and yet with no tendency to offend the finest sensibilities.

The general arrangement and setting of the picture call for comment. Nothing elaborate is required by the story, but on the other hand, carelessly arranged scenes would do much to soil the effect of the narrative. That these have been avoided entirely speaks well for the producers.

A young husband who is intensely devoted to his wife is kept rather busy by a rush of work. He has to see a woman about a business matter but she arranges to have him come to her home one evening, and to avoid a tiresome explanation to his wife, the husband goes there secretly.

This, together with several other incidents, leads to an estrangement, which is ended at the bedside of their child when she becomes dangerously ill. There is an under plot concerning the husband’s blind sister and the wife’s brother. Altogether a most satisfactory picture.

FOX ANNOUNCES THREE MORE FEATURES

WILLIAM FOX, president of the Box Office Attraction Company, has announced three more big “productions extraordinary,” which are included in his series of fifty releases of big stage hits.

“The Gilded Fool,” by Henry Guy Carlton, was produced at Miners’ Fifth Avenue theatre by Nat Goodwin. Mr. Goodwin starred in this play.

“The Butterfly on the Wheel,” by Francis Neilson and Edward G. Hammerude, was produced by the Shuberts in January, 1912, at the 39th Street theatre, with Madge Tiberadige and Louis Waller. This is a story of scandal in English society where the wife becomes involved in a scandalous divorce action.

“The World and His Wife” is by Jose Echegaray, the Spanish dramatist who wrote all the great plays for the Royal theatre, at Madrid. This play was translated by Frederick Nirdlinger, produced by William Faye:sham and used by him as a starring vehicle for both himself and his wife, Julia Opp.

HANSEL SUCCEEDS LONERGAN

HOWELL HANSEL, director of Thanhouser’s famous success, “The Million Dollar Mystery,” has been put in charge of productions at the New Rochelle studios, taking the place of Lloyd Lonergan, who recently resigned from that company.

WILL FIGHT POLICE EDICT AGAINST LARGE POSTERS

Special to Motion Picture News

Pittsburg, Pa., Dec. 15.

THERE is soon to be a test case of the law regarding the placing of large posters in the lobbies of the motion picture theatres in this section. A. C. Stein, one of the prominent attorneys in Pittsburg, has taken the matter up and will fight the law to the limit.

A number of the police officials have served notice on the motion picture theatre managers that they are not to put up posters larger than three sheets. This has not met with the ideas of the exhibitors and they are getting ready to fight.

According to a statement of Mr. Stein, there is nothing in the law that gives the censors any jurisdiction over the kind of advertising material used in the lobbies of the theatres, as their work only calls for the pictures shown on the screen.

MARGARITA FISCHER TO ACT IN FOUR-REELER

MARGARITA FISCHER, famous for her beauty and grace, is to be featured in the four reel features on which Harry Pollard has begun work in Santa Barbara. Mr. Pollard will appear in these features when necessary, but he will direct all of them. Among others whom he has engaged for the cast is William Carroll, the noted character man.

The American Company expects shortly to release these features in the Mutual program, and, due to this increased output, President S. S. Hutchinson recently has been a more frequent visitor to Los Angeles and the South. On his last trip to sunlit California Mr. Hutchinson took with him Director Thomas Ricketts who is on the lookout for new talent.

“THE BELOVED ADVENTURER”

(Lubin—Fifteenth Episode)

THIS is the final number of Emmett Campell Hall’s fascinating serial and the patrons of the photoplay will be delighted to know that Lord Cecil and the charming little Betty have at last reached the haven of lifelong prosperity and happiness.

Betty always had the idea that socially she was far from being Cecil’s equal, and it gave her much anxiety, but by accident she discovers that she was even more, for she learns that she is the grand-daughter of the Duchess of Drex, who is the autocratic leader of society, and a millionaire heiress in her own right into the bargain.

The greatest day in Cecil’s life is on when on the balcony of the mansion he presents Betty and her baby son, who will be the future Lord of Croftleigh, to the tenantry of his 10,000 acres.

Truly Lord Cecil has been an adventurer and much beloved, and the sequel of the story is proof that virtue will reap its reward.

Many patrons of photo-motion will be sorry that the tale has ended, but another serial will immediately follow, it is promised by the company.
“IN THE LAND OF THE HEAD HUNTERS”

Those first nighters who braved the chill winds and rain on Monday evening to witness the first presentation of Edward S. Curtis’ Indian epic drama of the Northern Seas, entitled “In the Land of the Head Hunters,” were amply repaid for their courage, for it not only proved to be a masterpiece photographically, but is an intensely gripping and thrilling story of primitive life found existing on the shores of the North Pacific by the first exploring party.

No melodrama of the present day could be more vividly interpreted by a Broadway cast than was presented by these savages, for each, character was impersonated by either himself or herself. Many of the scenes make one’s hair stand on end, and there were not a few who are still wondering whether the pictures were posed for or whether these headsmen really decapitated their victims during their various battles, so realistic and true to life are they enacted.

The story takes one through a part of the country the splendor of which is almost indescribable. One can hardly believe nature has given so barbaric a race such a beautiful spot for their own.

The interpretive music which is played through the entire picture was composed by John J. Braham from original photographic records, made by the exploring party. If well warranted and frequent applause is any criterion, the picture should enjoy a long and profitable run.

The films have a great educational value and have no doubt added another page in the history of research made by this well-known explorer.

“LAST CHAPTER” WELL RECEIVED AT PRIVATE SHOWING

Special to Motion Picture News

A private showing of “The Last Chapter,” the Favorite Players latest release, featuring Carlyle Blackwell, was given here today before a select company of directors, exhibitors and exchange men. Great enthusiasm was manifested over the photography of the picture, the camp-fire, sunset and silhouette effects. William D. Taylor directed the production, which is to be released through the Alliance program.

Nat A. Magner, a west coast exchange man, declared after the showing: “The Last Chapter” is the equal of any and superior to many features released during the last few months. Blackwell’s work is immense and Director Taylor should be proud.”

NEW STAGE NOW IN USE AT INCEVILLE

Additional proof of the ever increasing demand for the productions of the N. Y. M. P. Corp. has been furnished by the fact that a large new extension to the already mammoth stage at the Inceville studios has just been constructed.

The stage now measures some 200 feet in length and 75 feet in width. There is ample space for the staging of a dozen different scenes simultaneously, while the entire area can be used to produce one of the biggest single sets possible in motion pictures today.

24 FREIGHT CARS FOR “ZUDORA” EPISODE

Two freight trains of twelve cars each will be used in a scene in “Zudora,” the Thanhouser’s serial. The action requires both trains to be running at top speed, when James Cruze climbs over a car on one train, releases a lever, and cuts the train in half. In one of the cars is Marguerite Snow and Helen Badgley, who are rescued by Cruze just as the car is sent skyward by an explosion.

The cost of this one scene will be $5,000. Another setting of unusual gorgeousness will be seen in the eighth episode of “Zudora” when Elizabeth Forbes, recently added to the cast, will make her first appearance.

The set cost $11,000 to build and it is fitted with more than $30,000 in antiques. A special insurance policy had to be taken out to cover the property during its use in the picture, as the entire collection has been sold to a European woman who has had her cast collection destroyed when her home in Belgium was burned during the recent fighting before Antwerp.

A special train will carry the Thanhouser actors to a point on Long Island where the train scene will be taken. In the party will be Director Frederic Sullivan, Marguerite Snow, James Cruze, Harry Benham, Elizabeth Forbes, Helen Badgley and fifty other persons, besides Cameraman George Weber and Assistant Director Al Mayo. The railroad company will have two trains waiting in addition to a complete wrecking outfit which must clear away the wreckage immediately so that the regular traffic on the road will not meet with interference.

BOSWORTH MOVES NEW YORK OFFICES

In order to be in the heart of the film district, the New York headquarters of Bosworth, Inc., have been moved uptown and a suite of offices have been taken over on the eighteenth floor of the Candler Building, at 220 West 42d street. Installation of the furnishings is now nearing completion and it is expected that by the time Special Representative Carl H. Pierce returns to New York the offices will be fully equipped and in smooth running order.

Mr. Pierce is now finishing up a tour of the Bosworth exchanges and will be back in town the latter part of this week, when he will take active charge of the new offices. During the absence of Mr. Pierce the New York headquarters will be under the management of Julian M. Solomon, Jr.

NEXT COSMOS FILM RELEASED JANUARY 11

The Cosmos Feature Film Corporation have decided to release “The Little Girl That He Forgot,” with Bulaah Poynier in the title role, on Monday, January 11. The setting is in a lumber camp in the swamp lands of Missouri. The action is replete with heart interest, beautiful scenic effects, acting and photography. Miss Poynier, who plays the title role, toured the country for four years in the dramatic version of this photoplay and has novelized the same. The novel will be ready for publication about the same time that the feature is released. In addition to the above, the Cosmos Feature Film Corporation have planned an extensive and expensive publicity campaign.
EDWARD ABELES IN SAVAGE'S "THE MILLION"

The Famous Players will end the old year by releasing Edward Abeles in a film version of Henry W. Savage's successful farce production, "The Million," which was produced on the New York theatre stage. Abeles has been absent from the screen for several years. The famous melodramatic farce has won the distinction of possessing more laughter and wholesome fun than any comedy of recent years. If the old philosophers are right, and laughter is wealth," then "The Million" is well named.

The subject also presents one of the most remarkable examples of character acting supplied in many years, in the impersonation of "Le Baron," the crook, by Edward Abeles. In the course of the story he is called upon to portray no less than six entirely distinct characters.

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH AT SAFETY EXPOSITION

The Nicholas Power Company, manufacturers of Power's Cameragraph projection machines, will have a booth at the Second International Exposition of Sanitation and Safety, to be held at the Grand Central Palace, New York City, from December 12 to 19, inclusive. The Power company will demonstrate the safety appliances of their machines in a specially constructed theatre on the third floor, where the current releases of the various film companies will be shown from 2 p.m. until 10:30 p.m. each day. Power's will have booth 36.

CASTLE WILL BE EDISON COMEDY DIRECTOR

A new director for the Edison Company is James W. Castle, who will direct the company's comedies. Mr. Castle brings with him all the wealth of successful experience gathered in his rise from call boy many years ago to the position of owner of well-known stage productions. He has been director for Madame Schuman-Heink, noted musical comedy successes, and has had such stage stars under him as Marie Cahill, Raymond Hitchcock, William T. Carlson and Adele Ritchie.

SMALLWOOD WILL SEND COMPANY TO LOS ANGELES

The Smallwood Film Corporation, producers of Grandy films, in the United Film Service, will within a few days send a company to Los Angeles for the winter months.

Ray C. Smallwood, Ethel Grandin and John Brownell among others will make the trip to California. Arrangements have already been made for a studio where the company will make two reel comedy dramas featuring Miss Grandin.

GRAND, CANTON, GOES TO FILMS

Canton, O., Dec. 15.

The Grand theatre, operated here under lease by Felber & Shen, of New York, will shortly abandon spoken drama, as reproduced by a stock company known as the Canton Players, and show motion pictures exclusively, it is announced.

Alec Lorimore Active in Two Companies

President of National Movement Motion Picture Bureau, Inc., and Bishop, Pessers & Lorimore, Inc., Plans Important Move in Film Circles

INTERVIEWED at his new office in the Longacre building, Alec Lorimore expressed himself as fully satisfied with the progress being made by the National Movement Motion Picture Bureau, Inc., and Bishop, Pessers and Lorimore, Inc.

With regard to these companies, of which he is president, he expected to be able shortly to announce successful moves of an important nature, but preferred to be silent on such matters for the present.

In the case of Bishop, Pessers and Lorimore, Bishop has the active support of Henry Pessers and Edna Williams, and in London the support of Stanley W. Bishop, who is well known in New York film circles. Mr. Pessers has had a very successful record in the film business, and his experience covers most European countries. He is a man of modest bearing, but a keen student of human nature, and a tactful, resourceful, reliable business man.

Miss Williams has long been connected with the theatrical world, and is well known to the heads of many film houses on account of her heavy purchases for Australasia and South America. She will act as secretary of the company.

The main purpose of this company will be to act as a foreign clearing house for American productions. Through the already strong organization of Bishop Pessers and Co. Ltd., of London, the new company is in a position to obtain the best possible results for American productions in Great Britain, her colonies, South America and Japan, and in addition will hold in America such features as they receive through their London office.

In the National Movement Motion Picture Bureau, Inc., Mr. Lorimore will also have the support of Mr. Pessers, and in addition Wm. C. Hill.

Mr. Hill is a newcomer in the amusement field. He was the organizer and late president of the Pyrene Fire Extinguisher Company, is a university man, and well known in commercial and financial lines.

Mr. Lorimore has the necessary ability to make a success of these companies. He is genial, diplomatic and forceful, but above all these assets he has the well deserved reputation of always making his word good, once he has given it. There is room in every field of human endeavor for men of this class.

Pennsylvania League Ball Draws Big Crowds

Horticultural Hall, Philadelphia, is Packed with Representatives of All Branches of the Film Industry—Laemmle and Lubin Fraternize Together

Special to Motion Picture News

Philadelphia, Dec. 15.

DESPITE the inclement weather which prevailed, a big crowd turned out to help make the annual ball of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania the most successful one in its career. With an orchestra of sixty pieces to furnish music for the dancing, the Horticultural Hall was packed by ten o'clock with joyous fans, exhibitors and photoplay celebrities. Romaine Fielding, Lubin actor-director-author, and Ormi Hawley, also a Lubin star, were prominent among the latter in that they were guests of the league and led the grand march. Miss Hawley and Mr. Fielding, with others, among whom were Clara Kimble Young, Edwin August, Edgar Jones, Lottie Briscoe, Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Edmund Breeze, Siegmund Lubin and Carl Laemmle, were introduced from the stand just prior to the march, which took place at twelve o'clock.

Miss Hawley wore throughout the eveninging a handsome bouquet of American beauty roses, presented to her by Mr. Fielding as she came upon the floor. During the course of the night's dancing a beautifully colored drawing of Miss Young was put up at auction, the proceeds of which were to be handed over to the Belgium relief fund. The drawing went to Siegmund Lubin and Carl Laemmle, who joined together in the bidding.

An event of the evening which proved of human interest worth to those who were witnesses, was the meeting between Mr. Fielding and Edmund Breeze, famous legitimate star. Fourteen years had elapsed since the paths of these two artists crossed; prior to that, when Mr. Fielding was also doing the legitimate, the two men had been fast friends. At the finish of the dancing, Mr. Breeze accompanied Mr. Fielding to his apartments where the rest of the night was spent in going over old times and discussing the picture business as it is developing.

INTERESTING FILM REVIEWS

PRODUCTIONS FROM ALL PROGRAMS

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

Their Cheap Vacation. (Essanay, Mon., Dec. 21.)—This is the story of a young couple who go on the “ideal” automobile trip, which is to cost them $12. It is not only costs them far more than this amount, but they have a miserable time and decide never to economize in this manner again.

Arthur Truman’s Ward. (Vitagraph, Mon., December 21.)—When a girl of wealth is on her way to her newly appointed guardian’s home she is hurt so that she loses her mind. Finding her papers out, she flees. But goes on to see the shipwreck. This is the story in the main. On the same reel with The Dentist’s Janitor.

The Dentist’s Janitor. (Biograph, Mon., Dec. 21.)—The janitor tries to make a hit while the dental nurse accidentally makes one. A very amusing item.

The Adventure of the Wrong Santa Claus. (Edison, Mon., December 21.)—One of the adventures of Santa Claus this year is to dress up as a squirrel and try to discourage the children from taking from some taken from her. The story is ended upon the lady asking the janitor, who is discovered that all the action took place in his brain.

Wade Brett Pays. (Selig, Tues., December 22.)—A dissolute young man reforms because of the discovery that his mother is sick and needs him. This is a story that is taken from the life of a wealthy woman. The story is told by the police officer.

The Lady or the Tigers. (Selig, Wed., December 22.)—A drama made thoroughly worth while for the fighting of the tiger with beautiful artist whom he has engaged to paint animal pic-

The Single Act. (Lubin, Tues. reeds, Dec. 22.)—An interesting and impossible crime of the man who is a recent arrival presents the familiar case of a thief who poses as a rich man and attempts to commit a crime. He is failed in his endeavor to perform a heroic act which would have been an outdated adventure.

The Professor’s Romance. (Vitagraph, Wed., December 23.)—A man and a woman are being married in the house next door to a professor, and his two chil-

One Traveler Returns. (Selig, Wed., December 23.)—A good production with Stella Ruth, Addie Gleason and Larnae Johnson as principal.

The Premature Compromise. (Edison, Two reels, Fri., Dec. 25.)—The second of the series dealing with the adventures of Young Lord Stanleigh. These stories appeared some time ago in the "Saturday Evening Post", Robert Bassett being writer and artist, and they are all full of interest. In this story some men swindlers try to cheat. Lord Stanleigh and his friends find that they have been tricked at the corner of Forty-Second Street and Twenty-Fifth Avenue.

The Way Home. (Biograph, Fri., Dec. 25.)—The ruins, or what looks like the ruins, of a young chap is brought about by a femicide crook and her accomplice. When Jill in a strange town the woman is nursed back to health by the police officer in his tux—she had robbed. His whereabouts are unknown to his parents, and to pull a joker for his act the girl brings the country fellow home. The woman is played by Isabel Rea and her victim by Vincent Cooksey.

"An Affair for the Police." (Vitagraph. Two reels, Sat., December 26.)—When a detective is engaged by a gentleman to find his sister, he begins to suspect that it is an insult to the guests. Later everyone is surprised to find that the most valiant of the police detectives do some heavy work and discover that the gentleman who engaged them took the necklace to show how easily the detective could be fooled. Leah Baird is seen as the bride.

"The Champion Bear Slayer." (Selig, Sat., December 26.)—Some trained bears, particularly a monkey, become the amusing comedy of the piece. The woman falls in love with him, and later when he is engaged by a detective to capture the bears he is found wanting.

"The Unwitting Conquest." (Biograph, Sat., December 26.)—The search for material and experience is one of the most amusing pictures of the week. The woman falls in love with the detective, and later when he is engaged by a detective to capture the bears she is found wanting.

"The Man Who Vanished." (Edison, Sat., December 26.)—Another of the Ford boy series "Below the Dead Line," Ford, the detective, and the old lady represent the best of the towns. The story is about a man who is forced to turn criminal, and the plans he makes to take the law into his own hands.

"The Jailer's Daughter." (Universal, Mon., December 26.)—The film is a sequel and is followed by a new series. The woman falls in love with the detective, and later when he is engaged by a detective to capture the bears she is found wanting.

"The Treasury of Macksville." (Universal, Mon., December 26.)—The film is a sequel and is followed by a new series. The woman falls in love with the detective, and later when he is engaged by a detective to capture the bears she is found wanting.

bines a fairly entertaining love story, with a very beautiful and impressive scene. Various actors play parts, including William Seiter, Peggy Plastic, and Morris Foster who are the lovers. The ending is rather abrupt, but otherwise is well worked out.

"Her Younger Sister." (Beauty, Tues., Dec. 15.)—A light interest number concerned with a young lady and her first love, is old and taken with the older of the two. She promises to be a good catch, but is old and good care of her invalid father. In ten years time, she promises to be a better catch, but much more to his liking, so the older begins her plans for marrying him on her next visit. This is acted well by Charlotte Burtton in the name part, Joseph Harris as the lover, and Fred Gamble as the ghouly old father

"The Silent Way." (American, Wed. Dec. 16.)—The Indian farmer of a ranch steals away his employer's sister, who is slowly pining away from tuberculosis. In time he returns her, entirely rid of the malady. This is an unusual number, which is elaborately and artistically chosen, and is supported by excellent photography. The story is handled by Greenwood and is the real character of the picture, and the other is good. According to Santa Claus for the amusement of his little girl. He is discovered by the police in the snow and is taken to jail.

"Trapped by Holograph." (American, Fri., Dec. 18.)—This show, as the title implies, the trap is a revenge played on the woman by the use of the holograph, a device used in the production of the picture. In the course of the sun's rays from a series of mirrors, messages are sent from one post to another. This story is fair and quite a good production. The company is unfamiliar to the writer and obviously to the audience. The film is tinted a blazing light yellow and is rather hard to see.

"The Passing of Two Gun H Hickes." (Broncho. Two reels. Wed., Dec. 22.)—More or less of a character study, with William S. Hart in the name part, it is one of the few passing praiseable for its sense of humor and its beautiful people. Although Mr. Hart changes his facial expression at every turn, it is so genuine that the emotions are entirely satisfactory. Closures are good and the picture is very much improved in the man's eyes, and the effect that they create is clear and bright.

"The Last of His Line." (Domino. Two reels. Thurs., Dec. 23.)—This film is one of unusual merit and dramatic force. Further it is a play with an Indian as the chief character. The part is that of an old chief, and it is played with the same authority and grace of Selig's old chief, a redskin who has the role. The chief's son carries home to rule the tribe. He has been educated among the whites and is the only one the white man has learned to drink. He nearly breaks the promise to take his wife, but the climax comes when the youth leads a bunch of renegades and is shot by the army paymasters.

His father happens to come on the scene in time to shoot down his own son and others of the renegades. He is the only one left, but the last of the army men has been killed. The youth is captured and when the belated rescue arrives tells them that he was not the one to defend his friends. The army men give him a military funeral and only the old chief knows he died in disgrace.

"Her Mother's Voice." (Royal. Sat., Dec. 26.)—The bod carrier's daughter inherits every thing in the world through a will, but she is in the habit of trying out at sundry moments. The antics of all the characters are very funny, especially those of a horse made up of two men. The comparative freshness of the plot and the way it is worked out will cause mild laughter throughout its length.

"In the Sage Brush Country." (Kay-Bee. Two reels, Fri., Dec. 25.)—William S. Hart appears in his character of the renegade. He is portrayed by the natural voice of H. B. Warner and is an interesting picture. He seeks out the young man of the tribe, who is a chief, in his efforts to gain the respect of the others. He is finally broken down by the chief, who is the writer of the story. The picture is well acted and well photographed.

"O'Brien Finds a Way." (Premier.)—O'Brien conceives the conventional idea of flying to an unknown land by the use of a balloon. This is acted well by the three principal characters. The story is well told and the balloon is well blown. O'Brien breaks the engagement and the widow marries another offering in an average manner by the cast.

"The Champs Huj." (Superba.)—Charlie De Forrest appears as the detective and will be responsible for a number of toughs. He solves a mystery in a corresponding manner. This is a good picture. The story is done with some skill by the cast and appears in the gallery, his performance will most surely be appreciated. Mr. Hart also produced the picture.

Feature Spectacle of Beauty and Fun

Featuring George Hanlon, Jr., as the Clown

Released Saturday, December 19th, through the General Film Co. In 5 parts

Fantasma, the most famous spectacle and the greatest moneymaker ever produced by the celebrated Hanlon Brothers, makes even a better fantasy in the film than on the stage where it has been popular for 30 years. George Hanlon, Jr., of the famed family of clown and pantomimists, appears in his original role of Pico, the drollest clown that was ever created. W. T. Carleton, the greatest Mephisto on the American stage, plays Zamaliel, prince of Darkness and Evil, while George Schrode and William Ruge, celebrated in these parts, make the Imps a devilish pair. The lovely Marie La Manna graces the Princess role with fairylike charm.

For over thirty years Fantasma has fascinated all from the child to the grandfather with its wonderful blending of amusement and beauty, romance and fairytale, visualized as only the fancy of youth can picture.

The originators of this famous spectacle, Hanlon Brothers, were known over two continents as the greatest inventors of stage tricks, effects and illusions which they always used with bewitching beauty of effect. The Edison Company has preserved all the charm and atmosphere of the original production, adding new and surprisingly beautiful photographic effects never possible on the stage. Funniness, mystery, weird experiences, mystifying illusions and an unending panorama of gorgeous scenes in Fairyland are pictured with brilliant photography remarkable for color treatment.

Prince Arthur enraptured with the lovely Princess Lena wins her as his betrothed. But such bliss is not long for him, for Zamaliel, monarch of the Infernal regions, sets his covetous eye upon the fair princess. Then ensues a mighty battle between the Prince of Darkness and Fantasma, all powerful Queen of Good and Light, who watches ever over the lovers. The Princess, torn from her lover, is carried to the lower regions and then under the sea where weird and terrible trials beset her. The Prince is ever accompanied by the droll Pico in his wanderings in search for Lena and they undergo trials and wonderful experiences. The lovers, reunited, sail away at last on the Sea of Happiness—one of the most exquisite and original effects ever introduced into photography.

Fantasma, in thirty years, made ten millions gross. Book this greatest of features and cash in on its undying popularity and appeal.

Mary Pickford Joins New York Motion Picture Corporation

It may be stated on positive authority that Mary Pickford is to be identified with the New York Motion Picture Corporation. Definite announcements will be shortly forthcoming from that company, in which not only Miss Pickford's name, but those of other equally notable stars will figure. In view of the recent statement in Motion Picture News that Ad Kessel had taken over the Willat Studios at Fort Lee, N. J., the engagement of Mary Pickford and other stars is doubly significant.

This disposes of the numerous rumors concerning Mary Pickford's activities.

NASH SIGNS WITH Kriterion

Managing Director A. M. Kennedy, of the Santa Barbara Motion Picture Company, spent a portion of last week in Los Angeles visiting studios of the companies producing for the Kriterion program of the Mica Film Corporation.

The Jesse Robbins Photo Play Company will not participate in making subjects for this company. The Nash Motion Picture Company, which makes wild animal subjects at the Big Otto Zoo, east of Los Angeles, have been secured for Sunday feature releases and a contract made with them for one two-reel drama weekly, beginning with the first week of the service. This company is under the direction of Thomas S. Nash, for 17 years with the Selig Poloscope.

Chaplin Goes to Essanay; Neilan Will Leave Kalem

Los Angeles, Dec. 17.

The following important changes are authoritatively announced for the new year: Charles Chaplin leaves Keystone for Essanay to direct comedies and play leads. Marshall Neilan, director-general of Kalem Hollywood studios, will go to Lasky for "The Country Boy" and then join Famous Players.

Ford Sterling will return to Keystone, according to an unconfirmed rumor.

ALL-STAR REORGANIZES; GAIGE PRESIDENT,
FARNHAM A DIRECTOR

At a meeting of the directors of the All-Star Corporation held December 12 Crosby Gaige, of Selwyn & Company, was elected president in the place of Harry Raves, resigned. Mr. Gaige was also elected a director.

Joseph White Farnham was elected a director and made general manager of the corporation. Mr. Gaige becomes director general in place of Augustus Thomas, resigned, and together with Charles Klein, the eminent dramatist, will direct future All-Star productions. Mr. Klein, who assists in a consulting capacity over scenarios and productions, leaves on December 23 for Europe to open negotiations for All-Star with several eminent English and Continental authors.

The other officers of the company remain as before: Archibald Selwyn, of Selwyn & Company, vice-president; Philip Klein, treasurer, and George Cook, secretary. Mr. Cook’s stock has not been sold despite rumors to the contrary.

As stated in last week’s issue of the Motion Picture News
Harry Raver and Augustus Thomas disposed of their holdings in All-Star and resigned as officers of the corporation. Their stock was purchased by Attorney Griffith, acting for John Dunlop, president of the Alco Film Company.

MEETING CALLED FOR NEW YORK EXHIBITORS

A call has been issued for a meeting of the exhibitors of New York State under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors’ League of America, to be held in an up-state city, the name of the city to be announced later.

President Pearce of the League will preside at the session. The present officers of the New York body will be asked to resign.
The conference will be held primarily for the purpose of devising ways and means to further the business interests of all exhibitors. The meeting will be free from “politics.” Those behind the movement intend with the welfare of the motion picture managers and owners at heart to make the occasion a strictly business meeting.

Committees of able business men will be appointed for the investigation of laws burdening exhibitors and objectional bills pending before the legislature.

Further discussion will be devoted to the formation of plans helpful to theatre proprietors in regulating their affairs.

The secretary will be instructed to collect data pertaining to the prices of features and other matters of importance.

The workmen’s compensation law which has entailed upon motion picture managers the burdensome insurance of employees will receive its share of discussion at the meeting.

The benefits derived from the meeting by exhibitors who attend will equal ten times their association dues; e. g., feature prices alone, to say nothing of other important interests.

EDISON FILM SERVICE UNDISTURBED BY FIRE

The loss sustained by Thomas A. Edison, Inc., as a result of the fire of the night of December 9 at the plant in West Orange, N. J., will be considerably less than $1,000,000, officials of the company are now confident.

The fire did not start in the film plant; in fact this was the last to go. So much time elapsed between the start of the fire and the burning of the film plant that all of the negatives for the current and coming releases were saved, including “Fantasma,” the Edison five reeler.

The Edison film releases will not be impaired at all. The company, by using the facilities of the kinetophone plant (Edison talking pictures), have already completed 200,000 feet of film, which was the normal output of the original plant.

The only branch of the industry that will suffer from the fire is the projection department, and even this will be working to normal capacity by spring. There will probably be a delay of two or three months in the output of Edison’s kinetoscope.

Smashing An Idol

(No. 62. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talks by Carl Laemmle, President.)

I HAVE no patience with an exhibitor who tells me that he can go to such and such an exchange and "get 30-day old film for less money than the Universal charges." Nor have I any patience with the exhibitor who tells me he can "get 20-day old film for less money than the Universal asks for 60-day film."

The exhibitor who figures on the age of film and nothing else will never get anywhere. There's only one thing he ought to take into his calculations, and that thing is quality of production.

The people at large don't know AND DON'T CARE whether a film was released ten days ago or ten weeks ago, but you can't fool them on quality. They know mighty well WHETHER A PICTURE IS GOOD OR BAD. They would rather have a good picture, even though it was released three months ago, than a poor one "right out of the can."

The average exhibitor has made a little tin idol out of the question of age. He spends more time quibbling with his exchange about the age of a picture than he does in making dead sure of quality.

If Mr. and Mrs. John Jones and their family live in your vicinity, you ought to care more about pleasing Mr. and Mrs. John Jones than yourself. If Mr. and Mrs. John Jones have never had an opportunity to see certain GOOD pictures, because they were never shown in your vicinity, you ought to give them the opportunity. What do they know or care about the date when the film was first released?

If the pictures are good and the film in good condition, Mr. and Mrs. John Jones will get their money's worth, and they will pay you just as much money to get into your theatre as they would if the film had never been shown anywhere else on earth before.

I maintain that Universal films at 30, 60, 90 or 120-days or any other age (as long as they are in good physical condition) are better than any pictures you can get from any other source, even though the latter are first run.

While practically all other concerns are retrenching "on account of the war in Europe," the Universal is pouring more money than ever into scenarios, settings and all other departments of the business. We are reaching out for the best things that money can buy AND WE'RE GETTING THEM.

Which would you rather have, a "first run" picture made by a concern that is skimping on its product or a one-hundredth run picture made by a concern that is spending cash right and left and leaving nothing undone to give the people the best pictures on earth?

The time for thinkers is here. The time to smash the old idols and break the old film habits is here. The time to buy quality and not service is here.

The Universal program will probably cost you MORE MONEY than any other program represented in your territory. But it will just as surely MAKE YOU MORE MONEY because it is based on the solid rock of quality and not on the shifting sands of cut-prices. It insures your future while building up your present.

If you are determined to scrap with your exchange, at least don't tell him you can get 30-day film somewhere else for less money than he asks. He knows it. And he also knows that the stuff you can get elsewhere is WORTH A WHOLE LOT LESS THAN UNIVERSAL GOODS. He is not going to bid for your business by means of cut prices. He has the best program on earth to offer you. He asks a fair price for it.

Quit thinking age. Think quality. Take the old idol from its place in your thoughts. Give it a swift smash in the eye. It will leave just that much more room in your brain for REAL BUSINESS THINKING!

Increasing a Theatre's Usefulness

BUILDING activity on the Pacific coast following the general revival of business, will probably result in the construction of numerous photoplay theatres planned with the idea of making them the social centers of the communities.

The structures will have two or three floors if properly planned. The upper part of the buildings will be arranged for the use of local entertainments—lodge meetings, balls and other gatherings interesting the townspeople and their friends in the nearby region. In some cases bowling alleys could be installed in the basements.

In the case of comparatively small communities buildings of this character should become the logical centers of a town's social activity. The opportunities for diversion afforded by an arrangement of this kind make a unique combination of strong drawing power.

In advertising alone a motion picture theatre situated in a building like this will have unusual advantages over competing houses. People attending a dance on the upper floor, on their way to a lodge meeting, or going to the alleys to while away the evening in a game, must all pass the theatre lobby, and may be reminded of the more interesting form of entertainment going on inside.

In some cases the posters and the sound of the music floating through the doorway may divert the pleasure seekers from their original purpose. At least the reminder would probably serve to bring them back to the theatre the next night.

Theatre Possessing Numerous Advantages

A theatre embodying all these features is the Globe, Palos Verdes street, San Pedro, Cal. The building on account of its completeness and up to date furnishing has attracted wide attention, and is a tribute to the originality of its designers, Lawrence B. Valk and A. Lawrence Valk, of Los Angeles, architects, who make a specialty of motion picture theatres.

Besides the theatre on the ground floor, the Globe has a ball and lodge room on the second story, and in the basement there is a bowling alley and pool and billiard parlor. The life of the whole town practically revolves around the building.

and the inhabitants cannot help bearing in mind the Globe and its wide scope of attractions.

Great credit is due the foresight of the architects, who, realizing the possibilities of a small-town theatre built along these lines, worked out their plans with a daring originality justified by the success enjoyed by the Globe. For over a year the house has been conspicuous among theatres for its uninterrupted prosperity. As this combination plan has thus been tried out and the expense of erecting such a building is justified, it deserves to be imitated elsewhere.

Problems That Puzzle Projection People

Barney Cook, Fulton, N. Y.—Please give me your advice on the meniscus bi-convex condenser and kindly tell me what size to order. I am using a 6½ and 7½ now. I have a Fort Wayne A. C. to D. C. machine using 40 amperes at the arc, with a 100-foot throw and a 16 x 21 picture. I am using two plain condensers now. Two Power's 6A machines. I read your articles in the News every week. It certainly helps me out.

ANSWER.—It is not stated in your letter the difficulty you want to overcome in changing the system of the condensing lens. It is therefore doubtful that a satisfactory reply can be given. The use of two plano-convex lenses mounted with their curved surfaces facing each other meets the requirements, all things considered, better than any other system.

However, assuming that you know the use of a meniscus and a bi-convex system of lenses will solve your difficulties with the plano-convex system, it can be recommended to use a 4-inch diameter meniscus lens of a short focus. If the focus is made too short it will necessitate the arc so close that the bottom condenser holder will touch the lens mounting.

Also, the lens will be thick at its center and so near to the intense heat of the arc, breakage will result from sudden heating or cooling. A 6-inch focus for the meniscus lens will perhaps be near correct as it can be advised from the lack of more definite data from you.

The bi-convex lens to be of the standard 4½-inch diameter and this to have a focus of 7 inches and one surface curved more than the other. The greater curved side being toward the projection machine. This is the Sir John Herschel design of condensing lenses. These lenses can be obtained from the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company, Rochester, N. Y.

J. L. A., Bayonne, N. J.—I have an adjustable resistance and want to know the amperes I am burning. I cannot get the use of an ammeter. Can you tell me any way that the amperes can be found out? The power is from outside service and is 110 volts d. c.

Number of Amperes Burnt

ANSWER.—If you are sure the mains have exactly 110 volts at the point you are connected on, and the resistor has the resistance stamped on the name plate it may be approximated by calculations. It is, however, doubtful if you could come as near to the correct strength of current as to determine it by a simple trial of different capacity of fuses.

You might try it in this manner to gain some idea of the amperes being used. The plug fuses can be had in capacities of 15, 20, 25, and 30 amperes. If you insert in either receptacle of the cutout, say one 15-amphere fuse plug, and it holds for fifteen or twenty minutes, it is safe to say you are using below fifteen amperes.

If, however, this plug opens after about two or three minutes, the current strength is very close to the fifteen amperes. If the plug blows immediately upon closing the two carbons and striking an arc and the mica is considerably darkened, the current is very much above the fifteen amperes, and a twenty-five-amphere plug would best be tried as before. These are mere approximations and based upon the fuses being accurately rated. The only true way of telling the exact amperes is by the use of an ammeter.

HENRY THOMPSON, CINCINNATI, O.—(a) In winding film, should the emulsion side be uppermost? (b) In making patches should the emulsion be scraped from the piece nearest beginning of reel or other side? (c) Which part of the patch should be cut— the part from which emulsion has been scraped or the other part? (d) What is the best method or preparation used in cleaning film?

ANSWER: (a) Whether the emulsion side of a film should be uppermost or not, will depend on the direction the film is being rewound on the reel. Bearing in mind that the emulsion side of a film has to be toward the arc lamp when projecting (otherwise any lettering will appear on the screen reading backwards) and there is less strain on the film unwinding it from the top reel by feeding it to the mechanism from the side of the reel toward the arc lamp, the emulsion side should be uppermost when winding with the reel turning in a “clock-wise” direction.

If your rewinder is so geared, or belted, that the reel revolves in a counter clock-wise direction (the rim on the right-hand side is passing upwards) then the emulsion side of the film should be the underside of the film, and you should have the film feed into the mechanism in the best approved manner, as stated above.

(b) Your third question is also involved in the answer to this second question. So the answer to both questions will be stated together. The best practice to follow in joining films is to have the joint, or, more exactly, the lap, appear at the bottom of a picture. The eye is less apt to detect any carelessness from scraping too much off the emulsion side at the top of the next succeeding picture.

Where and How to Patch the Film

By making the film lap over the bottom, or foreground, of a picture, brings the line where the scraping off the emulsion ends at the top of the next picture. The film at this place in a picture is generally clear enough to reproduce the sky or the white ceiling of an interior view. Hence, too much scraping of the emulsion is not noticed as it would be in the foreground where the film is more or less heavily coated. So the direct answer is to scrape the emulsion from the end toward the reel while the film is being rewound on for projection.

At this end of the film should be cut to give the length to form the lap, generally about the distance of one perforation in the first edge of the film. Now, the third question may be answered by saying, if the above method of joining films is followed then the part from which the emulsion has been scraped should be cut as indicated in the question, or the corners rounded off.

All operators do not prefer to round off these corners, but leave the film straight across the full width of the film. It will make a firmer joint and also is less liable to catch in the machine if the corners are cut; but not too much. It is also good practice to thin the edges across the film on both ends. By so doing the joint is a smoother running one and is more flexible.

The celluloid side of the end from which no scraping off of the emulsion is made should also be scraped clean to allow the cement to act freely with the new surface formed on the celluloid.

(d) The cleansing of films had best be left to the film exchanges. There is on the market apparatus for this work and operators need only to clean off any oil splashes getting on the film and marring the projection.

Use Alcohol to Remove the Oil

This oil may be removed by a little alcohol sparingly applied on a piece of absorbent cotton. It is necessary to clean only a short length at a time as allow this to dry before pulling; otherwise the film will stick and give more trouble than the oil.

Another way the oil can be removed is to apply a little precipitated chalk or the dry powder made by scraping a chalk crayon. This will absorb the oil quickly. Operators had best not attempt to do much cleansing of films beyond this emergency oil cleansing. A Mortimer film cleaner (Freeport, Me.) has proven successful in these emergencies.

ELIJAH GRESHOURST, WEST SALEM, ILL.—We are using a Power's 6-A moving picture machine. Also using a direct current. At what angle should carbons stand to get the best results? Upper and lower.

My Dear Mr. Robin:

It has come to my notice through several different sources that certain parties are spreading a rumor about that I am about to take out the SIMPLEX machines now used in this theatre, and which have been used since we first opened, and to replace them with another make.

I wish to inform you that there is absolutely no truth in this statement, and can say that, after nine months of the hardest kind of usage, where the work expected of these machines has been most exacting, we have nothing but praise to offer, and the machines have proved that my judgment in selecting them after competitive trial was correct. They are giving the utmost satisfaction at the present time, and, as yet, there is no machine that has been submitted to the management that could take its place in this theatre during my direction here.

Wishing you every success that you deserve, I am

Answer: It would have been of much assistance to know what current strength you are using for your pictures to state exactly the best "set" for the carbons. As a matter of fact, it all depends upon the local conditions and the opinion of the operator as to what is the best set for the carbons. If this was an invariable condition would it not seem plausible that the manufacturers would make the carbon holders fixed at this particular angle. As it is not a certain condition of things the holders are made to allow adjustments in all directions. The manufacturer states in his catalog that this style of lamp "is provided with every possible adjustment. The carbons can be placed at any angle desired." The general practice seems to be for direct current of small current strength to set the upper (positive) carbon if both are of the same diameter a little toward the back of the lower carbon.

This is in view of the fact to make the crater on the point of the top carbons burn toward the side facing the lenses. In this manner the most economy is obtained from the lamp and the best quality also. There have been lamps made where the top carbon is at a right angle to the lower. These have practically been abandoned by the best manufacturers and the lamps are now manufactured so as to give about 70 degrees to both carbons.

If you do not use above 30 amperes we should say to place the top carbon about one-half of its diameter when both carbons are the same size. If you use 3/8-inch top and 5/8-inch lower then set to make a straight line with the sides of both carbons toward the lenses, the top carbon to be of the cored type and bottom solid.

If you find that the top carbon burns with a lip on the back towards the adjustment handles, then set the top not so much out of alignment to the lower carbon, remembering that with a greater current strength you must use larger diameter carbons and can also burn the arc with greater separation. Both of these conditions will alter the setting of the top carbon.

The Projection Machine Throws Light on the Failure of Some Exhibitors

Why more attention is not given to the projection machine when an exhibitor is going into the "business" and is building a motion picture theatre is on the lips of every manufacturer. How many cases when the projection machine is left until the last thing, they themselves know.

A case can be cited where the roof, or ceiling, of the operating room had to be raised to permit the projection machines being placed within it. It is a just kick to complain of this lack of attention to construct the operating room of ample size and conveniently located for the best results in GOOD PROJECTION.

There is very little written on the methods of obtaining GOOD PROJECTION. Three books can be found concerning this branch of optical science, namely, Optical Projection—Lewis Wright; Book of the Lantern—T. C. Hepworth, and Art of Projection—Prof. A. E. Dolbear.

These three books devote about nine-tenths of their pages to projection of phenomena in physical science. This is of no use for motion picture work in assisting architects in designing theatre buildings for giving the operating room a proper construction and location. Richardson's Handbook for Operators and Managers, or, Hallberg's Electrical Talks and Questions for Operators, concern themselves more on the subjects of machine operation than to the best locations, or construction, of operating rooms.

Why Reliable Data Is Lacking

This lack of reliable data is explained by the fact that architects do not know the needs of the business in this respect. An instance can here be recited, quoting from "The Moving Picture Theatre," published by Guide Publishing Company, Cleveland, Ohio, the article by Ralph M. Hulett, architect. He points out all the essentials to a well-arranged house, but entirely omits to mention the operating room.

Further on, in this same book, is another article, "Projector Equipment," by Elwyn E. Oliver. The opening paragraph is,

"One of the most important things to be considered in a motion picture project is the proper selection and placing of the projection equipment. We have often said to the prospective builder, plan your operating room, place it in the best of equipment and then build a "round it."

NOVELTY - 67 W. 33rd St., New York

“Nothing is so ridiculous as an elaborate front, beautiful interior decorations and a poorly projected picture. Your patrons will excuse some faults in your decorations, or construction, if they are shown the best of projection. It is the height of folly to lure them into your theatre by an attractive entrance and then disappoint them in what they want to see.”—"The first thing for consideration is the machine operating room. Do not limit its size. Make it as roomy as possible, give plenty of ventilation from the ceiling. Place it as near the center of the auditorium and as near on a level with the screen as possible. We have seen many a large theatre in which projection has been ruined by placing the operating room in the wrong location.”

It is to be regretted, years ago when the picture machine appeared, the only convenient place to put them was way up at the top in the second balcony. If they were put anywhere else, some seats would have to be sacrificed. Of course a manager thinks always of the house receipts, but he is probably not conscious of the fact that projection at long range and with any kind of convenience to be found at hand, he set down on locating the outfit except at this place. Operators have met these conditions as a matter of fact, and long usage of placing the machine equipments in this part of a theatre is now hard to shake off.

Good Projection Is Demanded Today
The day has arrived where GOOD PROJECTION is demanded. It would take only a short time for the architects to design an artistic projection room located at the front of the first balcony. These could be of the suspension type, so arrange with the general design of the balcony, as to not take up much space, and also, not to obstruct the clear view from the rear seats on the first floor, or, the seats in the balcony.

The style of entrance to balcony seats, now in modern theatres, is suggestive of what might be done with the operating room at this new location for lighting.

At this location the needs for good projection would be met in many points of vantage. It would be centrally located both in respect to height and distance to side walls. Also the distance to the screen is considerably shorter, aiding materially in better projection with less intensity of light at the arc.

The projector would not have to almost stand on its head while performing, as it now has to do, in its lofty location back in the second balcony.

It is high time architects, exhibitors and house managers give the projection machine its due share of attention when building a house.

Radium Gold Fibre Screen Now Adapted to Outdoor Advertising
A SERIES of experiments carried on for more than two years by the Alco Film Corporation and one of the companies which was absorbed by Alco has just come to a successful conclusion. The radium gold fibre screen is now made in all sizes and styles absolutely waterproof. It is thus available for all outdoor uses, such as advertising.

Long ago experiments had progressed to such a point that Alco might have announced a waterproof screen but the makers of this standard product did not wish to issue such a statement until they had applied tests of weather to the finished product. Consequently after the screen factories had reported the making of a waterproof screen composition, many screens of various sizes and styles were placed in exposed positions in various cities that the results might show the average effect of the weather the country over.

So successful were these outside tests, that Alco now makes its announcement. A large outdoor advertiser awaited the result of the tests before signing a contract with Alco for 500 screens for his use in motion picture advertising in many American cities.

TIGHTEN BUILDING LAWS IN BOSTON
MOTION picture men in Boston are aroused at what they consider the unnecessary attitude of the Building Department toward new theatres. Serried ranks of three-flat houses are permitted in the outlying districts while the theatres are being persecuted. The latest one being the Park theatre which has just been rebuilt and improved at a cost of $50,000. The Modern theatre, one of the new houses, also suffered recently from this one-sided stringency.

Be sure to mention "ACCESSORY NEWS" when writing to advertisers.

Of course, this style of theatre building is not possible in all localities—not even in residential districts. It will not take the place of neighborhood theatres. It can only thrive in small communities—and no town will support more than one.

A glance at the illustrations will give anyone contemplating the erection of a similar theatre an adequate idea of the new style of community theatre. The front is particularly attractive either by day or night.

Brightest Spot in Town

By the use of numerous incandescent lights brilliantly lighting up the front the theatre becomes the brightest spot in the town after dark. The Globe is substantially built of brick, with concrete foundations. The brick is faced with cement plaster. The side on the street is ornamented with a staff composition worked in an artistic and pleasing manner.

A handsome tile floor has been laid in the lobby, and the sides of the entrance are decorated with a marble wainscoting, which extends all around, including the box office. Heavy plate glass in the entrance doors helps to give the front an appearance of elegance.

In addition to the means of income other than the theatre proper, there is a cigar store on the right which is constantly patronized not only by the audience before and after the showing of the pictures, but by the men in attendance at the lodge meetings and entertainments held other nights.

The bowling alley and billiard parlor have proved a profitable source of income.

The foyer has a staff paneled ceiling and the arch over the opening is resplendent with electric lights. Octagon pillars add a massive, substantial appearance to the inside of the entrance.

The illumination not only outlines the whole front with great clearness, but the light shows with considerable distinctness a galvanized iron dome with pedestals on either side at the top of the building. A huge electric sign is embedded in the brick work flush with the plastering. The upper cornice is of galvanized iron as well as the dome and the pedestals.

Handsome Interior

The interior view of the theatre reveals careful designing with an idea of making use of all available space in accordance with the requirements of the modern picture theatre.

Nothing has been overlooked. Beauty of decoration, convenience and safety of patrons have received the strictest attention of the architects. Hand painted emblems are a feature of the walls in blue, and the ceiling is ornamented with an attractive stencil work border. The staff work is touched up with high-lighting gold leaf, which appears also on the ceiling beams, proscenium arch and in the ball room on the floor above.

The building covers a plot fifty by one hundred feet, and without the opera chairs, carpets, draperies, curtains, stage scenery and apparatus in the operator's booth, cost $30,000. The property is valued at a similar sum. The total investment of $60,000 nets the owner, Luke Kelly, somewhat over ten per cent as rent. The basement brings in an income of $225, the theatre $325 and the ball room $125 a month.

The ventilating system comprises two 24-inch intake and two 24-inch exhaust electric fans, which supply the right amount of fresh air, exhausting the foul air at all times. Gas radiators are used for heating. The indirect system of lighting is in use in both the theatre and the ball room.

In the theatre there are six staff bowls, which contain three 100-watt tungsten lamps with X-ray reflectors on three circuits. This makes possible the use of either one, two or all three lights at will. All the lights, ceiling as well as border, are in control from either the lobby or the operating booth.

Powers Machines in Booth

Two Powers 6-A projection machines have been installed, and the length of throw measures seventy feet. There are one dissolving stereopticon, one spot light and a mercury are rectifier.

The seating capacity is 650, and the seats were furnished by the C. F. Weber Company.

The ball room illustration shows the interior on the second story, looking away from the entrance. It also shows the arrangement of the seats around the room and the paneled ceiling, the decorative effects, the system of indirect lighting, the ventilating openings in the ceiling, and the music stand, in the left hand corner.

In the theatre interior one may get an excellent idea of the ground floor arrangement. Here is a better view of the ceiling ventilating and indirect lighting systems. Two large ventilators are on either side of the proscenium arch, each directly over two exits.
New Harrisburg Theatre Added to Chain of Twenty

DECLARING it to be one in a chain of twenty motion picture theatres that Heimbinder & Gold, of New York City, are planning to get control of in cities between New York and Chicago, Jack Gold, one of the partners, has just announced that his firm has obtained a ten-year lease of the Handshaw theatre, at Third and Harris streets, this city. This theatre is one of the newest and best appointed in Harrisburg, and has been in operation only since last September by Charles Handshaw, the builder and owner. It has eleven exits, wide aisles, a seating capacity of 1,200, and is regarded as a model of construction for modern motion picture houses.

Mr. Gold, whose firm has begun operating the house under the name of the Family theatre and in accordance with progressive principles, told the representative of Morris Picture News that Heimbinder & Gold plan within the next few months to obtain control of a score of theatres in various cities, most of which they are now negotiating for. One of these is another new house just completed in another section of Harrisburg.

"The firm is composed of Morris Heimbinder and myself," said Mr. Gold today, "and we are independent of any other interests. Our home office is at 6122 Coney Island avenue, Brooklyn, and we already control a number of theatres in Greater New York, one in Jersey City and another in Newark, N. J. We are now negotiating for two houses in Philadelphia, one more in Harrisburg, one in Huntington, Pa., two in Pittsburgh, and plan ultimately to get several in Chicago."

Success of a National Cash Register

THE first man in Washington, D. C., to use the cash register designed for the motion picture house is Nat. Glasser, manager of the Leader. It is a very neat arrangement and greatly simplifies the strain of the ticket girls.

"I find this device a great time saver, in rush of business," said Mr. Glasser. "Besides, it permits the stand of the cash box to be kept at any time. It is easily manipulated by young ladies, too. The fact that the tickets are stamped with the date of issue prevents some stray ticket from being used on any other day. I am thoroughly pleased with this up-to-date investment."

As a novelty, this register proved a drawing card for the Leader, and many of the passing public went into the show just to see how the device worked. Many questions were asked, which Manager Glasser was pleased to answer.

"Even mechanical appliances will bring a man to the movies," commented Mr. Glasser dryly. It is understood that other picture houses have arranged for the installation of these registers.

C. Howard Crane Architect of Liberty Theatre

THROUGH a regrettable typographical error in a recent issue of Morris Picture News, proper credit was not given to the architect of the Liberty theatre, Detroit. The name of C. Howard Crane, with offices in the Dime Savings Bank Building, that city, should have appeared in connection with the article. Only the first part of his name was used, thus making it seem as if a different person was responsible for the work done on the Liberty.

Inasmuch as Mr. Crane is an architect of considerable reputation and the architectural ideas embodied in this particular theatre were developed with a sureness of touch and striking technique, which come only from long experience, the editors of Morris Picture News feel that Mr. Crane's abilities cannot have too widespread publicity.

Novelty Slide Puts Out Feature Line

ADVERTISING pictures which are to appear on future dates has become one of the principal methods of advertising to regular patrons.

In order to help the exhibitor in doing this, the Novelty Slide Company is now putting out special slides for the four and five reel two-reelers of General, Mutual and Universal programs. On special order slides may also be obtained of any other pictures desired outside of these releases.
Test Case Over Boston Building Law

NOT only motion picture interests but practically the entire city of Boston is watching a fight which one motion picture house manager there is waging against City Hall, the outcome of which will be decided by the courts.

This manager is Joseph L. Roth, of the new Park theatre, which opened Monday evening, December 7, after months spent in renovating and refinishing it at a cost of upwards of $30,000. It was formerly one of the oldest homes of the spoken drama in Boston and when the new owners acquired it they went to work with vim to make it one of the most modern and beautiful theatres in the country.

The theatre was ready for the opening ceremony several days before it actually took place, the delay being occasioned by the interference of Building Commissioner Patrick O'Hearn, whose interpretation of the law governing fire escapes disagreed with conditions he found at the theatre upon inspection, although he had approved the plans for the remodeled building when they were submitted to him early in the summer.

By almost superhuman efforts the changes ordered by O'Hearn were completed two hours before the opening time on Monday evening. Then Manager Roth hastened to Mayor Curley's office to get his license, but License Clerk Casey declared that the Mayor had decided not to issue a license to show motion pictures on the ground that as altered the theatre did not conform to the new building laws, which require that motion pictures be shown only in buildings of first class construction.

Manager Roth argued that the plans for remodelling the theatre were filed months before the new law went into effect in October, but the Mayor, supported by O'Hearn's recommendation, was obdurate. The management contended that motion pictures were shown in the theatre two years ago, but Commissioner O'Hearn replied that the law was not then in effect. Roth appealed to Corporation Counsel Sullivan and the latter gave it as his opinion that the usual theatrical license which the Park theatre had obtained was sufficient to allow the exhibition of motion pictures. Even this failed to move the Mayor.

Because of the extensive arrangements which the management had made for the opening performance, however, Mayor Curley gave special permission to Manager Roth to open the theatre for one performance, allowing motion pictures to be shown as announced. The Mayor gave warning that Commission O'Hearn would close the house the next day at the first attempt to exhibit a film and that it would remain closed until the courts found that O'Hearn was wrong or that the management would have to spend thousands of dollars more in making the theatre a first class building.

The theatre did open the next morning, the motion picture show was put on, and it ran all of the following week. There has been no official interference since at the house, but Mayor Curley has filed an action in court asking that the Park theatre be closed or restrained from showing motion pictures in alleged violation of the law.

The suit is considered a friendly one, with the Park being selected as a test case to try out the strength of the new law.

Belle Vue Theatre Opens in Philadelphia

THE Belle Vue theatre opened to the public on December 10, is situated on Front street near Susquehanna, Philadelphia, in the district known as Kensington, the home of varied industries and a large, live population.

The house, erected at a cost of $125,000, is owned by the St. Charles Amusement Company, and is under the management of Milton Rogasner.

Built of concrete with an imposing facade and a ticket booth of marble and mahogany, the entrance is decidedly attractive.

There is a large lobby twenty by seventy-six, with stone tiled floor. The walls lined with different sized posters in specially constructed frames heralding the week's productions.

A brass railing divides the lobby so that the entries and exits can be kept separate to avoid crowding and confusion. There are one thousand seats, standing room for one hundred, with forty-eight exits and thirty windows.

The place is carpeted throughout with rich crimson velvet carpet; the walls decorated by the Venetian Decorating Company, are in artistic terra cotta tones with lighter borders.

The building is heated by steam and the latest ventilating system has been installed by which the air is changed every five minutes.

The lighting fixtures, furnished by the Horn and Brannen Company, of Philadelphia, are of solid brass with opal globes; the indirect system of lighting is used and the effect is soft and pleasing. Twenty-inch wooden chairs with wide aisles and plenty of space between seats promise comfort and safety to patrons.

A Radium Gold Fibre screen assures good pictures with the aid of the latest projection machine.

A Haskell organ with the electric echo will add to the appeal of the theatre, to say nothing of the five-piece orchestra which will be used in conjunction with the organ.

The performance will be continuous, running daily from 1 to 11 p.m. Admission will be five and ten cents and only good feature photo plays will be used, obtained through the Stanley Booking Company. Every form of advertising is being used to give the new house a first boost. A wagon parading the streets, circulars distributed generously, large bill board signs, and notices in all the daily papers gave no one a chance to forget the opening date.

On this occasion palms and potted plants together with many cut flowers gave the theatre a gala appearance.

The opening attraction was "The Tangle," a Broadway star feature. Thousands of eager patrons crowded the doors from 8 until 11. For the rest of this week Geo. Kline's "Vendetta" and "The Painted World" will make up the program.

This new and up-to-date playhouse promises to be a big winner for its owners.

Building Boom in Wisconsin

WITH the advent of winter, Wisconsin and Northern Michigan are experiencing a building boom in motion picture houses such as has seldom been witnessed. There are at this writing no less than thirteen theatres either now under construction or for which plans are being drawn. This in the face of the fact that the traveling theatrical attractions have almost deserted this territory on account of bad business. State exhibitors everywhere report business most encouraging and they all are looking for a wonderful successful winter despite adverse conditions.

Most prominent among those houses building is that which Leslie J. Dietz, son of the famous defender of Cameron Dam, is building at Chippewa Falls. It is to be known as the Metropolitan, 28 x 110 feet, will seat 325 and cost close to $3,000. On account of the prominence of its builder, who helped his father in the defense of Cameron Dam, the house has already received very extensive publicity through the state. The new house is to be managed by Ett Nelson.

Port Washington, Wisconsin is to have a new house. It is being erected by Zeller and Siebert, who announce that it will be ready to open about Christmas. The theatre, which is to be named by a popular voting contest will seat 450 when completed.

South Milwaukee is also to have a new theatre. The Lion will be its name and it is expected to be opened by December 7. C. Brum has announced that his Princess theatre at North Milwaukee will be opened some time next week. Four reels are to be shown at 10 cents, Universal service being used.

On December 5 the Moore Brothers of Mauston opened their new Gem Theatre in that city. The house seats 300 people and is modern in every respect. Three reels are shown and an admission price of 5 and 10 cents charged. A four piece orchestra furnishes the music. Universal service is used.

The Delft Theatres, Inc., under the management of H. S. Callup, will have a string of three theatres, all new houses by January 2. Two of their new houses the Delft at Marquette and Escanaba, Michigan, are already opened, the first having been opened November 4, while the last named was opened November 16. Mr. Callup reports that the Delft Theatre at Munising which is now in the process of construction is progressing very rapidly and will be ready for occupation by the first of the year. All three theatres are of the latest and most modern construction and will play high class attractions and feature photo-plays. They are all booked by the General Film Co. The Delft at Marquette cost $20,000 to erect and seats 400 people, the house at Escanaba seats 500 and cost $60,000, while the house at Munising when completed will cost $25,000 and seat 500.

In addition to the above the following theatres which have already been reported in "The News" are at present under construction. A $15,000 theatre at Shawano 48 x 110 which is being constructed by George Nagle, a $30,000 house at Green Bay now under construction for Henry Goldman; a 1,500 seat house for P. J. Hansen and Son, Antigo, for which the property has been purchased and plans are now being drawn. The house is to be 44 x 185 and will contain a main floor and two balconies. A $15,000 house which is being built at Algona for David Burke. The house is to be 45 x 60 and will seat 400.

$60,000 Theatre Opens in Nebraska

Swan & Swartz opened their new $60,000 motion picture theatre, The Crystal, at Kearney, Neb., recently, to capacity houses. The theatre seats 1,100 people. Each chair cost $1.50 and the finishing and fixtures cost accordingly.

The theatre is one of the works of ornamental art in Nebraska motion picturedom, as being one of the choicest, best arranged and most comfortable in the state. Opening day saw capacity houses, and indications are that Swan & Swartz, successors to the late Dr. Albertson, will make a big success of his venture. They are foremost among the state's agitators for especially built theatres for motion pictures.

David Delphus is proprietor of a new house opening this week at Bridgeville, Pa. The house is a cozy one and has a seating capacity of 265. It opened with the feature Washington at Valley Forge.

Long Beach, Miss., has had its first successful moving picture show this summer and fall under the management of the Naia Amusement Company. The manager is Charles Thornton and William Boyer is the operator. This popular summer resort furnished excellent patronage for the Naia.

Along the Mississippi Valley

Payard's Pictorium, Pass Christian, Miss., one of the oldest moving picture shows along the Mississippi gulf coast, was recently destroyed in a fire which swept part of the city. The management did not allow a little thing like a fire to put them out of business, but promptly relocated in another building. Considerable improvements are said to be planned for next season.

The capital stock of the Jena Amusement Company, Jena, La., has been increased $2,000, and a player piano installed. The company reports a considerable increase in business.

Under the new management of George C. Cacum, the Yazoo Theatre, Yazoo City, Miss., has taken on new life. Mr. Cacum has devoted his attention to seeing that the public is supplied with a splendid film program, supplemented by good music, which is furnished by an orchestra from Memphis under the direction of Prof. Montalbarro. Mr. Cacum is also a singer of note, having at one time been a member of the Savage Opera company. A unique feature of the opening performance under his management was a dance enjoyed by his patrons.

The new Hippodrome Theatre at Eighth and Mommouth streets, Newport, Ky., is now under roof and last week architects Zettel and Rapp left the following contracts: Electrical equipment, Queen City Electric Company; painting, Joseph Steggemann; roofing and sheet metal, Thomas Lee; plastering, Gus Sauer and Marble and tile finishing, T. H. Wilson and Son.

A. E. Elliott has purchased the Maze Theatre at 12th and Baltimore streets, Kansas City, and will change that to a straight 5-cent show. He will also use the Universal Program at this place and will add various musical comedies. This house is a part of the Sexton Hotel, seats over 600, the location being across the corner from the Baltimore and the new Muehlbach hotel, also on the main traffic way to the new Orpheum Theatre, seems to make the prospects very glowing for complete success.

Among the North California Theatres

The New Theatre, located on Polk street, near the corner of Bush, San Francisco, is now being conducted under new management, having been taken over during the past week by H. S. Leyin. The location is on a leading amusement street and on one of the leading thoroughfares leading to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition grounds. The new owner is no stranger in the local field, having for some time conducted the Elite Theatre in the Sacramento street district. This theatre was recently disposed of, following a mysterious explosion that did considerable damage.

The Hub Theatre, conducted at Mill Valley, Cal., by A. Pabst, will occupy a new home in that city early in the spring, probably about the first of March. A site for a new theatre building has been secured near the present structure and work on the foundation of this has already been commenced. The building will contain a theatre with a seating capacity of about seven hundred, with two stores in front, one on each side of the lobby.

It is being erected by C. L. Mehrten, a prominent exhibitor of Berkeley, Cal., who is also treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of California, and a veteran purveyor of amusement. A stage will be installed, enabling the presentation of vaudeville and musical features, while improved systems of lighting, heating and ventilating will be installed. It is the intention of Mr. Pabst to close the present small house as soon as the new one is ready.

A splendid new moving picture theatre is being erected at Turlock, Cal., by Fresno interests and will be opened shortly by F. Stamm, a well known exhibitor of Antioch, Cal., who is interested in several theatres. The new house will be in charge of H. Krebs.
Editor's Note.—This department is prepared to answer all questions from exhibitors relating to the use of music in connection with photoplays, and to suggest suitable music for current pictures. Correspondence will be welcomed.

How One Exhibitor Handles His Music

Rex Midgley, of the Franklin theatre, one of the latest additions to the long list of motion picture houses at Oakland, Cal., is an enthusiastic believer in the value of good music in conjunction with motion picture shows. Not only does he believe that good music is a prime necessity to the proper presentation of motion pictures, but he furnishes the music in his own house and makes a proper charge for it.

Mr. Midgley is best known through his remarkable success in the motion picture business at Salt Lake City. His largest house there, seating 3,000 persons, is regarded as being one of the finest in the entire country, and no small part of its reputation was built upon the excellence of the musical program. The twenty-six piece orchestra installed in this theatre was the finest in Salt Lake City, and almost as many came to hear the music as to see the pictures.

What was accomplished at Salt Lake City is being done at the new Oakland house, although on a rather smaller scale. The new theatre has a seating capacity of but 1,000, instead of 3,000, and the prices of admission are higher, but a longer program is rendered and the music is strongly featured.

The Franklin theatre was opened with a series of spectacular features, but a change in policy has been made of late, and Mr. Midgley is now offering what he terms a vaudeville-motion picture program, consisting of strong features, educational subjects, comedies and weeklies. He is now attempting to secure expressions of opinion in regard to the programs, and the general policy of the house, from his patrons and has been printing a series of questions for criticism in the programs which are distributed. Many answers have been received and some of the suggestions have been valuable ones. As a special inducement to secure answers, the offer was made recently of giving free tickets with the return of any four copies of the program with candid opinions on the questions.

Some of the questions have been very vital ones, for instance: In what particular is our performance overdone? Wherein does it show weakness? How can we, in your opinion, make our performances more attractive? What form of advertising that we use gives you the most information regarding coming attractions and the current programs? In what newspapers do you read the dramatic and motion picture news? Do you get "value received" when you go to the Franklin?

One of the features of the musical program at the Franklin theatre is the pipe organ recital given by Edgar Bayliss, who has been with Mr. Midgley for the past three years. These recitals have proved to be a great drawing card, and the "Old Melodies" arranged by this performer are especially appreciated. The building up of an efficient orchestra has been found to be a matter of much hard work and considerable time. The results, however, are considered by Mr. Midgley to be well worth the effort, especially since the tendency of the motion picture business is toward high grade performances, both in pictures and in music.

Appreciates Wurlitzer Orchestra

The Rudolph Wurlitzer Company has issued, among its attractive advertising matter, a cardboard folder containing and enthusiastic letter from the L. and B. Amusement Company, Inc., New York, proprietors of the Heights theatre. In speaking of the Wurlitzer Orchestra, style K, William A. Landau, the manager of the theatre, writes:

"Both from a musical standpoint and for its drawing power, we must really compliment you very highly upon the production of this wonderful instrument, which we believe will become universally used in connection with motion picture exhibitions."

Users of the Wurlitzer number over a thousand from coast to coast, and the fine tone quality of the instrument adds to the pleasure of patrons desiring something in addition to their motion picture entertainment.

The Wurlitzer Orchestra can be obtained on attractive credit terms, a plan which makes it possible for the instrument to earn its own way for an exhibitor.

The company has numerous branches throughout the country, New York, Philadelphia, Albany, Buffalo, Rochester and Syracuse. The main office is located in Cincinnati.

Building Boom is on in Cleveland

While a business depression may be felt in certain lines and in certain parts of the country a review of motion picture theatres proposed or under construction in Ohio reveals the fact that optimism holds sway in this particular field. The past few months have been particularly fruitful among Cleveland picture theatres.

The Liberty, owned by the Doan Square Realty Company, under construction at Superior avenue and E. 114th street, Cleveland, though not primarily a picture house, will run features on Sundays and from time to time during the week. It will be completed and opened formally by its promoters February 1.

The new theatre under construction for Jacob Babin, at Broad and E. 79th street, will be completed and opened soon. Mr. Babin has leased it to an amusement company formed for the enterprise. Among theatres contemplated or under construction over the state are the following:

Other Theatres Planned Through Ohio

A $10,000 one-story house at Market and Franklin streets, Troy, O., will be built for T. C. Shilling, Dayton, after plans drawn by G. A. Nichaus, architect. A theatre and store building will be constructed for J. C. Campbell, Hartman building, Columbus. The plans provide seating capacity for 900. J. L. Silsbee, architect, prepared plans for a $6,000 theatre for H. E. Wurst, to be built on Broad street, Elyria.

H. W. Riddle will build a $30,000 brick and tile theatre on Main street, Ravenna. The building planned for Paul Stanffer, Columbus, will not be started until spring. The T. R. Morris & Co. has the general contract for construction. William Stanfield, Wads worth, O., will build an $8,000 theatre. W. C. Morton, Schofield building, probably will remodel his building at Euclid avenue and E. 27th street, Cleveland, into a picture show. O. H. Sebring is building a theatre at Sebring, O., at a cost of $12,000, following the plans of Youngstown architects. Contractors are at work on a three-story brick picture theatre for Ortt Brothers, at Newcomers town.

Louis Chakaris, picture theatre proprietor at Springfield, O., has plans ahead for a building to cost $150,000. Edward Miller, Cleveland, will build a theatre costing $35,000 at Woodhill Road and Woodland avenue, following plans drawn by E. H. Goldfein, architect. The Bellaire Amusement Company, Rayland, O., will build a theatre costing $12,000.

August Heimoldt has closed bids on a theatre to be built for him at Bucyrus at a cost of $8,000. Cliff Sutton will erect a theatre at Xenia, after plans drawn by a Detroit architect.

Economizer Made of Brass and Copper Alloy

Mr. Webb is also a first-class machinist and has invented several useful devices used on motion picture apparatus, the latest of which is the No. 2 Economizer. The metal used in this is of high conductivity, brass and copper alloy. The two sides are machined to fit accurately, are held in place by a steel shaft and clamped by means of steel studs and thumb nut. By means of this construction the carbon is held in a vise like grip.

The carbon end is bored to fit the standard sizes of carbons 5/8, 7/8 and 3 1/4 inches, giving the carbon contact of about 80 per cent. of its circumference. All working parts are away from the heat of the arc, thereby insuring long life and preventing the parts from bending. As the carbon burns shorter it can be raised up and clamped to 3 1/2 inch of carbon and will give perfect contact.

When the thumb nut is loosened the jaws part automatically and do not have to be pulled apart. Many operators use these economizers at all times, claiming to get better light and being able to change carbons much quicker.

Mr. Webb is also the inventor of the Webb terminal, shown here; this terminal has been on the market now for eight years, and will be remembered as the first terminal designed especially for motion picture arc lamps. The construction of this terminal is very simple, made of copper alloy, extra heavy and is clamped by four screws.

The No. 1 or short terminal is intended to be used on the lower landing stage, and the No. 2 or long terminal for the top. On account of the extra length the wire lead is kept away from the intense heat of the arc, and will stand an amperage of 100. Mr. Webb has also to his credit other devices, as carbon holders, the film guide aperture plate and the Webb rewinder for hand or motor drive.

Hyman Leases Atlanta Theatre

ARTHUR S. HYMAN has taken over from Jake Wexler a two-year lease on the Grand Opera House, Atlanta, and has opened the theatre with the "Belgian Battalions" picture taken by Edwin F. Wiegle, staff photographer of the Chicago "Tribune," and a second war film on "The Austro-Servian War."

The opening of the doors was a signal for a rush for seats, and Mr. Hyman is decidedly optimistic as to the future of the Grand. This theatre, one of the largest in America, has had quite a fluctuating career as a motion picture house. Harry Hearn, resident manager for Mr. Wexler, stated when the theatre was shut down a few weeks ago that the sole reason for its closing was the lack of good feature films, such as are in demand by Atlanta audiences. The houses were big enough, but the supply of films short.

The fact that the Grand is popular is further evidenced in the fact that only a few months ago this house set a record by drawing more than 40,000 paid admissions in twenty-four consecutive performances.

E. Combs, an expert from California, comes here to be manager of the Grand. Mr. Hyman, through his residence here, will be enabled to be constantly in personal supervision of his theatre.

Continuous performances will be given from 12:30 noon until 11 P. M. The admission price will be five cents in the afternoon and 10 cents evenings.

New Shipment of Carbons in Sight

C. DU BOSCH, sales manager for Hugo Reisinger, sole importer of "Electra" carbons, reports that shipments in limited quantities have been received and that others are now on the way.

This is a good sign, for it means that the foreign carbon situation is no longer critical. Relief is already at hand.
From a dead one to a Live One---in one leap

If we were to write you a hundred page book we couldn't possibly drive home with such sledge-hammer force the mighty argument and lesson shown here in this photograph. It's the story of a dead show house that came back to life in one leap and to such a degree of life that the owners could hardly believe their own eyes. To quote from one of the owners' letters, he says: "The greatest thing that ever happened to this business."

This particular house is situated in a fairly good section of a mediocre show town. The management attempted to win patronage by having their place very swell so they dolled this house up fine. Business didn't seem to come. Then they put up a swell steel canopy in front; that didn't help. They employed methods used by new houses as regards their interior, and thought that would help. They tried everything they knew with little or no results.

THEN they asked the Morgan Lithograph Co. for suggestions and advice. WE asked them to send us a photo of exactly the way their house looked. THEN—we advised them to plaster their front (beautiful and expensive as it was) with Morgan Posters—striking Morgan Posters. At first they let out an awful yell, then they considered our suggestion—THEN they followed out our suggestion. All over that expensive front they plastered posters—over the canopy—on the canopy—in the center of the doors, on the sides of the doors, in the lobby, everywhere and anywhere posters could be placed, and results?—presto—like magic their business increased, and has been on the increase ever since. At first they said, "Oh, no, we won't use posters. What? on our brand new beautiful costly canopy? Oh, no, nothing doing." Then on our advice they plastered up posters as shown in the picture above. NOW their house is doing a smashing business every night and POSTERS DID IT, and poster is no more to do it. Likewise, do we wish to HAMMER it in to you to USE POSTERS, big, clean, bright, snappy posters, new every blessed day and WATCH OR RESULTS. Let us tell you a little more about this poster question. It is vital to your business. Write direct to The Morgan Lithograph Co., Cleveland, Ohio.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Selig Program for the Year 1915

A HOST OF HIGH CLASS PICTURE PLAY PRODUCTIONS IN PREPARATION TO MAINTAIN THE SELIG STANDARD

SELIG SPECTACULAR SPECIALS

Exhibitors can expect during the year 1915, in addition to the Selig Diamond Specials and the Regular Weekly Program, several gigantic, spectacular Specials, release dates for which will be announced later. Among these big releases for early in the new year will be the following:

"THE CARPET FROM BAGDAD" (5 reels). A spectacular Oriental adventure story, made from the popular novel, written by HAROLD MacGRATH, and featuring KATHLYN WILLIAMS, CHARLES CLARY, WHEELER OAKMAN, GUY OLIVER, EUGENIE BESSERER and others.

"THE ROSARY," a great multiple reel picture filmed from the intensely dramatic and soul-stirring drama written by EDWARD E. ROSE, made world-famous by the all-star theatrical company of ROWLAND & CLIFFORD; featuring KATHLYN WILLIAMS and her supporting company.

"THE SERVANT IN THE HOUSE," filmed from that unequalled and startling drama, written by CHARLES RANN KENNEDY, with modern Christianity as its theme, and in which TYRONE POWER, that leading dramatic star, who carried the original stage production to a pinnacle of exalted success, will be featured.

"THE NE'ER DO WELL," a story of adventure in Panama, from REX BEACH'S great romantic novel, in which KATHLYN WILLIAMS and her supporting company will be featured.

"A TEXAS STEER" (5 reels), an elaborate picture-play made from that hilariously popular and ever delightful CHARLES HOYT comedy, featuring TYRONE POWER, as "Maverick Brander."

"THE CRISIS," by WINSTON CHURCHILL—one of the famous books of a decade and which tells one of the most thrilling stories of Civil War adventure ever written, will be reproduced in motion pictures in an elaborate and spectacular manner. The release of "THE CRISIS" will inaugurate an epoch in picture-play making.

Others of Equal Interest Will Follow.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Selig Program for the Year 1915

SEelig DIAMOND SPECIALS

Exhibitors who have found the three-reel SELIG DIAMOND SPECIALS profitable, will be gratified to learn that the ones to be released during the coming months will prove to be even better.

In the three big Selig Studios there are in work at the present time, a series of SELIG DIAMOND SPECIALS (approximately three reels each), which will be released at frequent intervals. These DIAMOND SPECIALS are being filmed along the same lines that have given distinction to Selig productions. The scenarios for these DIAMOND SPECIALS are based upon the most celebrated novels and stage productions which have become popular during the past few months. They will be released through the Special Feature Department of the General Film Company.

SEelig REGULAR WEEKLY PROGRAM

During the past year, the REGULAR SELIG WEEKLY PROGRAM has consisted of seven releases per week (including the Monday and Thursday release of the HEARST-SEelig NEWS PICTORIAL).

The SELIG REGULAR WEEKLY PROGRAM for the year 1915, will include multiple reel releases of such a high character and superior quality that actual competition will be practically eliminated.

There has been such a demand for the SELIG JUNGLE-ZOO WILD ANIMAL PICTURES that special efforts are to be made for the release of a greater number on the REGULAR WEEKLY PROGRAM.

HEARST-SEelig NEWS PICTORIAL

For the coming year, the twice-a-week service of the HEARST-SEelig NEWS PICTORIAL will be increased and extended to an even greater condition of efficiency. Additional bold, clever and intrepid camera men have been sent to the scenes of war, so that there are now experienced news picture gatherers with every important division of each of the warring nations in camp, in trenches, on battle ships, with aviation and balloon forces, etc.

As heretofore, the HEARST-SEelig NEWS PICTORIAL will be released for the benefit of exhibitors every MONDAY and every THURSDAY.

ZUDORA
Thanhouser's Greatest Photoplay
Most Successful Photoplay Ever Staged!

ZUDORA is setting an attendance record that stamps it the greatest money-maker ever offered exhibitors. This wonderful serial photoplay is playing to PACKED HOUSES everywhere. 300 of America's most powerful newspapers are now running the serial story by Harold MacGrath. You can't afford to overlook an attraction like this.

Big NEW THRILLS Coming!—Book NOW!

Many remarkable scenes are now being staged for Zudora. There will be sensational surprises that will continue to keep up the tremendous interest shown. Helen Badgley—the 4-year-old Thanhouser Kidlet—will appear in an early episode. See the Thanhouser Syndicate Representative at any Mutual Exchange in America and book this big drawing card NOW!

Mr. Exhibitor:

Watch for sensational developments in the new episodes of "Zudora." The early episodes of this wonderful photoplay are constructed to lead up to some of the most remarkable pieces of acting in the history of motion pictures.

James Cruze, who is playing the leading masculine role in "Zudora," will be shown in a dual character, more powerful than that portrayed by Richard Mansfield in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." Mr. Cruze will show a dual personality in episode #7, from then on playing the part of the hero and the part of the villain.

The portrayal of the hero will be one of the most sensational things in motion pictures. In this part, he will eclipse his best as "Jimmie Norton" in the "Million Dollar Mystery."

The new sensations in "Zudora" will come with such startling rapidity and such a multitude of thrills that the public will be keyed to the highest pitch of expectancy.

We do not want to keep all the good things to ourselves; hence, we are letting you know, a little in advance, just what to expect on "Zudora."

This picture is breaking all records everywhere, and we intend that it shall set a new mark for photo serials.

Yours very truly,

THANHOUSER SYNDICATE CORPORATION,
Vice President.

What the Exhibitor Wants

IT is said that the exhibitor is not responsive—that he does not write letters, for instance.

We do not find it so. We find, in fact, that he responds very cheerfully and freely—when he gets what he thinks is due him, and when he is particularly pleased over anything he wants others to know how he feels.

Many letters reach us right along; we have a file of several thousand. But the response to our Christmas issue is beyond all precedent. It is remarkable and will amaze you.

* * *

TWO hundred and sixty-eight letters and post cards have been received already and they are still coming in at an undiminishing rate!

I wish we had room to print them all. They are all interesting and instructive. But the few we print tell the story.

If you who read this page are interested in knowing what the exhibitor wants—and who in the trade is not—you will find good practical food for thought in these printed letters.

* * *

FOR one thing, it is evident that the exhibitor wants a very comprehensive trade journal.

You cannot give him too much information. He is constantly asking for more. He is not satisfied with a few gossipy columns, or a mere department in a trade publication.

He wants all the many ground-floor facts, dates and first-hand information on the film and the theatres; and this means a considerable book each week—an exclusive book.

* * *

TO obtain this information the Motion Picture News employs a staff of nineteen persons in New York, managers and offices in Chicago and Los Angeles and regular salaried correspondents in sixty-seven centres in the United States and Canada.

We review pictures and endeavor fairly to appraise them—all in advance, and in three production centres; we publish release dates corrected at the last minute, often before the programme companies deliver release slips to their exchanges; and our staff correspondents comb every week—the entire country—for live news, business news, exhibitor's news.

* * *

ALL this service we give—and it is much service—for two dollars a year!

Exhibitors write us: "I do not see how you can do it." We could not do it—without our advertisers.

WE say this very frankly, and yet just as frankly we say to the advertisers: this is an exhibitor's publication; editorially it is devoted to the exhibitors' interests, not to yours. It is a specialized exhibitor's publication.

We say this, realizing fully our obligation—and the exhibitors' obligation—to the advertiser for making this publication possible. More than that, we say it in the advertisers' best interests.

* * *

WE owe service to the advertiser; and we give it. We give it by giving him circulation, and we can only give him circulation—real circulation—by producing an exhibitor's publication, a specialized exhibitor's publication. It is the only way.

That means a publication devoted exclusively to this trade and primarily and exhaustively to the exhibitor.

If there is any doubt in your mind that the exhibitor wants and expects such a publication and will have no other, it will pay you to read the following letters.

WILLIAM A. JOHNSON.

Bluefield, W. Va., Dec. 9, 1914.

GENTLEMEN: I certainly am reading Motion Picture News and expect to as long as I am connected with the moving picture business.

I have never had a trade paper that I liked as well, for the simple reason that it takes up every branch of the industry, and shows more consideration to the exhibitor than any other paper.

It is full of live news each week and I certainly enjoy it. Kindly advise me when my subscription is up so I may renew it.

Very truly yours.

The Rex.

(Signed) RUSSELL S. WEHLRE.

Sisterville, W. Va., Dec. 17, 1914.

GENTLEMEN: Herewith enclosed we hand you check for $5 for our subscription to your valuable magazine, the Motion Picture News. We are from that western state where people have to be shown, and after receiving the News for some time past we have found it to be all you claim for it and more, for it is "complete" for the exhibitor.

In closing will state that the portrait reached us in good condition and it is the nicest work of the kind that it has been the writer's good fortune to look at.

Thanking you for the good you are doing for the business, we beg to remain,

Yours truly,

The Show.

(Signed) O. F. LANGWORTHY.
Abbeville, La., Dec. 15, 1914.

Gentlemen: I am in receipt of your Vol. 10, No. 24, enclosing color photo of Miss Blanche Sweet, and for both of which kindly accept my sincere thanks and congratulations.

This copy of your paper surpasses any that I have seen in beauty and in interesting matter.

The picture of Miss Sweet is all that the name implies and one could desire.

I would very much like to receive the News and pictures like Miss Sweet's for a long, long time to come.

With my personal wishes to the News for a Merry Christmas and a Happy and Prosperous 1915, I am, Sincerely yours, Gentlemen: Enclosed find $2 for which enter our subscription to your valuable journal.

We received Xmas number and portrait and they were fine; in fact we do not see how you can do it for $2 per. At present we are running a Merchant's Matinee and find it one of the best ideas we ever tried to build up the matinee. We have sixteen merchants who buy matinee tickets at 1 cent each and give them away to their customers.

We have used Universal films for the past year and find them first class and well worth the rental.

Wishing you a Merry Xmas, we beg to remain,

Yours very truly,

Empire Theatre.  (Signed)  ENGLE & MASON.

Gentlemen: Received Xmas issue of Motion Picture News, also the wonderful photo. Sure some class to this photo, and I assure you I appreciate the News at all times, and want to thank you for the enclosed photo.

Wishing you all the success you deserve and compliments of the season, I am

Yours truly,

Lyric Theatre,  (Signed)  WILBUR D. INGLIDNE.

Marshalltown, Iowa.

Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Gentlemen: I wish to say that your Motion Picture News is much better for any exhibitor than any other picture journal. For one thing, your publication reaches me two or three days earlier. I get my Motion Picture News on Friday—nowadays you can't get any mail on Sundays—and I surely let all my work go and read your "News" from one end to another before I get through.

Crystal Theatre.  (Signed)  WM. HEMSKY, Prop.

Gentlemen: We are pleased to acknowledge receipt of your December 19 Christmas Edition with enclosed photo which we both appreciated and admired very much, and wish to congratulate you upon this edition which was exceedingly thorough, interesting and clever throughout.

Very truly yours,

Star Amusement Co., Inc.,  Per (Signed)  F. H. Hahn, Mgr.

Gentlemen: I think the Motion Picture News is there forty ways and then some. In regards to criticisms I have none to make. I get my News two and sometimes three days earlier than the other weeklies, and appreciate it very much.

Yours truly,

State Leagues Prepare to Fight Trade Evils

Michigan Exhibitors in Session at Detroit Will Grapple with Spreading of Free Coupon System—New Hampshire League Will Resist Adverse Legislation—Harrisburg Convention Will Meet When Legislature Opens—Maryland League Takes Special to Motion Picture News

Detroit, Mich., Dec. 22. SOMETHING disappointing was the attendance at the semi-annual meeting of the Michigan Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, which took place Tuesday afternoon, December 15, in the Equity building club rooms. However, what there was lacking in attendance was more than made up in the enthusiasm and interest manifested by those present.

The first regular business was the election of J. C. Kitter, proprietor of the Boulevard theatre, Detroit, to serve as vice-president of the national association representing Michigan.

Peter J. Jeup, president of the Michigan association, then gave an interesting report of the recent meeting held in New York of the executive committee of the M. P. E. L. of A., which he attended.

Fire Marshal Bill Discussed

The question of having eliminated from the State Fire Marshal bill the clause which calls for the inspection of moving-picture theatres semi-annually, was brought up for discussion, and it was unanimously resolved that the legislative committee of the League use their influence and every effort at the coming meeting of the state legislature to have this part of the bill abolished. The two inspections by the State Fire Marshal's Department, which cost the exhibitors $10 each time, are entirely unnecessary, according to Mr. Jeup and association members.

President Jeup then announced the appointment of the following committees: Constitution and by-laws, H. E. Fowser, Adam J. Orth and Mr. Bumler; legislative committee, Peter Jeup, Detroit; Mr. Smale, of Grand Rapids; Mr. Mueller, of Howell; and M. J. Neal, Cadet Hall, Albion and Jarvis from Lansing.

A committee composed of exhibitors in Lansing was appointed to make local arrangements for the annual summer meeting, which will take place June 8 at the Capitol City.

Take Up Intemission Question

There was considerable discussion on the law recently passed in Boston, compelling exhibitors to allow an intermission between each 1,000-foot reel, which is said to relieve eye-strain. Detroit exhibitors feel that in the near future, either locally or at the state legislature, some bill will be presented along similar lines, and it was the purpose of Mr. Jeup to get expressions from the members on this subject.

Opinions were divided. Some were in favor of two minutes, others three minutes, some none at all, and a few five minutes. No definite action was taken, but the matter was referred to the legislative committee for attention.

Just before adjournment, several of the members asked what course to pursue to meet the offers being made by competitors in the way of coupons good for another theatre. The fact was brought out that a deplorable state of affairs in the matter of "free coupons" and "cheap coupons" existed in Bay City.

Coupon Evil Is Invading Michigan

One party who owns a number of theatres gives a coupon, good with every regular admission ticket, which with five cents is good for admission to one of his other ten-cent houses. There is one certain house that is not giving any coupons, but is trying to conduct its business in the regulation way, but he wanted to know what to do, whether to put up a fight or leave it to the association to straighten out. The man finally said that if by January 1 the coupon scheme is still being practiced, he will go his competitor one better.

In the city of Detroit there are also a number of cases where exhibitors are selling coupons below the regular price to merchants, who give them away free, gratis, in connection with wrappers and labels from their goods.

In fact, it is surprising how fast this sort of thing is developing. Not a day goes by that some exhibitor does not have presented to him such a proposition, either by a retail grocer, baker or retail merchant of some kind.

Despite all that the association is doing, as well as its committees, to eliminate evils, it is surprising how fast new ones are constantly creeping in. One thing that makes it difficult is the fact that many exhibitors are not members of the association, and naturally they do just as they see fit, and there is no way to control them. Many of them get films from outside the state, so that the Michigan changes have means of forcing them to live up to the ethics of the association.

The Michigan association now has a membership of approximately 160 exhibitors; close to 30 members have joined since December 1.

New Hampshire League in Enthusiastic Session; Bean Elected to Head Organization

Special to Motion Picture News

Boston, Dec. 22. WITH about 30 of the 72 exhibitors in the state present, and letters received from a dozen others expressing their willingness to join, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New Hampshire was formed at an enthusiastic meeting held on Friday, December 18, at the Eagle Hotel, Concord, N. H.

The organization is mainly the result of the efforts of Charles Bean, of Franklin, who has worked for weeks to bring it about by means of personal visits and letters sent to every part of the state. It is patterned after the Massachusetts league, to embrace not only actual exhibitors, but persons connected with every branch of the motion picture industry.

Seven members of the Massachusetts league went up from Boston and all of them spoke to the gathering, explaining how the Bay State organization was formed and how it is conducted. They were President Ernest H. Horstmann, Harry F. Campbell, manager of the New England office of Box Office Attractions; J. A. Eslov, manager of the New England Universal Film Exchange; Fred B. Murphy, manager of the New England office of the Universal Film Company; E. J. Farrell, of the General Film Company; Thomas Spry, of the Alco, and Charles W. Hodgdon, of the Princess theatre, Wakefield. All of the Boston men joined the newly formed league as representatives of exchanges supplying the New Hampshire trade.

Charles Bean Elected President

The meeting was preceded by a luncheon. Charles Bean, of the Pastime theatre, Franklin, had charge of the affair and was elected the president of the organization for the coming year.

The other officers chosen were: Vice-president, Jacob Conn, of Concord; secretary, Manuel Lorenzen, of Manchester; treasurer, A. L. Couture, of Manchester. Executive committee, G. D. Barrett, of Dover, chairman; W. J. Dupont, of Berlin; George L. Pierce, of Manchester, and F. W. Hartford, of Portsmouth.

While no direct mention was made of the fact at the meeting, the new association is confronted with a great deal of adverse legislation at Concord, and exhibitors all over the state, now welded into a body, are determined not only to oppose all attempts to injure their business, but to have placed on the statutes a few ideas of their own for the uplift of the industry.

The organization went on record as opposed to Sunday shows in the state. In the near future the association will be incorporated under the laws of New Hampshire. The next meeting will be held in a short time at the call of President Bean.

Postpone Harrisburg Convention Until Legislature Meets; Poster Restrictions Arouse Anger

Special to Motion Picture News

Harrisburg, Pa., Dec. 22. ANNOUNCING that the reason for changing the date of the convention to be held in this city of representatives of all the various detached organizations of motion picture exhibitors for the purpose of forming a statewide body, from January 4, 5 and 6 to January 26, 27 and 28, is so that it will come after the State Legislature is in session and is fully organized. James Delves, secretary-treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Pennsylvania, has just sent out a circular letter from Pittsburgh to theatre men in all parts of the state. This is the association which has taken the initiative in calling the convention.

Mr. Delves says that there already is assurance that from 600 to 800 exhibitors will be at the convention and that the sole purpose of the proposed statewide organization is to defend the motion picture business from "present and proposed legislation." The principal sore spot that rankles in the breasts of the Pennsylvania exhibitors appears to be the censorship law, which became effective last June and which exhibitors hope to have repealed in the coming session of the Legislature.

Poster Restrictions Cause Complaint

There has been a good deal of complaint among theatre men regarding the disposition of the present board of censors to try to limit the size of posters that are used, and in this connection the circular says, "It will be impossible for us to book any multiple features or masterpieces, as the law at the present time denies us the right to use any advertising matter larger than a three-sheet, and it is being enforced throughout the state.'

The assurance that prominent motion picture men declare has been given by United States Senator Boies Penrose, the recognized leader of the dominant Republican organization, that he will give his aid in repealing the censorship law, is encouraging to the trade.

The feeling seems to prevail, however, that to obtain the desired repeal, even with Senator Penrose's aid, it will be necessary for the exhibitors of Pennsylvania to show a united and solid front. It is believed, therefore, that by postponing the date of the convention until the latter part of next month, when the Legislature will have passed through the early stages of organization, a more effective demonstration can be made to influence the lawmakers to recognize the justifications of the contenions of the motion picture men.

Poster and Film Rental Questions Come Up Before Maryland League At Next Regular Meeting

MEMBERS of the Maryland branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America will hold a meeting this week. On Tuesday afternoon the executive committee of the League will hold a meeting at which reports will be formulated to be submitted to a general meeting of members, which will be held Tuesday night.

One of the matters which will receive attention is an agreement between the exhibitors and the motion picture operators' union. Members of the executive committee have been at work on a contract applicable to both the exhibitors and the union. It has taken several months to straighten the matter out, but now the plans are in such shape that it is thought that they will go through without a hitch.

The provision that exhibitors will be compelled to rent posters from some of the film distributors is meeting with a great deal of opposition in Baltimore. The executive committee has taken a strong stand against this move on the part of the distributing companies and there is no doubt that the report will be unanimously endorsed at the meeting of members on Tuesday.

Suggestions are made that the report to remedy the plan to rent films, but just what the details of the plan are is being witheld until the exhibitors have an opportunity to try out their proposition.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS

NEW MERGER WILL RELEASE THROUGH UNITED
Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Dec. 21.

A NOTHER motion picture company is being organized, and it is hinted there will be a merger of this and another at a little later date, and then all the products of the company will be released through the United Program, successors to Warner's Features.

W. A. Brooks, owner of the big Western outfit, consisting of more than a hundred horses, a herd of Western cattle, ox teams, saddles, guns, etc., formerly used at the New York Motion Picture Company, studio, is at the head of the new company, and has interested the Millers of 101 Ranch fame.

Burton King, now with the Universal, but formerly director general of the Usona Company, will be at the head of production, and Adele Lane, for the past two years with Selig Polyscope Company as leading woman, has been engaged.

What company or companies will be merged with this new organization has not been given out, but those at the head of the organization believe public announcement will be made in the near future and production work begun about the first of the year.

SPOKANE EXHIBITORS START ANTI-WHITE SLAVE FILM CRUSADE
Special to Motion Picture News

Spokane, Dec. 21.

FOLLOWING a recent conference in Spokane, a number of picture exhibitors and other theatrical men throughout the state are prosecuting a campaign to discourage the use of white slave trafficking photographs and other shows of that nature.

Those who are behind the movement and who are present when the plans for it were brought up here are J. Beck, Pullman; Eugene Levy, Seattle; Herman J. Brown, North Yakima; J. E. Ferguson, Wenatchee; George L. Baker, Portland; L. E. Chandler, Aberdeen; George St. Peter, Everett; J. Sutherland, Bellingham; William Simpson, Leavenworth; Clarence Summerville, Pullman, and H. S. Clemmer, Dan Weaver and Charles York, Spokane.

LICENSE LAW PLANNED IN INDIANAPOLIS
Special to Motion Picture News

Indianapolis, Dec. 15.

A recent meeting of the council city council Monday evening, Councilman Edward R. Miller introduced an ordinance to license all amusements and entertainments for gain or advertising purposes. It divides amusements and entertainments into twenty-one classes and requires application for license to be made to the mayor. School and church entertainments where an admission fee is charged would not be exempt. The license fee for such entertainments would be $5 a day.

Moving pictures in the ordinance, would pay from $26 to $150 a year, according to the hours the places are open and admission charged, the maximum admission fee charged at any time during the year to govern the cost of the license.

BOSTON BUILDING LAW FIGHT BEFORE COURT

The case of the new Park theatre, Boston, comes up in the Superior Court this week when Mayor Curley and Building Commissioner O'Hearn will seek to have the house closed up for alleged violation of the recently enacted ordinance which provides that motion pictures shall be shown only in buildings of first class construction.

The theatre, after being remodeled at a cost of more than $50,000, opened on December 7 and has been running picture shows since in spite of the order from City Hall.

AN ENGINEER COULDN'T RUN SAFELY WITHOUT ANY SIGNALS—
sooner than an exhibitor could safely get along without full and complete release date charts.

That's why the exhibitors who take MOTION PICTURE NEWS wouldn't give it up for any consideration.
THE faddists are at it again. With every ounce of poundage on their command they are trying to make us believe that the swan-song of the motion picture soon will be lifted throughout the land. Already some of them are speaking of motion pictures as ancient history.

On the contrary, and speaking from observation and experience, I can say without reserve that those who are not in sympathy with motion pictures are those whose necks still are encircled by millstones which they would like to shake off if they could do so without loss to themselves.

Faddists never die without a struggle and those few remaining ones tentacled to the drama cannot be blamed for not wishing to prepare their own petard. Within the past several years as many of us as could have deserted the drama for the more lucrative motion pictures. Few have returned to the drama.

General Exodus from the Stage

Within the past year there has been a general hegira of all branches of the theatrical world to motion pictures. Of these, it is only a question of time when motion pictures will supersede everything else in the amusement world. Everything points to it.

To one who understands the qualities of human nature and who is experienced in the ways of providing it with subjects which go to make up human interest, there can be no doubt of the future of motion pictures.

One of the best arguments is the diversified field of motion pictures; embodying everything in which the mind is interested. Human interest is everything on this planet. Without it the four billions of earthly bipeds soon would surrender to despair.

One of the first things an editor will tell a cub reporter is to bring in a human interest story—something snappy and with plenty of action to it, and, above all, something in which we can see ourselves reflected, whether it be meritorious or otherwise. That is the make-up of a newspaper—a daily journal of human interest happenings culled from the four quarters of the globe.

Depends on Producers Alone

The permanency of motion pictures depends upon the producers alone. Just as long as they can picture scenes of human interest and supply enough variety to keep the public mind focused on moving pictures, just so long will motion photography retain its vitality. It must have the same diversity of subjects as the daily newspapers, together with proper technique and the loftiest standards known to the art.

Cheap melodrama is one thing which is proving a menace to the permanency of the motion picture. In my opinion it is something which the public tolerates rather than enjoys, and the quicker it is eliminated the better it will be for the craft.

Time and proper censorship in each community will undoubtedly correct this evil, but it is to be regretted that certain producers still believe the public to be extremely gullible, when, as a matter of fact, any observant person does not have to look twice to convince himself that cheap melodrama received the stamp of public disavowal a long time ago.

It may be said that motion picture producing stands in the embryonic state; that evils naturally have crept in due to inexperience and other kindred reasons. But wonderful reforms have swept aside many of the evils, and we who are on the ground already see far more wonderful things ahead in this busy, fascinating world of picture-producing.

Lack of Good Scenarios

One of the principal faults with which we have to contend has been the lack of good scenarios. In late years there has been an enormous demand for films and this demand is still growing at an unprecedented rate. The result has been that thousands of poorly written scenarios have been filmed in order to supply the demand.

We want scenarios of original plot and harmonious construction and are willing to pay well for first-class productions—scenarios teeming with human interest and chock-full of action. You must utilize judgment and discrimination and scenario writing as in any other legitimate pursuit.

For instance, you can't defly an Italian organ-grinder any more than you can make a hero out of an undertaker, as a young Californian lad did some time ago in a scenario sent me.

The field of human interest from which to draw is practically limitless, and any person of ordinary education and intelligence and with a good imagination can write a scenario.

The main fault lies in the padding thereof. Boil interesting, vital facts down to a thick consistency, classify the chief events, and you have a scenario of which any producer should be proud.

Deceased Pathé Vice-President a Film Expert

ARTHUR ROUSSEL, former vice-president of Pathé Frères and a leading authority on all technical matters pertaining to film manufacture, died at his home in West New York, N. J., after a long illness. The funeral was held at his house on December 16, many prominent men being present, among them Charles Pathé and Louis Gasnier, of Pathé Frères.

Mr. Roussel was only thirty-four years old at the time of his death, but in experience in the film business he was equaled by few. Starting in with Pathé in France while only a boy he had seen the development of the motion picture from the very start. In 1910 he was sent to the United States and placed in charge of the Pathe factory at Bound Brook, N. J.

After some 18 months he was transferred to the studio in Jersey City and about a year ago when the Eclectic Film Company was formed was placed at the head of that business. Early this year when Mr. Berst resigned his position as vice-president of the Pathé American company, Mr. Roussel was honored with the offer, holding it until his resignation this fall because of illness.

Mr. Roussel was an expert photographer and knew film manufacture as do few men. His kindly, cheerful nature made him genuinely popular with all who came in contact with him. He leaves a widow and infant son.

BERANGER, MADE DIRECTOR, WILL PRODUCE "BABY'S RIDE"

George A. Beranger, formerly D. W. Griffith's assistant, has now been made a full director, and his first production for the Mutual program will be "The Baby's Ride."
MARY PICKFORD, the world's most famous motion picture star, who has a greater universal following than any actress in screen history, and who, it has been generally rumored, contemplated leaving the Famous Players Film Company, in whose productions she has exclusively appeared for the past two years, has finally denied the truth of these reports and authoritatively contradicts the supposition that she is entertaining any plans of severing her connection with the Famous Players. Miss Pickford states: "I am very thankful for the numerous and flattering offers recently extended to me, but I sincerely believe that I cannot conscientiously consider any other course than to remain with the Famous Players Film Company. The high artistic standard of this company and its constant efforts to elevate and dignify motion pictures place it conspicuously in a position of being the most serious film producing company in the world.

"The plans the Famous Players have made for the future even transcend the importance and distinction of their past achievements, and I am certain that my continued association with this company will provide greater opportunities for distinctive film creations than could be offered by any other factor in filmmod.

"I owe the public who have so splendidly supported and encouraged me throughout my entire career, careful consideration of this important point, and I feel that in extending my affiliation with the Famous Players, I can best repay, in some small measure, the thoughtful regard that the public has so often demonstrated for the higher element of film offerings."

Mary Pickford began her phenomenal career as a film star several years ago, and throughout her entire association with the screen she has enjoyed an amazing degree of popularity. She is idolized by millions of people all over the civilized world, and is considered the greatest personal attraction in theatrical history. She began her connection with the Famous Players Film Company two years ago, shortly after the inception of this concern.

New Home of Kriterion Nearing Completion

THE new home of the Kriterion Programme is fast being put into shape on the sixth floor of the Mecca building at 1600 Broadway. The offices are those formerly occupied by the Kinemacolor Company, but are being entirely remodeled to suit the needs of the new tenants. One of the important features is the projection room long regarded as one of the finest private theatres in the film trade.

This will be put into the best condition for showing Kriterion pictures. The new offices cover the entire sixth floor, and have an outlook on Broadway, Seventh avenue and Forty-eighth street, thus affording unusually well-lighted and attractive quarters. The furniture throughout is mahogany.

B. E. Clemens, vice-president and general manager, in commenting on the outlook for the coming year, predicted one of the biggest and best seasons yet seen in the film industry. The policy of his company, he said, would be, as already stated, to put on a program of good stories, well produced, and to cooperate with the exhibitor. The producing companies are all hard at work getting films ready for release, and many reels are already on hand. All of these have proved on examination to be of excellent quality, and the future of Kriterion appears to be a rosy one.

MARY PICKFORD IN "CINDERELLA"

Previous to this, she had been selected by David Belasco to create the role of Juliet, the blind little heroine of his famous production, "A Good Little Devil." When the Famous Players Film Company arranged with David Belasco to reproduce "A Good Little Devil" in motion pictures with the entire original cast, "Little Mary" found herself in the unique position of a famous film star leaving the screen to attain a great stage triumph, and returning to motion pictures in the role which won this new distinction. After the completion of the film version of "A Good Little Devil," Mary Pickford was induced by the Famous Players to remain with them, in whose productions she has appeared uninterruptedly throughout this entire period.
FASCINATION OF $10 GOLD PIECES

SATURDAY and Sunday matinees are especially successful in Butte. Each theatre has two ladies' days in the week, when a $10 gold piece is given to the lucky lady holding the right number.

As a general rule, however, there are new stunts tried by the managers. The patronage is steady. The managers advertise liberally in the daily papers, securing liberal space for free readers in proportion to the size of their advertisements.

For a 10-inch double-column advertisement the theatre is allowed a reader of some seven inches long. Each theatre employs a press agent, changes its shows two, three and sometimes four times a week. The rate paid for advertising is small compared with the big cities, 50 cents an inch with the compliment of the free reader and space at all times for good cuts and illustrations.

The Sunday papers give extra space and room for the calendar for the week without extra charge. No paper maintains a special theatrical man but the editors are very liberal in their treatment of the press agents and it is seldom that one is refused the publication of anything that looks like a story.

FREE TRIP POPULARITY CONTEST TO FILL THEATRE

A POPULARITY contest which has been the means of packing the house has been inaugurated by the management of the Ideal Theatre, Louisville, Ky.

This house is in a thickly populated section and several of the residents have entered the contest with the result that their friends have become daily patrons, each ticket being good for a vote. The contest will run for several weeks.

Since the contest started the receipts have increased considerably. A trip to the Panama-Pacific exposition and a piano are among the prizes offered.

“STUDENT MATINEES” A DRAWING CARD

MANAGER ERDMANN, of the Elowood theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., is meeting with unusual success with his “student matinees” which he holds every Saturday afternoon from 2-5 o’clock, presenting all the latest scientific, travel and literary films on the market.

These matinees are widely advertised among the schools and are very popular with the students.

BRINGING “LOCAL COLOR” TO YOUR PATRONS

DESPITE the amusement slump which has gripped Arizona following the British contraband of war on copper, the big product of the state, enterprise has shown that a feature properly handled will get results in the face of any sort of depression.

Walter B. Leecraft, Phoenix, Arizona, secured for his mid-week feature at the Lion theatre the “Wrath of the Gods,” and not content with billing it like a circus, he decorated his entire house with Japanese wisteria and native roses, just now in bloom there.

The effect was heightened by cleverly designed Japanese lanterns which, placed over the house and exits lights, gave the foyer of the theatre a decided Nippon atmosphere. Incidental to the screening of the picture his orchestra rendered a program in which Japanese selections were the feature. The lanterns used to cover the lights were designed by Mr. Leecraft from baskets and were supplied with characteristic Nippon artistry in the shape of faces done in colors on gelatine and inserted in clefts in the sides of the wickerwork.

The opening of each show was made more impressively Japanese by the burning of incense and the tolling of little Japanese sorrow bells. Not in the history of features in this section has a picture received such a lavish theatre setting, and the effort drew a business that well recompensed the outlay.

Mr. Leecraft marked an epoch here in submitting features, and the success of this the first attempt to inject atmosphere into a screen offering here will probably be the means of seeing more of the big things done with an attempt at really novel settings.

AUTOMOBILE FLOAT FOR “THE MASTER KEY”

WHEN it comes to using advertising stunts that are history-making, James F. Jackson, manager of the Savoy theatre, of Atlanta, may be put down in the front ranks as a man of stunning originality.

The accompanying picture shows how Mr. Jackson was represented in the big “Hog and Hominy” parade. Expert designers, under his direction, made a float widely commented on as one of the most handsome in the parade, or any float, for that matter, seen in an Atlanta parade for some time.

Incidentally, Mr. Jackson showed the Universal picture to packed houses.
RUTH ROLAND, the famous Kalem girl, began her association with the Balboa Company, of Long Beach, Cal., Monday, December 14, under the direction of Harry Harvey. She will be featured in the twelve prize productions involving twelve vital questions of life.

To the surprise of those high in motion picture circles Miss Roland will be starred in dramas instead of comedies. But she is not undertaking anything new to her. On the contrary, she is returning to the field of effort in which she scored her first successes.

In the “Twelve Vital Questions of Life” features Miss Roland’s versatility will be heavily taxed. She will be called upon to interpret roles that require a combination of all the splendid abilities she has so carefully cultivated, and for the first time the public will have an opportunity to see her in artistic blendings of comedy, pathos and tragedy.

Mr. Will M. Ritchey, one of the best known and most capable scenario writers in the United States, who has convinced the motion picture world that he is a real dramatist and a pastmaster of cinematicographic technique, is giving his personal attention to the plays Miss Roland will appear in.

Some of these have been furnished by the foremost scenario writers in the country. Others are picturizations of popular novels, while the most powerful will be from Mr. Ritchey’s own pen.

United Service Offices Altered at Cost of $6,000

Space Occupied by the Exchange Handling Warner’s Features Has Been Almost Doubled—Art Department in Specially Light Quarters

EXTENSIVE alterations in the general offices of the United Film Service have just been completed, involving the expenditure of approximately $6,000. Increased volume of business has made necessary the changes undertaken. Not only have economy of space and general improvement of facilities been effected as regards the general offices, but the New York exchange, which occupies part of the eighth floor in the Leavitt Building—the home of the United—has been almost doubled in size.

A rearrangement of the file room, where in copies of all advertising matter put out are kept on file for purposes of reference, is one of the changes made.

December 27 Set for “Eternal City” Showing

Hall Caine Play, Produced by Famous Players Under Direction of Porter and Ford and Featuring Pauline Frederick, Filmed in Original Locale

THE much-discussed photo spectacle of Hall Caine’s master-work, “The Eternal City,” produced in Italy and England by the Famous Players Film Company, will be given its premiere presentation at the Lyceum Theatre, Sunday evening, December 27, by private invitation.

Under the direction of Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford, a carefully selected company, headed by Pauline Frederick, was sent abroad to film this master-work in the exact locale in which its stirring action occurs. All the scenes in the Vatican Gardens, in the Castle of St. Angelo, the Colosseum, the famous Roman Forum, the beautiful Villa D’Est in Tivoli, and other historical spots in the Imperial City were reproduced with the consent of the highest ecclesiastical and civic authorities.

All the costumes of the Noble Guard of the Roman Pontiff, of the Swiss and Municipal Guards were made after specimen uniforms shown to Mr. Ritchey, duplicates of which are on loan to the productions by the highest sanction. It is the first time in the history of motion pictures that these unprecedented liberties have been granted. Messrs. Porter and Ford also succeeded in securing the services of thousands of the Roman Carabinieri, and have immortalized with absolutely perfect detail every phase of Hall Caine’s wonderful story. The production is on an order of sumptuousness that realizes all the possibilities of the play from a scenic, satirical and accession standpoint.

VITAGRAPH BENEFIT A HUGE SUCCESS

The Christmas Fund Benefit given by the Vitagraph Company at the Vitagraph Theatre, New York City, Wednesday night, December 9, in which the worthy poor of the city of New York will participate on Christmas Day, was one of the most unique entertainments ever given by a motion picture company, and, besides netting $1,106, was a decided artistic success.

At the inception of the evening was the auctioning off of autographed programs, spirited bidding being the rule, while one program profusely autographed brought $100, which was cheerfully paid by one of the Vitagraph heads.

"ROSE OF THE RANCHO" GRAPE VINE 144 YEARS OLD

Millions of people who are destined to witness the Jesse L. Lasky production of David Belasco's dramatic hit, "The Rose of the Rancho," will doubtless comment on the beautiful grape arbor under which the villain, Kincaid, and his men plot the seizing of the various Spanish "ranchos."

It is well authenticated local history that this particular vine, which has grown to such wonderful proportions, was planted in the year 1770 or just before the Eastern States fought the war of revolution which freed them from England.

ILLNESS FORCES CLARKE, OF EDISON, TO RESIGN

Edwin Clarke, the popular young Edison player, who for the past four years has been associated with that studio, has resigned because of a serious illness which will require permanent residence in California's mild climate. His impression in the "Fantasmas" film forms a splendid climax to his long service for the studio and it is remarked by his fellow players as being highly typical, in its boyish, winning grace of manner, of Mr. Clarke's own personality. Julian Reed, his friend for years, took Mr. Clarke to the train, as the representative of the studio, to wish him the speediest return to health, for he was beloved by all his co-players.

SECURES BRITISH RIGHTS TO LIFE PHOTO

Bishop, Pessers and Lorimore have secured the exclusive rights of all the releases of the Life Photo Film Company, for Great Britain and her colonies other than Australia and Canada. This is one of the many excellent programs that Mr. Pessers expects to close before sailing for Europe on December 30.

EDWARD ABELES IN "AFTER FIVE"

Edward Abbeles has been re-engaged by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company to star in the release entitled "After Five," which is announced for January 28.
Griffith’s Production of “The Clansman” Finished

WITH the exception of the re-making of a few scenes for the allegorical ending, the big multiple reel picture, “The Clansman,” adapted from the novel by Thomas Dixon, Jr., on which D. W. Griffith, director general of the Reliance and Majestic studios, has spent a greater part of the past six months in filming, has been finished and will be sent to the factory within the next few days.

D. W. GRIFFITH, FRANK E. WOODS AND G. W. BITZER (CAMERAMAN) IN CONSULTATION

This picture is said by the producers to be the most expensive and stupendous ever made in America, requiring as it did more people, scenes and settings necessary to give atmosphere and realism to every one of the ten thousand or more feet which will be used in the finished product.

In making it is estimated that more than one hundred thousand feet of negative film was exposed and developed, ten thousand extra people appeared in battle and street scenes, and all the cavalry companies of the California National Guard took part.

Five separate village scenes were built, costing thousands of dollars. These consisted of buildings made of lumber, fitted with doors, windows, in some instances plastered within; yards where the replicas of flower gardens of Southern homes were made, and picket fences, brick sidewalks, and the coal oil street lights of early days added. On one side of the street store buildings were erected, at the end a church. All are duplicates of buildings and scenes of the anti-bellum period.

One of the most expensive sets was that of the Ford theatre, Washington, D. C., where the assassination of Abraham Lincoln was accomplished by Wilkes Booth. In this Joseph Hannabery impersonated the part of the martyred President, and R. A. Walsh that of Booth. The stage, boxes, parquet, orchestra pit, and dressing rooms were made to appear the same as on the night of April 14, 1865, when Laura Keene played in “Our American Cousin.” Of this set less than two hundred feet will be used in the finished product, and the filming required two days of rehearsals for almost 300 people before the camera was used.

Not only in the matter of settings and props was expense added to this picture, but in selection of players for the leading parts. Henry Waldbill, known in Los Angeles as the Edwin Booth of the screen, plays the leading part, Benjamin Cameron, with Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper as his sisters, Florence and Margaret. The role of Austin Stoneman, the great commoner and noted Southerner, was played by Ralph Lewis, and in order that he might impersonate the part correctly, for two months before appearing before the camera, he wore a shoe with a three-inch sole, thus making it possible for him to appear as a cripple. After finishing the part, it required two months for Lewis’ strained muscles to resume their normal condition.

Lillian Gish is featured in the leading feminine part of Elsie Stoneman, with Robert Harron and Elmer Clifton as her brothers. Sam de Grasse was Charles Sumner, Donald Crisp General Grant, Toward Gaye General Lee. Spotlisswoode Atken Dr. Cameron, father of Benjamin, and Josepha Crowell, Mrs. Cameron. Jennie Lee played the role of the old mammy, Cyndy.

“SATAN SANDERSON” CAST OFF FOR FLORIDA

B. A. Rolfe’s company, headed by Orrin Johnson and Irene Warfield, in the production of “Satan Sanderson,” leaves shortly for Jacksonville, Fla., where a number of the interiors will be staged.

The entire company spent three days at Princeton, N. J., last week, and Director Jack Noble induced a number of college boys to aid in the producing of college scenes.

It is a strange coincidence that Orrin Johnson is a graduate of Princeton, and when he arrived at the college was as thoroughly familiar with the surrounding buildings as though he had rehearsed there. After picking locations, Mr. Johnson took several class leaders to the college register, and after satisfying them he was a Princetonian, secured the services of several hundred extras without cost to the company.

“GARDEN OF LIES” ALCO NEW YEAR’S RELEASE

The New Year’s release of the Alco Film Corporation will be “The Garden of Lies,” in which Jane Cowl, the talented dramatic star, makes her first appearance on the screens of the country. “The Garden of Lies” is a photo-dramatization of Justus Miles Forman’s story which has had an international circulation. In the legitimate theatres of England it was played by Sir George Alexander, the noted English actor-manager.

Miss Cowl, the All Star Feature Corporation’s players supporting her, two directors and Manager Philip Klein went to St. Augustine for the exteriors and some of the interiors. Several splendid southern mansions were leased for a short period. One was wired and equipped and two reels of interiors were made there.

Jane Cowl in “The Garden of Lies” is the regular Alco release for Monday, January 4.

JUSTINA WAYNE A Kriterion STAR

The All Comedy Films, Inc., one of the producing companies releasing on the Kriterion Program, have secured the services of Justina Wayne. She has had a varied career of the legitimate stage playing leading parts in such productions as

JUSTINA WAYNE

Miss Wayne’s first appearance is in a two reel drama entitled “Eliza’s Fairy Prince.” Crawford Kent plays leads opposite Miss Wayne.
THE YOUNG COUPLE DEPART
MARGUERITE CLARK IN "THE PRETTY SISTER OF JOSE"
Marguerite Clark, who recently made her first appearance in motion pictures in the Famous Players' production of "Wildflower," succeeded by "The Crucible," is now at the Pacific Coast studios of the Famous Players, appearing in a film adaptation of Frances Hodgson Burnett's beautiful novel and play, "The Pretty Sister of Jose," the former famous starring vehicle of Maude Adams. Miss Clark will play the title role of Jose's sister, little Pepita, the tiny, exquisite Spanish girl of a thousand moods and whims, who has vowed never to lose her heart, but who, when finally conquered by the handsome Sebastino, loves truly and devotedly, ready to give her life for his, ready to die when she thinks him dying, and ready to live again when the saints give her back his life.

"GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST" RELEASE ON JANUARY 13
The first print of "The Girl of the Golden West," the new Lasky-Belasco production, which is positively to be released on January 4 and which will have its first New York presentation at the Strand theatre on January 3, has arrived in New York. The work of making the additional prints for distribution on the Paramount program is already under way. "The Girl of the Golden West" is in five reels. Much of the production work was done at the new Lasky twenty thousand acre ranch. This is the first picture for the firm in which House Peters has played.

CAST OF "IN THE SHADOW" ANNOUNCED
"In the Shadow," the next picture to be released by the Excelsior Feature Film Company, is the story of two college boys, whose affection for each other leads to the episodes displaying loyalty, nerve and daring, illustrated in the picture. The parts of the college boys are taken by William A. Williams and Gordon DeMaine. The love story in the picture is centered about a sister of one of the boys, and the sweetheart of the other. This part is ably filled by Octavia Handworth. The rest of the cast consists of Mary Boyd, Francis Pierlot, and several others.

THE APPARITION
ONE ANIMAL SINGLE A WEEK FROM SELIG
Each Saturday of the week will see the release of a single-reel animal story, by The Selig Polyscope Company, beginning with Saturday, December 19. According to present plans, W. N. Selig states that this day has been decided upon after a conference with many exhibitors. The Selig Polyscope Company proposes to give exhibitors and the public all the big action and stirring situations similar to those of former features, in single-reel pictures. A further announcement on the subject is promised.

THE REUNION
ROLFE TO PRODUCE "THE HIGH ROAD"
B. A. Rolfe, of B. A. Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., is on his way to Hollywood, Cal., where he is to occupy a new studio which is just being equipped. Mr. Rolfe has been busy with plans for this studio, but before he left for the across the continent trip he announced that he has obtained from Harrison Grey Fiske the rights to produce "The High Road," by Edward Sheldon, on the screen.

NEW PLAYS FOR FARNUM
Samuel Goldfish announces that the versatility displayed by Dustin Farnum in his characterization of Cameo Kirby in the photodrama from the play of that same name has led Mr. Lasky and the entire Lasky organization to devote particular attention to the selecting of a series of vehicles for Mr. Farnum.
In and Out of Los Angeles Studios

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Dec. 21.

In the making of "Fooling Father," a one-reeler, Allen Curtis passed the century mark in his work with the Universal, this subject being the one hundredth he has made for the Joker brand. In the hundredth, like the first, the lead was played by Max Asher. This picture shows how a miserly father is induced to come through with the cash necessary for the luxuries of his family, and at the same time change his views with regard to a certain young man who is very attentive to his daughter.

The others in the cast besides Mr. Asher were Gale Henry, William Franey, Lillian Peacock and Ralph McComas. Director Curtis has been with the Universal company for one year and seven months, during which time Clarence C. Badger has written half of the scenarios used by him. "Fooling Father" being the fiftieth one he has prepared.

Wilfred Lucas is filming an unusual story written by Bess Meredith, entitled "Life." In this Cleo Madison plays the part of a pure and unsophisticated village maiden who makes a successful uphill battle against the sins of society.

In the end her life is made a happy one, by virtue of her experience teaching how she could protect others and prevent them from the sorrows that befell her. Miss Madison is supported by a very strong cast, including Edward Sorman, Joe King, Margaret House, Laura Oakley, Ray Hanford and Hylda Hollis. The subject will be completed in two reels.

Curtis Directs Laughable Nestor Play

Both Nestor company comedies were busy last week, Al Curtis directing the making of "Jimmie's Little Kid," in which a son in forms his father—in order to induce the parent to come through with some extra cash—that he is married and the home has been blessed with a child.

When the father arrives Jimmie's friends and butler secure "a" child, while he hunts up a wife. One infant, when unwrapped proves to be of a darker shade than desired, and is the cause of the son being forced to make a clean breast of the whole deal. Jack Dillon is the Jimmie in the picture. Billie Rhodes the sweetheart, and William Rattenbury the father. "Lizzie's Dizzy Career" features Victoria Forde as a country village lass whose "wonderful" voice causes her to try comic opera. Eddie Lyons, as Jed, her sweetheart from the tall grass, protects her from the villainy of Lee Moran, the stage manager, and the couple decide to marry and conduct a grocery store.

Neilan's Last Week at Kalem

The sacrifices of a husband who finds he has wronged his wife play the important part in a two-reel Rex, "Their Island of Happiness," being filmed by Burton King and company, composed of Ray Gallagher, Edna Maison and Beatrice Van.

Sidney Ayres is engaged in filming a western and Canadian woods story, "The Heart of Sampson," in which the trapper revenges the ill treatment accorded his sister by a passing civil engineer. Val Paul plays the part of the engineer, Scott Beal his assistant, Wilbur Higby an old trapper, Doris Pawn the sister and Mr. Ayres the brother and trapper.

Marshall Neilan has made his last comedy at the Kalem Hollywood studio, featuring Lloyd V. Hamilton, Ethel Teare and others, and has taken up work at the Lasky studio, where he will be starred in "The Country Boy." Later Mr. Neilan will go with the Famous Players western company for a permanent engagement. C. E. Ward will continue as director at the Kalem studio and it is understood another director will be added at a later date. It has not been announced who will be placed in charge as manager in Mr. Neilan's stead.

The first New York Motion Picture Company production, featuring Beasie Barriscale, "The Cup of Life," produced under the direction of Thomas H. Ince and Raymond B. West, is completed. Of the scenes made for this picture, the largest are those of the ball room. The Inceville stage was equipped with several thousand dollars' worth of furniture and more than 100 people took part.

"The Cross of Fire" is a Canadian woods story filmed by a company of Inceville players in the San Bernardino mountains, where the big trees afford excellent Canadian scenes. The plot shows the cause of a French woodsman becoming a devout Christian, after being a blasphemer of faith for years following his unheeded prayers that his wife's life be spared. Harry Edwards is directing the subject and playing the lead part.

Shorty Hamilton, cowboy comedian at the Inceville studio, has been playing the role of a prizefighter in a comedy, "Shorty and the Prizefighter." In this the westerner, while in the city on business, gets in bad because of the attractive eyes of a maid, loses his bank roll, gets into a street fight and is challenged to a bout by a passing champion "pug." During the fight it is discovered by the cow-puncher that his opponent has weights in his gloves, and after these are removed the professional gets his.

Scott "Directs Deadly Spark"

Sidney Scott directed the production of "The Deadly Spark," a Domino, Broncho or Kay Bee drama, in which a renegade son-in-law, in attempting to rob his father-in-law, after mistreating the wife and daughter, is electrocuted when he touches the knob of the safe, as the result of an attachment the owner had placed there. The death permits the completion of a pretty romance that had been begun years before the wife had married.
William Worthington, character lead for the Otis Turner Special Feature Company of the U, is directing the filming of a story by Mr. Turner, while the little big church, which is working on scenarios for several big productions, is superintending the finishing of “Changed Lives,” a three-reel production now in the laboratories.

“Wolves in Society” is the title of the two-reel picture by the Frank Lloyd Rex Company, which, as the name indicates, is a society drama, written by Mr. Lloyd, who plays the leading part. He is supported by Frank Bennett, Marc Robbins and Gretchen Lederer.

Murdock MacQuarrie is playing the part of a bold bad man, in a crook story, “Putting One Over,” in which he is successful in making the police and detectives think him innocent by claiming a baby found in his room, a child of his dead wife, whose father is the man he killed. The picture is directed by Charles Giblyn and the other principals of the cast are Charles Hickman, Seymour Hastings and Agnes Vernon.

The Jack Blystone Joker company is making “Some Nightmare,” in which a dream-producing pipe brings to the imagination of the players pictures of an unpleasant nature. Ernest Shields and Eddie Boland are the dreamers and Phil Dunham puts on skirts and plays the part of the wife of the former.

The Henry McRea 161 Bison company are now at Truckee, Cal., making the exteriors for “Ridgeway of Montana” to be a four-reel production from the story by William McLeod Raine. Strife between two powerful mine owners and their battles for possession of each other’s property makes this book one well adapted to filming, and with the excellent locations afforded by the mountain region of Truckee there is every reason to expect this will be an offering of unusual merit. William Clifford will play the part of Ridgeway and Sherman Bainbridge the opposing mine owner. Marie Walcamp will act the part of Mrs. Harley, and the other principals will be Rex de Roselli, Vivian Rice, Olive Golden and Lule Warrenton. The company will remain at Truckee several weeks.

Selig Produces Allegory

Colin Campbell and Selig players have produced “The Vision of the Shepherd,” in two reels, which is of an allegorical nature. The scenes for the shepherd with his flock, where he discovers one lamb is missing, were made on a big sheep ranch in a canyon near Chatsworth Park. Discovering the lamb missing causes the shepherd to recall the disappearance of his daughter, and a vision appears in which the Christ points out where the missing girl can be found. This leads to the reunion of the family and the return home of the daughter. The players in the cast were Charles Clary, Wheeler Oakman, Harry Lonsdale, Frank Clark, Eugenie Besserer and Kathlyn Williams.

The battle scenes for the Tiffany Film Company’s feature, starring Mrs. Leslie Carter in “The Heart of Maryland,” were made at a big ranch east of Los Angeles. For these scenes a village set, including a church 40 x 60 feet, and several handsome southern homes, located at the fictitious city of Colvert, Md., were built and destroyed.

A full company of cavalry under Captain W. M. Gunn, a company of infantry in charge of Major H. B. Light, and a company of artillery, led by Captain R. A. Ford, of the California National Guard, together with more than one hundred other extra people, were used in these scenes.

Oscar Apfel, Edward Abeles and company of Lasky players producing “After Five” have been enjoying a vacation; that is, if you can call being snowbound such. The players went to Squirrel Inn, in Bear, California, week before last and no sooner had they landed and been made comfortable for a good night’s rest before starting on the strenuous work. than a blizzard hit that part of the mountains. When last heard from none of the players had ventured out to see how deep the snow was, but Mr. Apfel was very encouraging with the news that they could secure enough Arctic atmosphere for hundreds of reels of pictures by pointing the lens out the door.

Lasky’s “The Country Boy”

Fred Thomson will direct the Lasky production of “The Country Boy,” from the play by Edgar Selwyn, which proved a big New York success, and it has been announced that Marshal Neilan, for the past year director general of the Kalem Hollywood studio, will play the leading part, originated by Forrest Wimmant.

George Melford is now directing Harry Woodruft in “The Gentleman of Leisure,” and Cecil de Mille will, within the next few days, complete “The Warrens of Virginia,” many of the scenes of which were made at the Lasky ranch of hundreds of acres in the San Fernando Valley, north of Los Angeles. In the latter production Blanche Sweet is being starred.

The new glass studio has been completed at the Lasky studio, and players and friends initiated this with a dance given in the evening.

Manager Fred Balshofer, of the Sterling Motion Picture Company, does not permit weather conditions to prevent his companies working, as was shown a few mornings ago, when he hurried players out into a rainstorm and made a rainy day picture, featuring Louise Fazenda and Gus Erdman.

HOBART BOSWORTH AND HIS DOG “SKOORUM”

The exterior scenes for “Ridgeway of Montana” were taken at the Idle Hour Ranch near Big Bear Lake, California, and the entire cast appeared there to do the scenes.

JESSE L. LASKY AND CECIL DE MILLE AT HOLLYWOOD

David Kirkland is directing John Brennan, Willie (Walrus) Walbert and others at Dead Man’s Island, where a cannibal comedy is being made.

AMONG THE EXCHANGES

CALIFORNIA EXCHANGE IN NEW HOME

The California Film Exchange, which distributes Universal films in the San Francisco territory, and which during the past few years has grown to be one of the largest concerns of its kind on the Pacific coast, is now settled in its new home at 121-127 Golden Gate avenue, near Jones street. This exchange now occupies more floor space than any other film exchange in San Francisco, this being well in excess of ten thousand square feet.

An interesting feature of the new establishment is the attention that has been paid to caring for film. Instead of storing film stock on open racks, as is the general rule there, Manager Morris L. Markowitz has had two large concrete vaults constructed, one on each floor, these having a combined capacity of about eight thousand reels.

The offices, display room and booking department on the main floor take up almost as much floor space as the entire establishment occupied in the old Seventh street quarters, and these are fitted up in sumptuous style.

The location chosen for the new home of the California Film Exchange is in the center of a lively film district. In the block in which it is located are the Box Office Association, the National Film Exchange, the Union Film and Supply Company, and the Supreme Features Corporation.

“NIGHTINGALE” REACHES HIGH WATER MARK

Ethel Barrymore in “The Nightingale,” the first release of the Alco Film Corporation, although now several months old, enjoyed its most prosperous week during seven days beginning December 14, when every print in existence worked the entire week and orders were received for additional prints from several of the territorial offices.

All in all the booking departments of the various Alco Exchanges sent in the most optimistic reports during the week just past, and combined to make it the biggest Alco week since the inception of that company under its present direction.

FIVE NEW ALLIANCE EXCHANGES OPENED

Last week saw the addition of five new exchanges to the list of Alliance offices, which now total nineteen.

In the West the new offices are located in Spokane, Wash.; Butte, Mont., and in Denver. These exchanges will do business under the name of the Alliance Programme Service.

The South will have two new offices. In Dallas the new exchange will be known as the Alliance Film Company, of Texas, and will be one of the best equipped film houses in the South. This concern will operate under the management of J. W. Hill, Jr., and will handle the Alliance Programme in Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Arkansas.

The other Southern exchange will be located in Atlanta, Ga., and will be known as the Hybar Film Corporation. The latter concern will have the exclusive rights to the Alliance output in Georgia, Alabama, North Carolina and South Carolina.

Arthur S. Hyman, formerly general representative of the World Film Corporation in the South, and P. T. Barber, late advertising manager of the Atlanta Constitution, are the men behind the Hybar organization.

LOS ANGELES EXCHANGE MEN ORGANIZE BOARD OF TRADE

The organization of the Los Angeles film exchange men, to be known as the Film Exchange Board of Trade, has been fully organized, officers elected, and arrangements made for affiliation of this body with the one of San Francisco.

By this affiliation it will not be necessary for the local organization to apply for a charter from the state, and while the entire organization will be known as the San Francisco Film Exchange Board of Trade, the members of this city will have a local organization.

The manager, whose name has not been announced, will take up his duties the first of the coming year, and will at that time open offices, which will become the clearing house for troubles of the exhibitors and exchange men as well. The officers will not be announced until later.

A few of the exhibitors have been heard to complain that this organization will eventually cause an increase in price and other regulations of the trade unfavorable to the theatre owner. This, according to exchange men who are members, is a mistake, and the sole purpose of the organization is for the betterment of the business and regulations only that will be of benefit to the trade generally.

MACK MANAGER OF PICTURE PLAYHOUSE IN SYRACUSE

William A. V. Mack, formerly manager of the Peerless Feature Film Company, has accepted a similar position with the Picture Playhouse Company, with offices at 20 Vinney Building, Syracuse, N. Y.

Mr. Mack has had several years' experience in the film business, is well known among the exhibitors throughout New York State and already reports excellent business from his new location.

UNIVERSAL BUYS THREE WESTERN EXCHANGES

With the announcement of David Bershon, who has been with the California Film Exchange, Inc., with branches at San Francisco, Los Angeles and Phoenix, Arizona, that he is to be succeeded on December 28 by J. W. Allen, as manager of the Los Angeles exchange, it became known that the three exchanges had recently been sold to the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. The three exchanges were established by M. L. Markowitz and Mr. Bershon, and the former will remain as manager of the San Francisco studio.

A. B. Knox, who has been manager of the Phoenix branch, for the past six months, will remain in charge there.

Mr. Allen, who is to become manager of the Los Angeles exchange comes here from the Warner's Feature Exchange at San Francisco, where he has acted in capacity of district manager. Mr. Bershon has not made a statement as to his intentions for the future, but by friends it is understood that he will be identified with the motion picture industry. He has been in charge of the Los Angeles exchange since March and has won the confidence and esteem of the exhibitors of Southern California and been wonderfully successful in increasing the rental business of Universal releases.

WARNER SAN FRANCISCO EXCHANGE MOVES

The J. L. Warner Film Company, of which Jack L. Warner, formerly manager of the San Francisco branch of Warner's Features, is the head, has taken offices on the sixth floor of the Pacific Building, Fourth and Market streets, San Francisco, and will be ready for business as soon as the large stock of film already arranged for is received.

The Pacific Building was selected as headquarters as there are already four large exchanges located there, as well as several concerns selling state rights. Mr. Warner recently returned from a trip to New York, on which he was accompanied by his wife, a bride of a few weeks.

BOX OFFICE MANAGER IS HARD AT WORK

Harry F. Campbell, manager of the New England office of the Box Office Attractions, is cutting a lively pace in film circles of Boston. He assumed the managementship only a short time ago, but already he has got some of the biggest houses in New England on his string, including Poll's Plaza, Warrant, the Colonial, Brockton, which opens January 11; the Park, Bangor, Me., which opens December 28 with "The Walls of Jericho," and the Mystic theatre, Malden. He is also book-
Jesse L. Lasky Returns to California Studios

While in New York He Held Numerous Pacific Coast to Supervise New Conferences with Belasco and Goes to Productions of the Company

After a stay of less than a month in New York, Jesse L. Lasky will start for California and will remain there for some time to supervise the various new productions which are being made at the Lasky studios and especially the new Lasky ranch in the Santa Juacinta Mountains.

The recent vast enlargement of the Lasky manufacturing facilities in the West has made Mr. Lasky himself anxious to supervise the undertakings of the next few months. While in California, he will be in close touch with the preparations of the forthcoming Lasky-Belasco releases, notably the "Warrens of Virginia" in which Blanche Sweet makes her debut, and "The Woman," by William C. De Mille.

Selig Monthly House Organ Pleases Exhibitors

"The Monthly Release Herald" for January Contains Program Fully Illustrated with a Synopsis of Each Picture

This edition bears the date of January, and is number one of volume two. Since the inauguration of the monthly magazine by the Selig Publicity Department, a great many letters have been written by exhibitors complimenting the Selig concern on the excellence and desirability of the publications for the use of exhibitors. There are three pages of editorial notes and general information in connection with future releases by the Selig Polyscope Company. Every item will prove of interest to exhibitors.

Gloyd Building that was under J. C. Woolf's charge has now secured the services of Richard Broderick as manager.

Kalamazoo Chain of Theatres Signs for Paramount

The Kalamazoo Amusement Co., of Kalamazoo, Mich., of which Mr. Goddie Rosenbaum is president, has entered into an arrangement with the Casino Feature Film Co., whereby the Paramount Service will in the future screen its productions at their chain of theatres, comprising the Lyric, Colonial, Elite and Orpheum. The deal was consummated when Mr. Rosenbaum was in Detroit on Monday, November 16.

J. D. Jameson New Manager in Seattle for Kleine

J. D. Jameson, connected with the Kleine Pittsburgh office as traveling representative, has been transferred to Kleine's branch at Seattle, Wash. He becomes manager of the Seattle office, succeeding O. R. Henkel, resigned.

Kleine Opens New Philadelphia Office

George Kleines rapidly growing business has made it necessary to open a Philadelphia office. John J. Rotchford has been appointed branch manager in that city with offices at 1309 Vine street.
The Exhibitors League on the Eve of 1915

The Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America is approaching the New Year with signs of steady, healthy growth multiplying on every hand. Not for many weeks has there been such good reason for indulging the brightest possible hopes for the future of the organization as is furnished by the meeting of the New Hampshire state exhibitors at Concord, Friday, December 18.

The New Hampshire league is the youngest of the state organizations.

Yet the initial assemblage of its members revealed an attendance of nearly fifty per cent. of the state exhibitors, and the probability is strong that every theatre manager in the Granite State will rally to the support of the young association before it is much older.

Not only did the new president, Charles H. Bean, of Franklin, N. H., labor for weeks to accomplish the gratifying results of December 18, but President Horstman, of the neighboring Massachusetts League, put his shoulder to the wheel and did everything in his power to assist the formation of the new branch. As proof of his interest in the movement he attended the first convention in person with several of his associates, and addressed the exhibitors on the merits of organized co-operation.

The same alertness to the present importance of organization is being manifested in many widely separated sections of the country.

Slowly but surely the business policies and business methods of President Pearce and his associates of the Executive Committee have spread to every one of the underlying state organizations until now the serious, intelligent and harmonious pursuit of a sound and common-sense plan of action is visible wherever and whenever a state league convenes for a deliberation on trade conditions.

In Michigan, for example, the state league has already smelted the perils of the free coupon plan, which is beginning to raze the business in that state as it already has in Utah.

President Jeup and his fellow members are determined to make a vigorous fight against the system, which, be it said to the credit of the organization, is almost, if not quite, wholly practised by exhibitors outside the league.

In Michigan, New Hampshire and Massachusetts the state leagues have settled down to a strenuous resistance of the various kinds of legislation which are being prepared for them in political circles.

The Pennsylvania exhibitors, bowed as they have been for months under the oppression of a state censorship, have rallied throughout the state and are arming themselves to "have it out" with the Legislature when that body convenes in Harrisburg the latter part of next month.

Similarly, in Minnesota—though the exhibitors' organization there is not identified with the National League—the same energy and determination is being shown in the face of the Sunday closing law which has been drafted by the Northwestern Society for the Prevention of Vice.

Not the least insulting provision in the bill is classification of motion picture theatres with dance halls and poolrooms—an attitude of mind that may have been justified six or eight years ago, but which implies ignorant and intolerant narrow-mindedness today when the best element in the community is cordially and frankly supporting the photo-playhouse.

In Baltimore, President Pearce's home city, problems that affect the business of exhibitors in that city are being vigorously dealt with at the meetings of the local body, and to good effect. It was the Baltimore exhibitors, be it remembered, with aid of the exchanges, that prevented the exhibitor who would have reduced his admission price to two cents, when accompanied by a three-cent coupon, from carrying his inexcusable and demoralizing scheme into execution.

There is a businesslike spirit manifesting itself in everyone of these local and state bodies.

The exhibitor members are applying to the league the same methods they were wont to use in their own successful businesses. Circus methods are being gradually dislodged. Commercial methods are taking their place. Eccentricity is giving way to efficiency.

Exhibitors here and there are beginning to treat each other as human beings with a right to live and prosper instead of as thieves, robbers and cut-throats. Co-operation is at last getting a following as a profitable policy.

For all this the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America and its Executive Board and members have reason to be deeply grateful. Their work has not been wasted.

A brighter year has not dawned on the league since its foundation than the one which is at hand.

the collegiate circles of the South. That, perhaps, is the reason why he has contributed such a realistic bit of acting in "The Scrub," a fascinating story of college life and a gridiron battle, that will be released January 8. Durham plays Coach Sloane, a hardened master of stripling players, and plays it with a "punch" in every action.

An entire day was spent by Incelle's electricians in the construction of an apparatus for use in "The Deadly Spark," a Kay-Bee ready for release January 1. The punch of the story is delivered by the scene which depicts the electrocution of a man who attempts to rob the safe of his father-in-law.

The elder man conceives the idea of defeating the intruder, of whose plans he has been informed by the wife, by administering to him an electric shock. To obtain the desired effect, wires were strung from the Incelle power house to the stage and there adjusted to the safe. A shower of sparks is seen as the crook topples over dead.

An invasion of the Mojave Desert, which began in an automobile, but which terminated on the backs of plodding donkeys, was made recently by a company of players from the forces of the New York Motion Picture Corporation to obtain a number of important scenes for "A Midas of the Desert," a gripping two-part production soon to be released by the Kay-Bee company, January 8.

The story teems with an interest in the life of an old miser who, disliked by his townspeople, goes into the desert in search of more gold.

Go to Nevada for Desert Scene

The title role is played by Walter Edwards, who, instead of being satisfied—as are a number of other companies—with the desert stretch near Playa del Rey, journeyed all the way to Nevada for his realism. Mr. Edwards brought back with him a collection of toads and other reptiles which infest the desert, and they are now on exhibition at the Incelle studios.

"Jack's Pals" is the title of a one-reel animal picture written by C. W. Murphy, trainer at the Selig zoo, who is playing the leading part. The direction is in charge of F. J. Grandon. It is a story of a zoo trainer, who, because of crookedness of his superior, looses his position at a municipal zoo. He succeeds in getting a place on the fire department in the vicinity and—well, he saves his pets from being burned when the zoo is destroyed, and for his work is made superintendent of the new zoo. It is a very pleasing play.

The scenario for the film version of "Ill-Starred Babbie," the anthracite coal region story by W. H. Whalon, was prepared last week by Will H. Ritchie, of the Balboa company, at Long Beach, and production will be commenced as soon as Jackie Saunders, who is now spending a vacation at Philadelphia, returns. The subject will be of four reels and features Miss Saunders.

Hal Roach, producer for the Rolin Film Company and Los Angeles representative for Sawyer, is on his way to New York, where he will spend several weeks.

The Nash Motion Picture Company has begun production of a two-reel drama, which is to be released on the Kriterion program. The direction is in charge of Thomas H. Nash, and for the present the company will work at the studio on Court street.

The Santa Barbara Dramatic Company, making Kriterion program film, in charge of Director Bob Daly, has completed four subjects, "The Arm of the Law," "Jealousy," "Call of the Sea," "Common Clay" and "Pears of Caracas," in which Fritza Brunette, for several years leading woman with the Imp company, and Edward Alexander, former- ly of Powers and Rex companies, play leads. John Prescott, Jack Dillon and Florine Garland have the other important parts of the casts.

Bert Angeles has been directing comedies of the Percy series, with a company composed of Mary Ruby, Sidney de Gray and Harry Fisher, and now has four ready. The titles of these are "And Percy Got Married," "And Percy Made Good," "And Percy Put One Over," and "And Percy Becomes a Medico."

In addition to managing the affairs of the Santa Barbara company, Mr. Kennedy is acting as western representative for the Mica Film Corporation, making all arrangements for production, supervising the selection of scenarios for all, and looking after the many details connected with the making of and marketing of a new program.

The Navafo Film company players, under the direction of Charles K. French, have completed three two-reel western dramas, and were recently working on the fourth, "The Squatter," in which a cast composed of Lucille Young, William Parsons and Helen K. French play the leading parts. The other subjects completed are "Nevada," "Though They Sins Be as Scarlet" and "Joe's Partner, Bill," all of a western nature, highly melodramatic, but not of a blood and thunder variety.

These subjects will be released through the Kriterion program of the Mica company.

U. S. Will Open Laboratories Soon

General Manager George E. Duke, of the United States Feature Film Company, of Oroville, California, spent a part of the week here, making preparations for the opening of the company's laboratories and in the purchase of equipment for their studio for winter use which will be completed within the next few weeks.

The laboratories are to be fitted with the products of the Los Angeles Motion Picture Company, makers of the Angelus cameras, printers, splicers, and other necessities, including tanks, drums, etc., and all will be ready for use by the first of the year, the sale being made by Carl E. Fr. Sterlnov. The winter studio is of concrete and steel with glass walls and roof, and has a stage 75 x 90 feet. The prop room, wardrobe, scene dock and laboratories will occupy a new building measuring 100 x 150 feet.

The U. S. Company has now completed its first subject, "The Polly of a Life of Crime," featuring George Sontag, one of the leaders of the famous band of criminals known throughout the West as the Evans-Sontag gang. This consists of six reels and will be released for state rights in the near future.

Special to Motion Picture News

Chicago, Dec. 22

THE preliminary arrangements were made by the executive committee of
The Reel Fellows Club for a monster
Costume Ball & a Rex, which will be housed in Chicago's largest auditorium for such affairs in the Windy City, in which they have been part. The entire affair will be so conducted that it will be made thoroughly representative of the art of photography.
All this is working toward the establishing of a permanent quarters for the Reel
Fellows Club, which has had an astonishing growth since its inception some half dozen months ago. The membership represents every branch of the industry.
While it would be possible to already go ahead with club room, it is felt that they would not be the kind or spacious enough that would be desired within six months.
Because of the wide representation within its ranks it is felt that this Costume Ball will establish a record breaking event in the Windy City.

Special Publicity Committee at Work

Each member will make special efforts in the line he is interested to pass the good word and create enthusiasm that is bound to bring about. A special publicity committee of newspaper men has been appointed that will work toward getting news notices in the various trade papers and daily papers in and about Chicago. Committees have been appointed consisting of men that are experienced in the various duties that have been entrusted to them by the club.

The executive committee consists of:
Warren A. Patric, chairman, R. R. Nehls,
Charles Nixon, Omer F. Doud, L. A.
Boening, W. R. Rothacker and C. J.
VerHalen. The arrangement committee is headed by W. M. Early, Neal Caward,
Frank F. Club, R. C. Traverse and Rapley Holmes. Charles Andress is chairman of the publicity and program committee, and is assisted by Walter Hildreth, Fred Wagner,
E. O. Blackburn and C. J. VerHalen.
The entertainment committee consists of
W. R. Rothacker, chairman, N. Sawyer,
O. F. Spahr, O. F. Doud and E. J. Hickey.
The refreshment committee consists of Tom Quill, J. W. Brickhouse and George A.
Berg.

At the last regular meeting of the Reel Fellows Club of Chicago, which will be held at the Hotel Sherman, in the Italian room, on Wednesday evening, December 16, the gathering was addressed by Mr. Blair of the Eastman Company. His subject was "Raw Stock."

At each meeting the club will be addressed by some representative person in the motion picture business on the branch of the business he represents.

In the future the headquarters of the Reel Fellows Club will be suite 505 Ashland Block, all the officers of the organization can be reached at this address.

New Selig War Film Out

In these days of war talk and an unprecedented activity on the part of motion picture manufacturers, who endeavor to present the news features of the world in films, an unusual production has been released through the General Film Co., by the Selig Polyscope Company. It is entitled, "A History of the World's Greatest War Told in Five Reels of Motion Pictures."

Although coming from the same source as the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial this five-reel special production is not identified with the twice-a-week Hearst-Selig News Pictorial Service. It is announced as being produced by the Hearst newspapers in conjunction with the Selig Polyscope Company.

The five reels are of particular interest and show actual battle scenes with shot and shell, and all the carnage and confusion of these pictures were taken by Selig camera men assisted by Hearst newspaper correspondents who worked together to obtain them.

These intrepid news-picture photographers photographed the scenes from dangerous positions, along the battle lines in Belgium, East Prussia and other places. Many of these scenes were graphs in the fighting trenches with the Allies and with the German.

Clark Street Theatre Sold

While there have been other releases of pictures said to have been taken on European battlegrounds, the Selig Publicity Department declares that this one is the only authentic and genuine picture actually taken on the European battlefields while the fighting was going on in the war theatres.

Another large film theatre has just changed hands. John H. Ferris, who formerly was active in the theatre business but has been out of it for three years, has purchased from the Clark Amusement Company the leasehold on the Clark theatre at 4533 North Clark street, between Wilson and Sunnyside avenues, for a bonus reported to have been about $10,000.

The theatre contains 1,100 seats and is under lease for $6,500 per annum, with nine years to run. The buyer plans to expend about $20,000 in remodeling the house and to put in a pipe organ and ten-piece orchestra, Hume & Co., and George W. Walker closed the deal.

Selig Films Second Beach Novel

Lanier Bartlett, scenario editor for the Colin Campbell-Selig feature company, departed last week for the Panama Canal Zone, as the "advance agent" for the company which will leave the first week in January for a trip of three months in tropical America, where the second Rex Beach novel, "The Ne'er Do Well," will be filmed.

Mr. Bartlett, who prepared the working script for this, as well as practically all big features produced by Mr. Campbell and his players, will select locations and have everything in readiness for work when the company arrives.

In addition, while in the Zone, Mr.
Bartlett will write a number of two and three-reel scenarios suitable for locations in that territory. The party, besides Mr. and Mrs. Campbell, will be composed of Charles Clary, Wheeler
Oakman, Al Green, Frank Clark, Sidney
Smith, Harry Geistad, R. H. Kelly, Will Carson, Helen Castleton and Kathryn Williams.

PAUL PANZER ON VAUDEVILLE
TOUR

Paul Panzer, who as Raymond Owen meets death by drowning in the last episode of "The Perils of Pauline," has decided to take a few weeks' vacation by doing work of another sort.

Bill Casey, nephew of Pat Casey, saw him in a vaudeville act over in Brooklyn several months ago and decided that on the conclusion of "The Perils of Pauline" he wanted to book the "popular villain for an extended vaudeville tour. So "Oom Paul" starts in at the Auditorium in Malden, Mass., on December 14 for a week's engagement and after New Year's will play engagements in various cities for fifteen weeks straight at an attractive salary.

On the expiration of his vaudeville contract he will return to Pathe to perpetrate other deeds of villainy on the screen.

Kennedy Makes Careful Selections for Kriterion
His Experience Qualifies Him for Picking Out Suitable Films for Clientele of the Company—Reorganizes Santa Barbara

FRANCHISES covering the manufacture of films for the Kriterion program have been issued with great care and on an entirely original plane. The instigators have not neglected their manufacturers indiscriminately. They have entrusted to A. M. Kennedy the entire supervision covering the selection of manufacturers and the granting of contracts to the manufacturers in question.

A. M. Kennedy was particularly well adapted to the requirements as he had for the last seven years been connected in an executive capacity as general manager and managing director of some of the largest and most successful film manufacturers in the world today.

The names particularly connected with Mr. Kennedy's reputation in the business are the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, the American Film Manufacturing Company and as the organizer of approximately 60 per cent. of the producing companies of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. Too great stress cannot be laid on the fact that the Mica Film Corporation has the service of such a man as Mr. Kennedy.

In the selection of the manufacturers for the Kriterion program it was continually borne in mind that while money is essential to the successful manufacture of pictures, brains and talent are the predominant requisites to worth-while films. Therefore the franchises which Mr. Kennedy tendered were given invariably to experienced and proven motion picture directors.

In every instance these directors or managing directors have complete control of the organization for which they are responsible and the films that will be released under their particular brand.

One of the producing companies of the Kriterion, namely, the Santa Barbara Motion Picture Company, located in Santa Barbara, Cal., is under the general management of A. M. Kennedy. He has entirely reorganized this company to take care of the releases tendered it by the Kriterion people.

This company is considered to be one of the best equipped motion picture companies in California, where it is well known that 70 per cent. or more of the films produced in America are made. It is safe to predict that good productions will come from Mr. Kennedy and all of his sources.

"Under the Paint" Offered at the Vitagraph

THE Vitagraph Theatre, New York City, has introduced a spoken one act drama as a novelty in conjunction with the feature and special pictures, vocal and instrumental music which now comprises the regular program.

Sidney Drew, supported by a company of Vitagraph players in "What the Moon Saw," furnished the audible feature of an exceptional bill that opened the week beginning Sunday, December 13. "What the Moon Saw" was written by S. Rankin Drew, and is a powerful drama that works up to a tremendous climax, breathtaking in its intensity. While thrillingly dramatic there are moments when laughter relieves the tension, adding the necessary variety to make the act one of unusual merit. Mr. Drew and his associate players appeared every night and at the Saturday matinees only.

The picture part of the program, which was shown twice daily, included as its principle feature "Underneath the Paint," a three-part dramatic story of the theatre, written and produced by Charles L. Gaskill, and presented by Helen Gardner, assisted by Anders Randolph, Gladden James, Rose Tapley, Albert Roccardi and little Audrey Berry.

In conformity with the new policy of the Vitagraph Theatre, which includes the presentation of new pictures every week, "A Question of Clothes" and "An Egyptian Mummy," two single reel comedies, and "Out of the Past," a two-part feature drama of unusual appeal, were shown in addition to the big feature pictures.

American Cast "Rough It" on Wild Island
Company Spends Two Weeks on Santa Cruz Island and Films Situations Amid Semi-Tropical Settings While Players Live by Primitive Efforts

AFTER two weeks on Santa Cruz Island the feature company from the American-Mutual studios at Santa Barbara has returned to headquarters. The island is wild and mountainous. Its lakes and waterfalls and abundant semi-tropical vegetation combine to make wonderful scenic settings, and in a feature soon to be announced in the Mutual program is shown the landing of shipwrecked voyagers and their primitive efforts to take care of themselves on an uncharted island which Santa Cruz for motion picture purposes is presumed to be.

While these pictures were being taken the company had to live provisionally, for there are no accommodations on Santa Cruz Island. Necessary provisions had to be shipped over. For meat the company had to depend on the men's success in shooting wild pigs and hooking fish. Getting to places was difficult, too, and often dangerous. In ascending a mountain, for instance, Margarita Fischer had to be tied between Harry Pollard and his assistant, Comini. Hiding poor old Pete, the Pollard's pet bulldog, was awful, awful sick, and one of the cowboys fell overboard. On the whole the company was very glad to get back to civilization.

"U. S. A. DAY" INSIGNIA CHOSEN

The committee on general arrangements for the impending nation-wide campaign to establish a Made-in-the-U. S. A. Day has selected its official insignia.

The design chosen is one of forty-nine submitted by thecleverest commercial artists of the city and was selected principally on account of the preponderance of the geographical element.

It reproduces in black and white the map of the United States, which in accordance with congressional action, inspired by Theodore Roosevelt during his term as President of the United States, is now officially known as America, which word appears in bold white lettering across the surface, the map, in solid black, being background. The motto, "Boost for U. S. A. Day," appears on the design, divided so as to partly surmount and partly form the base of it.

The legend, "Made in America," also appears so worded as to be incorporated in the geographical tout ensemble.

THE CHRISTIAN MARTYRS

"THE SIGN OF THE CROSS"
(Famous Players-Paramount—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY H. S. FULD

THE producers of this film version of Wilson Barrett’s sublime and immortal drama, "The Sign of the Cross," have certainly surpassed themselves in this wonderful conception. In the depiction of Roman life, no expense seems to have been spared to make these scenes as realistic as possible.

William Farnum, in his impersonation of Marcus Superbus, certainly looks the part, and needless to say he acts the part. Rosina Henley, in her role Mercia, the Christian maid, has the sympathy and holds the interest of the observer as perhaps no other character could.

Of the story itself, it is so well known, having been novelized and dramatized on the legitimate stage, that we will not go into it here. Suffice to say, that in this film version the essential points in the story are all brought forward, and the result is a production of intense dramatic power enhanced by good photography, an excellent cast, and lavishly decorated and gorgeous interiors.

In depicting the arena and banquet scenes and Emperor Nero’s audience chamber, the strictest attention to detail is noticed. Especially so, as it befits and brings one to the realization of the luxury-loving Roman patricians.

The action runs along smoothly. The story is gripping and holds one in suspense by the masterly acting of the principals in their different characterizations. The finale is a really beautiful setting of a cross on a hill, which the slowly rising sun brings to prominence.

Special credit should be given the producers, in that there is no lack of subtitles, not that they are profuse, but what is better, there are none lacking.

"THE LAST CHAPTER"
(Favorite-Alliance—Five Parts)
REVIEWED BY J. O. JESSEN

SILHOUETTE, moonlight, camp fire and unusually clear mountain scenes in "The Last Chapter," an adaptation from the Richard Harding Davis novel of adventure, "The Unfinished Story," mark this release of the Favorite Players-Alliance program as one of unusual merit, and one for which the location man and photographer, Homer Cook, are justly entitled to praise.

Such was the verdict of the members of the producing company, their friends, and a number of exhibitors who were present at the dress rehearsal run, given at Chune’s Broadway theatre, Los Angeles, one evening last week, after the regular performances, which end at eleven-thirty. It was an enthusiastic party that left the theatre at one o’clock in the morning, and many expressed the opinion that this will prove the greatest box office receipt getter this company has so far produced.

The Davis story is well adapted for screen portrayal, and the character of Gordon, the explorer, is one in which Carlyle Blackwell is most at home. The role gives him opportunity to display his versatility, in the drawing room, but most of all as a lover of nature, who likes the open, adventure and excitement of a charge.

His dashing manner attracted the attention of Alice Edgeton, played by Ruth Hartman, and he won her from the many suitors of her social set, prior to his departure with an exploring party for South Africa. Following a mutiny of the aids of the party, Gordon is left to die, and by his assistant carrying away papers, and later being killed by savages, rangers believe Gordon is killed and notify his sweetheart and friends in his native land.

Instead, Gordon accomplishes the purpose of the exploring party and is then found by rangers. Upon his return he finds his sweetheart, believing him dead, engaged to another, so he retums to Africa to lend his aid in improving the natives’ health conditions.

Mr. Davis saw fit to conclude the story in this manner, but to the film version, "The Last Chapter," has been added by Richard Willis, who prepared the scenario. In this Alice Edgeton recalls her love for the adventurer, and seeing the emptiness of the life she would lead as the wife of a prominent politician, follows Gordon to Africa.

There, following a skirmish between members of her party, government officers and natives, Gordon rescues her from savages intent upon taking her to their village, a prisoner. Both rejoice at this unexpected meeting, and in the end she becomes his queen, her her king, and their lives are sacrificed for the betterment of society. Good comedy is injected in the feature by the character of Reggie, played by John Sheehan, and other important parts are taken by William Brunton, Harry Kernan and Ollie Kirkby.

BUILDING WITH 100 DRESSING ROOMS FOR MUTUAL

A HUGE building containing one hundred dressing rooms has been erected on the grounds of the Griffith-Mutual studios in Los Angeles, together with another two-story structure for the stage carpenters. The latter building is fully equipped with work benches, and all the modern requirements for building and remodeling stage settings.
“THE IDLER”
Reviewed by Peter Milne

This picture would be more appreciated and better understood if in the first two reels more subtitles were employed to explain various matters that do not become clear until near the end, or perhaps more carefully written titles, more explanatory in nature, would fill the gap. At any rate, the picture as it stood when viewed was slightly confusing, and it seems as if the fault might easily be corrected by attention to the titles.

After the first few misunderstandings have been rectified, along approximately in the middle of the picture, when the plot has narrowed down to the point where only a small number of characters are concerned, the story becomes understandable.

Charles Richman makes his second screen appearance in one of the principal roles. He plays the part of Cross, who might be termed the heavy of the play, although he is a heavy who gains a great deal of sympathy as the story progresses. Cross has secretly married a chorus girl on a bet, when the picture opens, and finally when he refuses to grant her impossible requests for money, she publicly announces the union. This greatly perturbs the mind of the girl whom Cross loves, so he and his friend, John, depart to America and become prospectors.

Across the water, John accidentally kills the brother of an American and hastily departs for home, the Western town being rather too warm for him. At home he becomes a Sir and marries the woman whom Cross loved. Later Simeon Strong, intent upon avenging his brother's death, visits England with Cross. But he falls in love with the sister of the girl whom his intended victim married. After several tense scenes he becomes pacified, and accepts Sir John's word that the murder was accidental.

After this, Cross attempts to persuade Sir John's wife to come with him, but after the two have had quite a struggle in a room, she causes him to realize his shameful conduct, and the picture closes with Cross meditating his past, and perhaps his future.

Catherine Countiss is seen as Sir John's wife, and in the latter part of the picture is well suited to the part. Several years having elapsed after the first two reels, in which she seems slightly old for the role. Claire Whitney appears as her sister. Walter Hitchcock is Sir John, and Stuart Holmes carries the part of Strong.

“SPRINGTIME”
Reviewed by Clifford H. Fangburn

Based on Booth Tarkington's successful novel and play of the same name, "Springtime", offers an unusually attractive story, which has been prepared for the screen in a style worthy of the subject.

Perhaps the most striking feature of the picture is the constant succession of beautiful exteriors. The action of the story takes place in New Orleans at the time of Andrew Jackson's victory over the British during the siege which marked the close of the War of 1812. Accordingly it was necessary to find a location for making the pictures which would meet rather exacting requirements. By going to New Orleans and St. Augustine, Florida, exactly the right places were found for obtaining the atmosphere of the old South.

THE FATHER PROVES HARD-HEARTED

The house, which is used as the family home of the De Valette, is a splendid specimen of Southern colonial architecture. It has the typical colonnade around three sides, and the second floor porch, or "gallery," as it was called, on which the members of the family spent much of the time. This house is set in the midst of beautiful grounds which are used to great advantage, as are other attractive scenes. The general result is, as may be imagined, decidedly attractive.

Another notable fact is that the producers have succeeded in obtaining the impression of the period to a remarkable degree. Anachronisms have been avoided and the proper details supplied so carefully that the spectator feels as if actually viewing events of a hundred years ago.

Florence Nash, who is featured in the role of Madeline De Valette, handles the part with the skill which one would expect from so well known a player. She appears to equal advantage in the easiest scenes and in the difficult ones after grief has affected the heroine's mind. Gilbert Steele, the hero, is well played by Bert Gardner, although owing to the construction of the story the part is almost a minor one. William H. Tooker is seen as Val De Valette, the father of Madeline. Adele Rey is effective as L'Acadienne, and the rest of the cast does meritorious work.

Madeline is betrothed to her father's cousin when she is a small child. As the story opens he is coming to meet her. She dislikes the thought of marrying him, while he is scarcely less opposed to the match. Gilbert Steele, the son of an enemy of Madeline's father, comes to her home to attempt a business transaction with her father.

Madeline and Gilbert fall in love on sight, and she follows him when he leaves the house. He has enlisted in a company which is going out to meet the attacking British and Madeline even seeks to go with him. This she cannot do, of course, but as she wanders about all night her father thinks she has dishonored the Valette name and turns her away.

At the same time she hears a false report that Gilbert is dead. The combined shock temporarily unbalances her mind, but when Gilbert returns she soon cures her, and her father, realizing his folly, blesses the young couple. His cousin leaves, happy to avoid the match, as he is in love with another girl.

LADY HARDING LEARNS CROSS IS A WIDOWER

Whether it is merely in the print shown or in the negative, we do not know, but at any rate, the photography as witnessed seems rather poor, badly lighted in some scenes. The fire scene in which Cross's wife meets her death, starts with amazing rapidity, but no doubt audiences would grow impatient while waiting for a fire to spread, if left to itself.

Lloyd B. Carleton directed the picture, and if the fault mentioned in regard to the first parts were eliminated, he may be credited with a very acceptable piece of work.
THE THREE OF US
(Rollo-Alco—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY CLIFFORD H. FANGBURN

WITH this film another star practically unknown on the screen, but a great favorite on the stage, makes a welcome reappearance. Mabel Taliaferro is an actress of rare charm, and she succeeds most admirably in putting her personality into this picture. Miss Taliaferro is seen in the role of Rhy MacChesney, the girl who places her sweetheart's success above her own reputation. Rhy is one of the most attractive characters created by Rachel Crothers, the author of the original stage version of "The Three of Us."

The photographic and scenic effects in the picture are excellent. True, the country does not resemble the mining region of Colorado very closely, but considering the limitations imposed by taking the picture in the East, John W. Noble, the director, has accomplished wonders in exterior effects.

One impressive scene is that depicting the fight between Steve and Beresford. This is one of the most realistic fights which have been seen on the screen in some time, and is bound to have any audience on the edge of their seats.

The story of "The Three of Us" has to do with a mine of that name which has been left to Rhy MacChesney and her two brothers, Clem and Somny, by their father. The father had always had great faith in the mine, and had begged that it be worked carefully. Clem, a young chap, with ambitions for more excitement than is offered in the mining camp, wants to abandon the mine and go to New York, where he imagines he can win success.

His sister tries to dissuade him, but when Beresford, a mining expert looking for something good, offers him $500 for a tip, the boy gives him one, little realizing that he is endangering his sister's happiness and his own future by doing so. The tip is that Steve Towney has struck pay ore on his mine next to "The Three of Us," and that his option expires at noon the next day.

It happens that Steve is Rhy's sweetheart, and delays his trip to buy in his mine in order to see her at a party being given that night. Meantime he leaves his option at her home, and it is stolen by Beresford.

Rhy accidentally discovers the theft and the guilty party, and going to Beresford's house at night gets the paper back, but is misunderstood by Steve, who sees her entering the place. When Beresford attempts simplicities, Steve comes in and thrashes him.

Rhy then starts for Gold City to take up Steve's option herself and save him from Beresford. Of course all ends happily. The mine is saved, and it is discovered that the vein in it goes through "The Three of Us" mine. Steve learns how he has misjudged Rhy, and they are completely reconciled. Altogether a pleasing story well acted.

THE MASTER KEY
(Universal Special—Sixth Episode)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

HEREFORE we were inclined to criticize "The Master Key," because, unlike most serials, it contains few events that might be classed with the sensational thrillers. Like many other people, we were inclined to think that a recurrent story could not exist without a punch in every episode. Up to date "The Master Key" has consistently proved that hair-raising events are not indispensable to maintain the interest in a serial play.

We don't mean to say that this story has nothing in it to elevate itself from the ordinary in the way of thrillers. It has, but it is not crammed full of them; those that do appear are excellent, but tense interest is maintained in "The Master Key" whether they appear or not.

The great interest which many are evidencing for this story is undoubtedly due to the excellent manner in which the plot is developed by John Fleming Wilson, the author, and Robert Leonard, the director. Just as a written story in which there are only two principal forces, good and bad, forever working against each other, even though the end is no more apparent after reading six chapters than it is after the first, is immensely interesting, so is "The Master Key."

To come back to this separate episode, the only fault we have to find with it is that a stone wall shales. Although it is hardly noticeable, it should have been avoided, as such things seem to belong back in the days when motion pictures were in their infancy. However, this detracts nothing from the interest which is sure to be manifested in the story.

The situations that are brought out in these two reels while Doré is in search of Ruth, aided by a number of other men, are many and strong; so that in the finale when he at last rescues her from a Chinaman all will be inclined to breathe a sigh of relief.

The awe-inspiring revolving brick chamber in which Ruth is imprisoned, by the Chinese agents of Wilkerson, is used with excellent effects in a number of scenes. This, with its accompaniments, such as sliding panels and secret doors, are enough, with the exciting story laid among them, to maintain whole-hearted interest from the beginning to the end, besides causing us to wait impatiently for the next episode.

ELIZABETH FORBES JOINS THANHOUSER

ELIZABETH FORBES, late of the Henry Miller-Doris Keane "Romance" and other companies successful in New York, has been added to Thanhouser's stardom. Miss Forbes' first appearance will be in "Under False Colors," a two reel release featuring Florence La Badie. Like many screen stars, Miss Forbes first chance to see herself as others see her was accidental. When on a visit to the Thanhouser studio she laughingly consented to play a part. Her work so favorably impressed Directors Eugene Moore and Frederic Sullivan that she was engaged to play a role in "Zudora."
“PERILS OF PAULINE”
(Fath-Election—Last Episode)
REVIEWED BY WILLIAM REESMAN ANDREWS

Dainty, daring, delightful Pauline leaves the public in this, the twentieth and last episode of one of the most successful serials ever brought out. The heroine’s troubles are over, and of course she marries the deserving young man whose unsleeping vigilance saved her from death on so many occasions.

The people who have followed the fortunes of the pair week in and week out with ever recurring interest in each set of adventures will learn with regret of the departure of Paul and Harry for that mysterious land of rest and quiet reserved by considerate authors for all characters in fiction and drama who have faithfully entertained an appreciative public.

ABOARD THE YACHT TOGETHER

This last vehicle of their exploits surpasses the former releases in novel situations and thrilling moments. The scenario writer, Charles Goddard, shows not only the same resource of invention demonstrated in previous episodes but in many respects goes beyond himself.

With a sense of the dramatic fitness of things he has reserved the most thrilling situations for the finale. In themselves they might not seem strikingly unusual, but by clever assemblage of his material the whole two reels constitute a picture of compelling originality. A secret—not the secret, of course, for it requires more than one thing to make a successful film play—which has a great deal to do with the effectiveness of any production is its simplicity of plot.

A plot incapable of development except by a numerous cast fails in an essential point. On the other hand, a story—like that of “The Perils of Pauline”—needing only a few characters sustains interest at every stage. All chances of confusion in the minds of the spectators are eliminated. If “The Exploits of Elaine,” the serial of the company to follow “Pauline,” is constructed on the same broad, general lines, the possibilities of its making an instant hit are already assured.

In this last episode Owen, discouraged by the failure of his efforts to make away with Pauline through the aid of confederates, determines to attempt her life by his own hands. While he and the girl and her cousin Harry are on the Marvin yacht, pleasure bent, the vivacious girl asks Harry to teach her how to run a motor boat.

Owen thinks he sees in this desire a chance to dispose of the girl for all time. He bores a hole in the bottom of the small craft, plugging it up with cotton waste. The villain expects the boat to leak slowly and take the girl beneath the waves beyond the reach of timely aid. The next morning, accompanied by her faithful dog—a cauine actor of considerable ability, whose intelligent understanding of his mistress’ commands later on results in her rescue from a watery grave—Pauline sets out in the motor boat. When miles from the yacht it springs a leak, and she barely reaches a waterlogged canal boat before the motor boat sinks. But she escapes one danger only to run into a greater peril. The hulk has been anchored in this position to serve as a target, and the shells from a battleship crash through a canvas bulleye above the head of the terror stricken girl.

Fortunately, the realization of her position does not paralyze her faculties, and she uses the dog to send a note to the battleship commander, who of course, instantly stops the firing of the guns, and sends a tender to the rescue.

“OFFICER 666”
(Kleine—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

For his first American release George Kleine has chosen an auspicious subject, one that has been long heralded, and one that bids so fair to be a huge success. It has the advantage of all pictures that were once stage successes—everyone has heard of it. But the picture needs no previous reputation to make it go. It stands firmly on its own merits, which are manifold.

Augustin MacHugh was the author of the play, and by special arrangement with George Cohan and Sam Harris, George Kleine received the rights for the picture version of the famous stage farce. Frank Powell, the director of the production, has procured such decisively excellent results in screening the story that “Officer 666” can almost be accounted the largest and brightest feather in his already well decorated cap.

In a large measure the humorous qualities of the offering depended on the ability of the cast. Individual and incidental actions, recorded by many of the able cast, are responsible for many outbursts of appreciative laughter, whereas if the principals were poorly versed in their art, the plot itself would hardly be comical enough to carry the interest through the entire five reels.

We are inclined to offer all the more praise to both director and actors, because of the fact that there is no great variety of scene. A greater part of the actions transpires in four or five rooms of one house, but variety of settings seems in this play a minor point. Those that appear are well built and appropriate.

In regard to photography, the film is clear and distinct, but not too bright throughout.

The leading part, Travers Gladwin, as interpreted by Howard Estabrook, is made exceptionally humorous. Harold Howard in the role of Barnes, the friend of Gladwin, is thoroughly efficient; his eccentric actions, while experiencing all the troubles of his friend, who is engaged in riddling his house of a gentleman burglar, will be responsible for many laughs.

Sidney Seaward is an excellent gentleman burglar, whose specialty is collecting priceless paintings from other people’s houses. The name part of the picture is played by Dan Myoles, who makes a truly good-natured, thick-headed Irish denizen of the law. Makoto Itouchi as Gladwin’s Japanese butler is as funny as the rest.

Lois Burnett, Della Countr and Ada Nevil are the only feminine members of the cast; the former two as the girls who finally find their mates in the persons of Gladwin and Barnes are very good. Miss Nevil is the aunt and is equally humorous.
“TWO WOMEN”
(Broadway Star Features-Vitagraph—Three Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

With only four players of any importance, Ralph Ince has produced a three-reel picture which is not tiring in the least. Its attractiveness rests mainly with the excellent interpretations rendered by the four principals, and again due to the fact that there are not a great number in the cast.

Interest is awakened from the very first scene and is well held until the very last. There are no tiring counterplots with other characters to confuse the spectator. The story is plain, straightforward, concise and gripping.

Its main attraction, other than those mentioned, is its striking contrasts. On one side is the life of the deceitful society woman, outlined with decisive, convincing action; on the other is the young, innocent, wild girl of the mountains.

Due to his wife’s thoughtless deceit, Emerson, a business man, divorces her and then seeks seclusion in the mountains. Here he meets Anita, tells her his past life and remains with her, refusing to return to his wife, even when she pleads with him herself.

Earle Williams gives a most convincing portrayal of Emerson, a man rather untutored to deceit, who at first trusts wholly to the sincerity of his wife. Julia Swayne Gordon has the unhappy part of the wife, and plays it as the occasion demands. She is cold at first, regretful later, and finally beseechingly pathetic when imploring her husband to return to her. "Harry Northrup as Lawler, Emerson’s employer, who afterwards marries the latter’s wife, is a real, unsympathetic heavy. Anita Stewart looks sweet and pretty as usual, and plays the part of the girl of the woodlands to perfection."

THE PRINCE FAILS TO APPEAR

This dancing act being the major part of the picture, there is little else to relate, only that the story is a very good one, interesting in its entirety. And even though the period of this production has been reproduced in pictures before, it is not overworked, and seems to smack off a decided freshness, which will cause it to be all the more welcome.

Matt Moore plays the gay King Ferdinand, who falls captive to the charms of the princess. Walter Miller and Charles Moran are his boon companions, while Irene Wallace and Betty Emerson are the sisters of the "Beautiful Unknown."

“THE SECRET OF THE MOUNTAIN” (Path—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY CLIFFORD H. FANGBURN

Produced at the European studios of the Pathé company, this picture is filled with the usual fine scenic effects and settings of exteriors which are found in such pictures. The story is one which is rather weak in plot, but is strong in human interest and is acted with much skill.

Among the many effective views introduced are some showing the carnival parade in an Italian city, and some mountain districts, where a picnic is held and where the hero has the fall which is believed by his friends to have ended his life. In these latter pictures there are some fine cloud effects. A number of striking water scenes are also introduced at several points.

A wealthy farmer sends his son to the city to be educated. The boy gives way to temptations and is soon spending money at a fast rate, much of it going to a girl named Helen. His father is so wrapped up in what he supposes his son’s happiness that he keeps on supplying him with money until he is bankrupt.

Then the son has a streak of remorse, which is accentuated when the girl leaves him on account of lack of funds. He decides to go abroad and seek his fortune. A fall in the mountains is believed to have killed him, and he says nothing, hoping that his father can collect his life insurance. This proves to be impossible, and the result is that the old man becomes a beggar after his estate is sold at auction.

He meets the former mistress of his son, and she is so overcome by remorse that she makes a home for him.

Finally the son comes home from South Africa a wealthy man, and after much trouble locates the girl and his father. Realizing the fine character of the girl, the young fellow marries her, and everyone is happy.
"THE EXPLOITS OF ELAINE"
(Pathè—Episode One—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY CLIFFORD H. PANGBURN

ADVANCE information on this new series indicated that it would be a rare combination of good effects. The first episode, known under the title of "The Clutching Hand," in every way comes up to expectations. If the remaining installments are up to the standard set by this one, the serial will be a notable one.

As previously announced, the scenario has been written by Arthur B. Reeve, author of the famous "Craig Kennedy" stories, which have appeared in the "Cosmopolitan Magazine." Mr. Reeve's stories will appear simultaneously in newspapers throughout the country, and in film version at the various theatres.

The cast is a most excellent one. In the role of Craig Kennedy, Arnold Daly, one of the most prominent legitimate players in the country, does very effective work. The role is that of a dignified, forceful and calm scientist, who, under his cool exterior, is always alert and fully aware of everything which is going on around him, down to the smallest details.

It is therefore a difficult part, but Mr. Daly has handled it with entire success in this installment. Pearl White's role as the heroine called for considerably more emotional acting than anything which she has done recently, but the part was well played. William Riley Hatch as her father, the life insurance president, has a brief but important career in this episode.

"The Clutching Hand" is a mysterious criminal. The insurance president has learned something of him through one of his victims, a one-legged beggar, but has received many warnings from the criminal to stop his investigations. He finally puts the papers bearing on the case into a secret compartment in his house and fills the envelope which had held them with blank paper.

This is almost his last act, as he is killed shortly afterwards by an ingenious device of the "Clutching Hand." An electric wire is attached to a hot-air pipe leading to his room. As he steps on the brass register in the floor, he falls dead. The criminal, who is completely disguised with a handkerchief mask, then makes a hole in the safe with a special preparation and take out the envelope, marked so that he supposes it to contain the papers incriminating himself.

Craig Kennedy is told by a reporter that the insurance man knows who the "clutching hand" is, and replies that in that case the man is dead. Going to his house they find that this is the truth, as the murderer has just finished his work. Kennedy then starts to work on the case, and is astounded to discover that the finger marks which the criminal made purposely conspicuous are apparently his own.

THANHOUSER INSURES MARGUERITE SNOW FOR $150,000

MARGUERITE SNOW has been insured by the Thanhouser Film Corporation for $150,000 as a guaranty against accident. Miss Snow in company with other members of the Thanhouser "Zudora" company had a narrow escape from death last week.

Miss Snow, Elizabeth Forbes, Helen Badgley, James Cruze and Director Frederic Sullivan were driving along a country road on Long Island, returning from the taking of a scene, when the machine skidded, the rear wheels sliding over a stone bridge, balancing the car in the air. It was only the quick work of the men in the party and the coolness of the women that saved the situation.

When the party reached the studio Director Sullivan reported the near accident and it was then determined to insure Miss Snow's life, and a policy was subsequently taken out for $150,000.

"ARE THEY BORN OR MADE?"
(Humorama—Warner—Four Parts)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM R. ANDREWS

THIS picture, the scenario by Jack Rose, whose knowledge of the under-world qualifies him for the task he set himself, gives a vivid representation of life among criminals. The film does not deal wholly with the sordid aspects of life, however. In the story has been woven the refining effects of a good woman on a nature which has been submerged in the undercurrents of a great city through sheer force of circumstances.

Rose has shown that many criminals and derelicts are more sinned against than sinning. At heart they are not bad; they are the victims of environment; no matter how much they fight against evil associations, fate seems to have marked them for the downward path.

A number of well-photographed and cleverly-constructed scenes are used to illustrate this theme. The action never lags, and the spectator is swept along engrossed in the development of the story. An excellent cast was picked by Director McGill, and his handling of crowds in the "mob" scenes deserves particular mention.

The author and producer have selected a wide variety of episodes and localities as settings for unfolding the plot. There are delightful pastoral scenes that seem to breathe the very fragrance of country peace and innocence, and at the other extreme one views the revolting degradation of sinister and ill-smelling slums in a big city.

THE FIGHT BETWEEN THE RIVAL GANGS

A gang leader while in the country falls in love with the daughter of a farmer and marries her against her parent's opposition. Neither father nor daughter suspect his real occupation until at election time the leader, wounded in a gang fight, becomes the subject of a front-page newspaper story. His wife recognizes his picture and decides to leave him for her father's home.

The gangster, however, arouses her sympathies in relating the story of his early life, by dwelling on the insurmountable difficulties which prevented him from rising to a plane of responsibility. She feels that he was less to blame than the bad influences he was unable to fight against, and on his promise to go to the country and begin life anew, amid uncontaminating surroundings, forgives the past. He goes with her to the farm where the couple live in happiness.
“The Mayor’s Secretary.” (Kalem. Two reels, Mon., Dec. 21.)—This story is one in which a well-dressed boy is taken to a political boss who becomes involved in some desperate attempts to work a graft scheme. On two occasions the hero tries to be of heroic strain, and finally saves the life of the honest mayor, and becomes his bride. Very melodramatic, but interesting.

“The Winning Whiskers.” (Kalem. Tues., Dec. 22.)—A burlesque which is in some senses an exact simulation as it shows the boy running until she finds the room. The principal part of the time is taken up with a novel which a cook is reading. By way of passing it might be said that the story which is burlesque is not so different from these efforts which have been seen as serious productions on the screen.

“The Fatal Opal.” (Kalem. Two reels, Wed., Dec. 23.)—One of the many films which Kalem has been featuring lately, and one which is an attempt at crimes and remarkable discoveries of the real criminal. In this case a young man is accused of killing his uncle. There is a good circumstance which causes him, and things look bad until his young bride happens to discover a remarkable clue which leads to the finding of the real murder.

“The Reformation of Ham.” (Kalem. Fri., Dec. 25.)—A burlesque comedy of the “Ham” type, as the story takes place in the general rough-house which takes place between the American sailors and a gang of Chinese pirates in the hospital. Amounts of the story Ham is broken of the liquor habit.

“The Escape on the Limited.” (Kalem. Sat., Dec. 26.)—The seventh of the series featuring Helen Holmes in “The Hazards of Helen.” The girl telegraph operator is informed over the wire that a stranger who has appeared in the district is a defaulting bank cashier. She is told to captivate him but she sets her up and gets away by jumping onto the outgoing limited train. Helen with a detective clines the train on a gasoline car and rescues the girl, but crook jumps off and is killed. In addition to Miss Holmes the regular cast is seen.

“The Black Sheep.” (Kalem. Two reels, Mon., Dec. 28.)—A story which suggests “The aged Goods” as it deals with a somewhat similar situation. A man is involved in the crime of his next door. His wild brother comes home from the police station and the old man is arrested, but his reform has come too late. The doctor tells him that he must go to the penitentiary. This is overheard by the mother of the girl next door, who has been intimated with the younger brother. The mother tells the situation and the desperate man is spared. Later the girl marries the clean living young doctor.

“The House of Silence.” (Biograph, Mon., Dec. 28.)—A story involving a jealous husband who becomes involved in his wife’s former suitor that he will never speak to her. Emotional result in her life. The bride-born dumb. The husband then turns her out of his home and threatens to take all measures for the care of the dumb. There is a reconciliation through the child which is treated by the very man who was so misjudged by him. Very melodramatic. Augusta Anderson appears as the unhappy woman, and Alfred Paget as her unreasonable husband.

Mr. Daly’s Wedding Day.” (Edison, Mon., Dec. 28.)—A comedy detective story in which a burglar and counterfeiter is run to earth after having his own way for some time. The chief cause of his success is that he has an expert forger, and plays the part with extreme realism.

“The Product.” (Vitagraph, Mon., Dec. 28.)—A drama in which a whiskey manufacturer becomes involved in the attempt to take desperate measures, which include burning down the distillery. Estelle Mardo and Thomas R. Mills are seen as the distiller’s wife, and a reformed victim of whisky.

“The Plot.” (Vitagraph. Two reels, Tues., Dec. 29.)—Hypnotism and nihilism go hand in hand in this story which is the property of an expert who discovers that Russian revolutionaries are planning a trip to the United States. As the reporter in the story, the air is given to the old game of the daughter he tries to prevent the act. He is hypnotized by one of the conspirators and almost forced to kill the am- bashador himself, but is saved at the last mo- ment by the daughter. All ends happily, and the girl’s love overcomes the hypnotic spell. Entirely Mardo is seen as the ambassador’s daughter, and Robert Galliard as her father.

“The Crimson Moto.” (Biograph. Two reels, Tues., Dec. 29.)—A melodrama in which an unsus- prupulous man attempts to make use of a curse supposedly traced to an ancestor’s family. He breaks off his engagement with a nurse when he learns that his cousin is ill and likely to die. When that thought enters his head he grows well and marries the very nurse the other man had lusted after. Her beautiful woman, learning from an old book that “whenever the desire is strong enough he will get a crimson moth and it sets up at what was his funeral until the right time. It hap- pens that he is the Huntington doomed as he falls from the window through which he has in- troduced himself. The Huntington’s wife is played by Jack Drummer and Louise Violette.

“Love, Oil and Grease.” (Kalem. Tues., Dec. 29.)—A story of the oil producers, which is your usual double meaning story, but is far more interesting than what it is described. Their battle with oil and bricks is a remarkable affair.

“The Derelict.” (Kalem. Two reels, Wed., Dec. 30.)—A man is in love with his partner’s wife, but his husband suffers from headaches, and his partner gives him headache powders containing habit producing opium. The sick man becomes a drug fiend and a human derelict. He visits his wife and young friend and passes them as another man. Finally the criminal realizes the trick and brings the couple together. J. Franklyn Reel and Maudie Mott in the peaceful hamlet of Hamville. Bad also takes part in the gun-fighting and gen- eral trouble.

“The Intriguer.” ( Lubin. Two reels, Wed., Dec. 30.)—An involved melodrama concerning the adventures of的质量, Winifred Hagen, two crooks who make a living by stealing while passing as society persons. Viola’s specialty is black paint while her partner is an expert at stealing jewels. Viola nearly wrecks the hap- piness of a young couple in the course of one of her expeditions, but is finally arrested with her partner, and the lovers reunited.

“Forging Dad’s Consent.” (Vitagraph. Wed. Dec. 30.)—A story of the oil producers in which Lips is being described to a credulous wife as the mask of a blow. A hypocritical father refuses to sign the consent form. He signs the form to the young man until the youth discovers the old man and his new day and night affairs with him. Constable Talmadge and Billy Quick are seen as the youthful lovers, while the father is played by Lee Beggs.

“Love Will Out.” (Vitagraph. Thurs., Dec. 31.)—Artists and their ways are favorite themes in the action of this story of the studio. An artist with high ideals who devotes himself to his art, which changes his mind just in time. Then he meets with a certain amount of success, and marries a girl who is not a good enough artist, and gives promise of being able to support her. He is rich when he marries, and while her lover is played by Carleton Waterbury.

“Fate and Fugitive.” (Vitagraph. Two reels. Thurs. Dec. 31.)—The familiar story of a man who is mistaken for a criminal because he is the exact double of the burglar. There are a number of scenes where the heroine is existing as herself and of course avoids punishment for a murder with which he has absolutely nothing to do.

“Two Stray Souls.” (Biograph. Thurs. Dec. 31.)—An ex-convert, who is living “straight” is in the experience. Both fear the other will learn of it. Happiness is theirs once more.

“Auntie’s Portrait.” (Vitagraph. Fri., Jan. 1.)—An egotistical but wealthy and elderly aunt of a young girl who is busy trying to make her present. It proves to be very a poor picture of the real aunt, and the girl disowns him for her father. When they, to their amazement, visited the aunt, she is in a rage and is about to be sent to jail for the burglary which he had committed the night before. The husband tells her of the story where she has had it framed. There are some other complications concerning the book, but all turns out well, and the aunt is appeased.

“Getting Father’s Goat.” (Kalem. Fri., Jan. 1.)—An entertaining comedy which is well acted and well done. Mr. Smith is a wealthy man who is to take a place as a reporter. She discovers that a comic actor really the police plays a police. After the rat which she brings about she finds an I. O. U. signed by her father. When she goes to the address given to him, he finds he and changes his mind suddenly.

“The Efficiency Squad.” (Biograph. Fri., Jan. 1.)—A split reel with “Diogenes Weekly, No. 1. The Black Sheep” being the adventures of a police chief and some gimmicks of truly desperate appearance, but less terrible ac- tions.

“A Clean Slate.” (Lubin. Fri., Jan. 1.)—The regular triangular, except that the wife is played by a woman and the husband by a woman and the man is ex- the erring husband. He is sent back to his wife in the disguise of a woman, but the wife has sold him a new home and the man is ex- the son and his sweetheart, while Vivian Prescott and Jack Drummer appear as the vampire and the boy’s father.

“All for the Boy.” (Biograph. Sat. Jan. 2.)—A melodrama concerning the adventures of a son becoming involved with a woman of the vampire sort. His father tries to buy her off, and failing takes her to a country house where he has her locked up after the girl’s mar- riage, at which she had vowed to create a scene. She interests a financier who breaks the bro- ken contract, but the man is satisfied with the thought that he has saved his son from life-long unhappiness. Jack Mather and Mildred McDonald are in it as the son and his sweetheart, while Vivian Prescott and Jack Drummer appear as the vampire and the boy’s father.

“In the Latin Quarter.” (Vitagraph. Two reels. Sat. Jan. 2.)—A melodrama concerning the adventures of two spies competing for the same prize, and one of whom is painting a model from a picture which she has. The end the troubles are all overcome, but not until the boy画家 is taken to save the painting which she had posed.

“The Girl Telegrapher’s Peril.” (Kalem. Sat. Jan. 2.)—Another of the series featuring Helen Holmes as the heroine of a story of a number of a fires and buildings. Helen’s prin- cipal trouble is that the man of a young artist running onto a tryst in front of an express to save a child who had wandered out of the way. She is also responsible for an engineer running down a man on a track tricycle as he takes his atten- tion from a girl who has been through the same experience. Both fear the other will learn of it. Happiness is theirs once more.

January 2, 1915.
Hunting in Crazy Land." (Powers. Split reel. Fri., Dec. 25.)—This comedy which is on the way to becoming a universal, belongs to the Japanese Silk Industry. The plots are extremely amusing. A hunter, his dog, and a bear are the only three figures that appear in the picture. Their antics, such as swallowing bullets and climbing up walls, will call for only the heartiest laughter.

The Japanese Silk Industry." (Powers. Split reel. Fri., Dec. 25.)—This picture is a truly amusing entertainment under taken under the auspices of Homer Croy while on his recent trip. Native dances and a few views of the country are shown, which make for knock-down fun. This is the only known one of this kind of film.

Hunting in Crazy Land." (Tops. Split reel. Thu., Dec. 22.)—This is a truly amusing short film. The story is well told, the acting is good, and the picture makes one happy by refusing to allow them to indulge in their natural play instinct. It shows the experiences of a young fellow who has nearly a fit every time he hears a child laugh.

Lasky Studio Is Notable California Landmark

Structure a Huge Glass House Instead of a Frame Building with Only a Skylight, Making a Bright Light Possible at All Times

WHEN Jesse L. Lasky reaches Los Angeles in the course of the next few days he will find some important changes at the Lasky Hollywood studios even though he has been in the East only since Thanksgiving Day. The biggest feature at the Western plant is the new glass studio which was begun this fall, and which has been rushed to completion during Mr. Lasky's absence.

The glass studio is in a way an innovation. It differs decidedly from the usual indoor studio in that it is literally a glass building, instead of a frame structure with a large skylight, and one or two walls of glass. There is a skeleton of steel structure much like that used in constructing a greenhouse.

This is covered with glass panels with the result that the entire roof and the four walls are made of glass. This makes it possible to obtain a fine light except on the very darkest days of the rainy season, when electricity is used. The studio is also to be used for special lighting effects which cannot be obtained on the outdoor stage.

It is also of interest to note that this glass studio measures one hundred and fifty by two hundred feet, making it the largest indoor stage on the Pacific coast, according to Mr. Lasky, and one of the largest in the country. In addition to this there is another studio building measuring sixty by one hundred and twenty feet located on the same property. These two buildings together with a large outdoor stage, available for the greater part of the year, will be used for all interiors.

Judging by Mr. Lasky's account, the most attractive feature of his plant is the ranch where exterior views are made. This is located only about twenty miles from the Hollywood studios and laboratories, but it includes every possible sort of scenery. The ranch, together with Government land on which the company has picture rights, covers an area of twenty thousand acres, or about thirty-one and a quarter square miles.

At the entrance is a stretch of absolutely barren sand, like a miniature scene from the heart of the Sahara. Beyond this there is a great diversity of country including mountains which rise to 6,000 feet above sea level, and on which snow scenes can be staged throughout most of the year.

On the ranch and at Hollywood there are about five hundred persons regularly employed. It is the policy of the Lasky company to build its own scenery and make its own costumes. In this way it is possible to stage pictures exactly as the directors wish and be entirely independent of the vagaries of the professional property dealers. The two Lasky plants thus represent one of the most complete establishments in the country for the making of motion picture films.

BREESE SEES HIMSELF IN "WALLS OF JERICHO"

Philadelphia, Dec. 22

The manager of the Ruby Theatre, R. Marlow, had a shock the other evening, when Edmund Breese, now playing at the Adelphia in "Today," quietly walked up and asked permission to see himself in "Walls of Jericho," which happened to be on at the Ruby, and in which Mr. Breese took the lead. Needless to say, the manager quickly recovered, and soon Mr. Breese was seeing himself as others saw him, to the mutual satisfaction of all concerned.

Exhibitors Will Own Stock in Exchange

Co-operative Service Company in Indianapolis, Handling Kriterion Program, Organized with Charles N. Stevenson and Harry R. Campbell as Officers

A NOVEL scheme for handling an exchange is being promoted in the Indianapolis territory for the Kriterion program.

A company has been incorporated and the exhibitors will own the stock in the exchange.

A meeting of the stockholders and exhibitors held for the purpose of examining films released by the Kriterion Program was held in Indianapolis on Monday, December 7, at the Starland theatre.

There was a splendid attendance and much enthusiasm created. The general opinion was that the release was as good as the best, judging from those exhibited Monday.

This scheme of handling an exchange is new in the film business, but since a weekly program of more than $3,000 has been booked in the last three weeks with contracts signed up for a year in advance, it is not out of the ordinary to predict a tremendous success for the Kriterion Program in the Indianapolis exchange.

This program is handled by the Co-operative Service Company, 703 Odd Fellows building, Charles N. Stevenson is president, Harry R. Campbell, secretary and treasurer; Elmer Brient, vice-president and general manager.

The company proposes releasing in January.

FRED PERRY ENGAGED BY FAMOUS PLAYERS

The Famous Players Film Company have engaged Fred Perry, leading man in the current success, "On Trial," and who created the role of Redwood, the detective, in the original production of "Jim, the Penman," to portray that part in the film adaptation of this subject, which will shortly be presented with John Mason in the stellar role.

EXHIBITORS OWN STOCK IN EXCHANGE

A new idea introduced in the motion picture business is the organization of the Co-operative Service Company in Indianapolis, handling the Kriterion program for exhibitors in the city.

Charles N. Stevenson and Harry R. Campbell are the managers and the company is organizing to handle the same for all the other Indiana cities.

A large crowd of exhibitors and stockholders attended a meeting in the Odd Fellows building, and they were enthusiastic over the results of the first program, which was exhibited in the city.

The coming release will be prepared and handled in the same way. The managers expect a great success from the Kriterion program, and it is an interesting plan to watch.

REMEMBER that MinA Films are no haphazard catch-as-catch-can films rushed out pell mell to grab off some of the coin loosened up by the present day craze for comedies.

MinA Films represent a serious effort to produce the finest one reel comedies possible.

Work was started on MinA Films months ago, when the great demand for comedies was just commencing. Since that time many producers have entered the field with hurry-up brands of comedies. But the makers of realized that comedies are beyond comparison the most difficult pictures to produce. So they specialized on comedies, and held back MinA Films until months of study and experiment had developed a system of production that guarantees sure fire results.

MinA Films employ special scenario writers, special directors, special camera men, special comedians, specialists in every department. MinA Films are being exploited for the exhibitor through the news columns of nearly seven hundred papers in all parts of the country, thus creating popular interest which is directly connected with your theatre through beautiful one and three sheet posters.

The fact that MinA Films are included in the licensed program should convince you of their sound, reliable quality.

IN the Land of the Headhunters," Edward S. Curtis's wonderful Indian picture, is drawing increasing crowds at the Montauk Theatre, Brooklyn. The production had this same successful experience at the Casino Theatre, New York, even during a week when it rained almost unceasingly for four days.

In the opinion of the Casino management and other astute observers "In the Land of the Headhunters" is so proven a Broadway "hit" that it is good for a run of several months on the great thoroughfare.

Arrangements have therefore been made to bring the picture to Broadway after the Brooklyn run, which will last through the holidays.

THE WAR CANOE OF THE TRIBE

The Western Company opened at Seattle last week and is playing to crowded houses.

"In the Land of the Headhunters" ranks as one of the great pictures of the year. It took Mr. Curtis two years to complete the production and an expenditure of $75,000. Its success is well deserved.

NEW REVIEWING COMPANY IN THE FIELD

WITH the advent of the newly incorporated Motion Picture Reviewing and Reporting Company, the moving picture field is gaining an institution for which there has been a demand of long time standing. With reliable and unbiased reports and criticisms, which the new organization promises to furnish at a nominal fee, the exhibitor, subscribing to the service, will save for himself much time, trouble and expense heretofore experienced in booking up reports and attending screenings. The company has at its head as directors Messrs. H. J. Brock, M. B. Schlesinger and M. S. Epsin, all well known in the picture world. The criticisms will without question be honest and unbiased. A staff of experienced film men, with the individual exhibitor's requirements in mind, will review the pictures for the subscribers and the company will send out a batch of reports on the various releases each week. It also intends to furnish confidential special reports to exhibitors.

M. B. Schlesinger, who is the general manager of the company, is also the special New York representative of the United Motion Pictures Company of Buffalo, and the All Feature Company of Canada, in which capacity he reports on and buys all the feature pictures for the various theatres and exchanges of these concerns.

The new company has taken a suite of offices in the Putnam building, 1495 Broadway. Among its first clients are the following: The New Academy and Regent Theatre, Buffalo; the Imperial, Francais and Family theatres, Ottawa, Canada; the Family, the Scala and Francais theatres, Montreal, and the Strand and York theatres in Toronto.

FIRST LARIAT RELEASED DECEMBER 28

THE first Lariat picture, "The Heart of a Man," is scheduled for distribution by the United Film Service, December 28. The Pike's Peak Film Producing Company, the originator of the new brand, has just begun operations at Colorado Springs, and "The Heart of a Man" represents the first production of the company.

Hector A. Cobb, who portrayed the part of "Curley" Smith in "Across the Border," a notable western film issued some time ago by Warner's Features, Inc., assumes the leading male role in "The Heart of a Man.

George Gehhart, who has been engaged as assistant director and leading man of the new organization, will devote his time between directing and acting. He was not cast in the first Pike's Peak picture for the reason that the multitudinous details connected with launching the new organization monopolized his time. He will, however, appear in the second release. Josephine West is the heroine.

The Pike's Peak Film Producing Company is the most recent addition to the organization comprising the United Motion Picture Producers, Inc.

The company will in all probability bring out many novel pictures.

LASKY ANNOUNCES CASTS OF "YOUNG ROMANCE," AND "GOOSE GIRL"

SAMUEL GOLDFISH announces the following complete casts for the Jesse Lasky productions of "Young Romance," which is to be released on January 21, and "The Goose Girl," which will be released on January 25. The star of "Young Romance" is Edith Taliaferro, and the supporting company includes Tom Forman, Frederick Wilson, Ernest Garcia, Marshall Mackay, Harry de Vere, Parke Jones, Charles Wells, Florence Dagmar, Violet Drew, Mrs. Lewis McCord, Miss Kellar, Miss Abril and Miss White.

Miss Marguerite Clark, by the courtesy of the Famous Players Film Company, assumes the stellar role in "The Goose Girl." The other leading artists in the company are: Monroe Salisbury, Sidney Dean, E. N. Dunbar, James Nell, L. Bayton, B. E. Peters, H. B. C. Carpenter, Ernest Joy, J. M. Cassidy, Miss Johnson and Jane Darwell.

"Sidney Bruce, in his latest detective performance, portrays the detective of the "The Million Dollar Mystery," playing the part of a man who deciphers the riddle of the strange event that takes place in his own home. Bruce's method of solving the mystery is ingenious and skillfully handled. He is able to penetrate the riddle with amazing accuracy, and his conclusions are always correct. The story is well woven and the acting is first-rate. The picture is a fine one and should prove popular with all who enjoy a good mystery story.

"The Secret of the Old Church" (Reliance.-Mon.)--A mystery picture, based on the novel by the late Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. The story is a thrilling one, with a plot that is full of suspense and excitement. The acting is excellent, and the photography is fine. The picture is well worth seeing.

"The Man from the North" (Reliance.-Mon.)--Another mystery picture, based on the novel by the late Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. The story is a thrilling one, with a plot that is full of suspense and excitement. The acting is excellent, and the photography is fine. The picture is well worth seeing.

"The Woman in the Moon" (Reliance.-Mon.)--A romance picture, based on the novel by the late Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. The story is a thrilling one, with a plot that is full of suspense and excitement. The acting is excellent, and the photography is fine. The picture is well worth seeing.

TERRISS BEGINS "A MAN'S SHADOW"

Tom Terriss, who is putting on the famous Terriss plays for the Kinetophone, has picked his cast for the first of this series of plays. He has chosen for the first of these pictures "A Man's Shadow," one of the pieces which was made famous by William Terriss at the Adelphi Theatre in London.

As has been announced, Mr. Terriss will have for his leading woman Anna Herrington, all baby of the city.

FIRST BABY BORN IN UNIVERSAL CITY

Universal City is all excitement for in the early hours of December 21 a baby boy was born within its limits, the first child of either sex to have its name inscribed on the birth register of the infant city. The boy, Carl Bernie Oelze, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Oelze, the commander of the "U" cowboys.

Mrs. Oelze before her marriage was a nurse in Universal Hospital. According to latest reports she is doing nicely and was not at all affected by the fervor of the demonstration in honor of her first born.

HERRINGTON SUCCumbs WITH SUNDAY OPENING

Fred J. Herrington, owner of the Coliseum Theatre at Mt. Oliver, a suburb of Pittsburgh, has had his theatre open for the last two Sundays. No set price of admission is charged but a silver offering has been taken up at the door. So far the borough or county authorities have not molested him, and he states he will continue the keeping of the theatre open until he is closed by one or the other of the branches of the law in this section. He states that business is not very good as the people in that section seem to be tired about attending Sunday shows.

"STOP THIEF," KLEINE COMEDY, COMPLETED

George Kleine's "Stop Thief," by Carleton Moore, founded on the famous comedy which had such a successful run under the management of George M. Cohen and Sam H. Harris, has been completed at the Kleine studios.

Harry Mestayer, who plays the male lead of the theft, arranged to leave New York immediately after his work had been finished to open an engagement at the Grand Opera House, Chicago, in the latest Cohen and Harris success, "On Trial."

LOW RENT FOR FILM FIRMS

The troubles which have arisen in regard to New York fire regulations have caused inconvenience to many of the motion picture companies with the result that numerous of them are looking for new quarters.

One of the buildings available for this purpose is the Masonic Building, 71 West Twenty-third street, New York, in which room can be had at a remarkably low figure. The reason for the trouble in connection with the other buildings is the fact that they are located inside the proscribed distance from schools and theatres or other public resorts.

LORIMORE WILL BOOK BOY SCOUT PICTURE

Alec Lorimore announces that he has made arrangements to handle an extensive campaign for booking the Boy Scout picture.

The Boy Scout movement in this country is upwards of four hundred and fifty thousand boys. The membership will possibly be doubled before Alec Lorimore is through with the bookings of this drama by Campbell MacCulough. President Wilson has taken part and the endorsement of Theodore Roosevelt, Judge Ben Lindsey, Gifford Pinchot and others has been obtained for the picture.

WALL TO OPEN PERCENTAGE EXCHANGE IN BIRMINGHAM

Alex Wall, well known as an exhibitor in the South, has opened an exchange in Birmingham, Ala., and will handle features on a percentage basis. Officers are now being fitted up, and Mr. Wall is desirous of communicating with producing companies in the North and in the West. A letter addressed to Box 553, Birmingham, Ala., will reach Mr. Wall.

BERGH IN CHARGE OF SCENARIO AGENCY

Albert Ellery Bergh, of the Biograph scenario staff, has accepted an offer to take charge of the scenario department of the Baermann Literary Agency, at 225 Fifth avenue, New York.

Mr. Bergh, however, will continue to write scenarios and act as an editorial scout for the Biograph company during its winter sejour at Los Angeles.

EDWARD JOSE IN "A FOOL THERE WAS"

Edward José plays the lead in "A Fool There Was," the drama in which Robert Hilliard made a tremendous hit on Broadway some time ago.

The film version is released through Box Office Attractions and promises in every way to equal its famous footlight original.
THE BLACK SPOT
(Cosmofotofilm—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY CLIFFORD H. FANGBURN

SELF does one have an opportunity to view a four-reel picture so perfect in structure as this drama of Russian political life. Nor is perfection of structure its only bid for fame. It is a story which is literally gripping; it has many fine light and scenic effects, and besides this it is acted with a skill which borders on perfection. All this may seem high praise, but it is no more than the production deserves. George Tucker, who directed the picture for the London Film Company, has done in it the best work yet to his credit.

All the scenes in the first reel are laid in Russia, and include many midwinter night views about the house of the aged Professor Scevroff. These are necessarily studio work, but they are unusually fine examples of the artificial creation of snow effects, while careful lighting arrangements have resulted in realistic backgrounds. The action, which takes place in England, is not so difficult to depict, but some excellent photography is seen.

Jane Gail, in the role of Olga, the professor's daughter, plays a part which is heavily dramatic throughout the entire film, but she appears to even more advantage than in some of her other successes. Charles Rock is seen as the old professor, a role which he handles convincingly. A. Holmes-Gore appears as the kind-hearted and plucky Grand Duke Paul, with Gerald Ames as Captain Droulcy, his side, and Frank Stanmore as his secretary.

The story opens in Russia, where a little band of students are attending secret meetings at the home of the aged Professor Scevroff. There is not any thought of violent acts on the part of the group, but rather serious educational work for the betterment of conditions in Europe. Nevertheless the place is raided, and the professor's wife is killed by the shock of seeing him beaten and her daughter handled roughly.

The Grand Duke Paul, who happens to be passing, comes into the house and gives orders that banishment instead of a sentence in Siberia be their punishment. The professor and his daughter suppose the Duke to have been responsible for all their trouble. Later they are in England, where they attend meetings of Russian exiles. The Grand Duke Paul comes to England on a visit. He is interested in helping to advance political reforms, and therefore obtains entrance to the circle of politicians in disguise.

There he hears the council vote to kill him, and sees Olga draw the black spot, which means that she is to do the work. He has her introduced to his house as a stenographer, and by giving her certain papers to copy shows her how much he is helping her cause. He thus influences her so that she will not kill him. When her so-called treachery is learned by the other Russians they again draw lots, and the Grand Duke by a trick is the one picked to kill Olga.

Nevertheless to say he avoids doing this, although at the risk of his own life. The first reel is surprisingly strong, but the other three and a half of the picture it sets, and the picture is in every way an excellent one.

SMALLWOOD OPERATES OWN CAMERA

TO Ray C. Smallwood falls the distinction of being one of the few directors in the motion picture industry who operate their own cameras. Not satisfied with this two-in-one combination, he insists upon driving his own automobile while making exteriors, writes most of his own stories, supervises the work of the factory, cuts up his own negatives and takes care of the other work that falls to his lot as vice-president and secretary of the Smallwood Film Corporation.

At the present writing, he has only to perfect a motor attachment to run his camera in order that he may equip himself to work in the pictures with Ethel Grandin, whose work he is directing.

QUAKER CITY REEL FELLOWS PLAN FESTIVITIES

THE Reel Fellows Club have a big entertainment in prospect. Stanley Mustaiba, of the Stanley company, and C. L. Peny, manager of the Globe theatre, have the affair in hand and some big surprises can be looked for. The Reel Fellows are about to close their charter, membership having brought the number up to the limit set.

FLAMINGO COMEDIES GET A SUCCESSFUL START

ON Sunday night, December 20, the first of the Flamingo Comedies was shown for public exhibition to a crowded audience at the Olympia Theatre, Broadway and 107th street, New York City.

"Without Hope" was the first production decided upon from the prize-winning scenarios of The Morning Telegraph and Chartered Theatres Corporation National competitive contest, and was a picturization of the work of Elaine Sterne who has won many prizes recently for stories and scenarios. Among the photo-play stars who made the production under the direction of Fred Mac were Margaret Loveridge, Catherine Proctor and Mary Charleson.

The picture was greeted with enthusiasm. Bookings from all over the country are being received through the Zone offices of the Sawyer Film Corporation.

This and all the Sawyer features are booked for Greater New York and New Jersey by the Colossus Film Co., 110 W. 40th street.

PETER, AMERICAN CANINE ASSISTANT, BACK AT STUDIO

"PETER THE GREAT," a dog well known in the Mutual program, has been found. The American's brindle bulldog is once more safe in the studios. It was a dark hour when the canine favorite of Margarita Fischer and beloved pal of little Kith Fischer disappeared.

For several days no traces of him could be discovered—and then someone phoned Harry Pollard that he had been seen in Garden street, Santa Barbara. Of course they knew it was Peter from being familiar with his distinguished likeness on the screen.

Mr. Pollard, knowing that the dog would recognize the car, had his chauffeur drive around to Garden street. The chauffeur was going along at an easy pace, when, glancing over his shoulder, he saw with joy that the expected had happened. Peter was comfortably seated in the town car, looking only too glad to be going home.

CHANGE OF CENSORS IN SPOKANE PLEASES EXHIBITORS

FEWER "hans" and freak rules for theatre managers are expected since the departure of the Rev. W. J. Hindley, former mayor and official censor, from Spokane.

The city council has appointed Commissioner of Public Affairs Samuel Glasgow to the censorship post and he has entered upon its duties. Mr. Glasgow has never been a devotee of the theatre, but expects to become a much more regular attendant hereafter. His policy, however, will be to leave much more to the personal discretion of the managers than did his reverend predecessor.

ELEANOR WOODRUFF WILL JOIN VITAGRAPH

ELEANOR WOODRUFF, for two years a Pathe feature star, will be a Vitagraph "Life Portrait" after January 4. Miss Woodruff's acquisition by the Vitagraph Company follows almost on the heels of her statement last week that she had abandoned the screen for a short vacation. It is said that her work for the Vitagraph Company will mainly include appearances in Broadway Star Features.

For those who are interested in personal details—whisper—Eleanor Woodruff was born at Towanda, Pa., in 1892. Her favorite roles are those heavy emotional parts demanding thoughtful acting for which her thorough stage training well fits her. Her beauty is of the majestic type, as captivating off the screen as on. Miss Woodruff not long ago got the Red Cross fever and was on the point of abandoning America to go to the seat of war in Europe to minister to the wounded and suffering. Her present engagement is fulfilled with her resolution, and she was persuaded to give up the idea.

RESCUE OF THE STEFANSSON EXPEDITION

THIS is indeed a very creditable offering for any new producing company and one of which the Sunset Motion Picture Company, a San Francisco concern, may well feel proud.

That the company realizes the importance of properly marketing their first production is shown by the arrival in New York of M. E. Cory, their general manager, who has established offices in suite 401, 110 West 40th street.

The Stefansson rescue is one of the greatest pictures ever produced, appealing from a dramatic as well as educational and historical standpoint. If the subsequent releases of the Sunset company keep pace with this picture, their success is assured.

Mr. Cory is emphatic on this point and proudly calls attention to those back of his company. Mr. J. C. Wheeler, Jr., president; Captain H. S. Howland, vice-president; C. J. Parks, a prominent attorney, are the other officers. While the directorate and stockholders include such well-known Californians as Charles K. Field, editor Sunset Magazine; U.S. Senator James D. Phelan, Herbert Fleishhacker and C. L. Smith, prominent bankers; Max Schmidt, president Schmidt Litho Co.; Mr. J. H. Henty, one of California's leading capitalists; Judge B. V. Sargent, of the Supreme Court and Mrs. Phoebe A. Hearst.

"THE PIT"
(World Film—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

It may be said without fear of contradiction that "The Pit" is one of the very best releases turned out by the World Film Corporation. The director, Maurice Tourneur, has proven that however old the story in hand may be, it may be effectively treated in its production, causing it to be just as engrossing as if it had never before appeared. By simply devoting a reasonable amount of attention to detail, a matter often overlooked by producers, Mr. Tourneur has gained some excellent effects, both by the good acting of almost everyone in the cast and the realistic and faultlessly constructed settings.

The word setting brings to mind two big scenes of the picture, namely, the wheat pit spectacle, and previous to this the scenes that are laid in the lobby and the interior of an opera house are modeled after one of the largest in Chicago.

In regard to the former, nothing unfavorable can be said of it. In an exchange scene we have been accustomed to see shaky walls, men taking the parts of brokers who apparently have spent most of their lives as truck drivers or the like, and the whole spectacle has often been grossly exaggerated. Here it is not; it is realistic; the men look as if they might have come from State street offices. What is more, they are all blessed with some sort of acting ability; they assume parts in the picture; they are not merely figureheads.

Referring to the scenes in the opera house, the same corresponding praise may be awarded them. While these scenes are not as all-important as the pit scenes—in fact they only afford a meeting place for two of the story's characters—they are not at all superficial.

After the introduction of the members of the cast, several panoramic views of the city of Chicago are flashed on the screen, this city being the locale of the story. After these introductory pictures, the story starts. It concerns for the most part Jadwin, a man who is soon most happily married. Then he is induced to invest money by a friend; he becomes immensely wealthy and neglects his wife. But quickly the crash comes; he is completely broken—and not until then does he realize the full happiness of his married life; then he starts over again.

Throughout the story colorful and human interest touches are present, possessed with the creative powers of causing the picture to appear unusually true to life.

Wilton Lackaye leads the cast. In the part of Jadwin he leaves nothing out that should be in. Gall Kane is equally convincing as his wife, and Milton Sills as Corbell, the man with whom Laura is about to elope when her husband's financial ruin happily intervenes, is a thoroughly attractive heavy. Alec Francis appears as a wheat broker and Chester Barnett is his secretary. Julia Stuart, E. F. Roseman, and a number of others complete the cast.

HOW CARL PIERCE TACKLED NEW ORLEANS

CARL HORTON PIERCE, general manager of the Bosworth Film Company took a rather unique method of finding out what the people of this section want in the way of moving pictures. Correspondents of Motion Picture News have taken occasion several times to point out that the producers are out of touch with their clients and the general public and that they are especially ignorant of the particular requirements of Louisiana and Mississippi, where peculiarities of the population requires care in selecting the moving picture house programs.

Mr. Pierce believed that he should find out just what the people wanted and he concluded that the best way to do this was to talk it over with the dramatic and moving picture editors. So on his recent visit to the city he entertained the newspaper men connected with his business at a dinner at the St. Charles hotel.

"PATSY AT SCHOOL"
(Lubin—One Reel)

THIS is the first chapter of a series which will tell the unfortunate happenings which follow the life of Patsy Bolivar. "Patsy" has become the synonym for one in bad luck, and poor young Bolivar has more than his share, and mentally resolved to lick any man, woman or child that said that there was no such thing as bad luck.

He has a nemesis in Fred Sykes, nicknamed "Sykesy," who loses no opportunity to get Patsy in trouble. Being of an emotional temperament, he early falls in love. His first object of adoration is his schoolmistress, but he has a powerful rival in Jack Prince, who eventually wins out.

When Patsy sends flowers to the young schoolmarm, Sykesy shakes pepper over the bouquet, and Patsy is sent supperless to bed. Aside from his little sister, Kitty, he has one champion, Sykesy's sister, Jane, but she fails to attract Patsy, who, upon finding his first love hopeless, transfers his affections to Tilly Grace, who really has no use for him, as her heart is already given to the horrible Sykesy.

With each chapter of the series more misfortune will be told to the credit of this very unlucky boy. The serial will continue for 14 numbers, written by Clay M. Greene and directed by Percy Winter. Patsy is played by Clarence Jay Elmer.

RETRIAL OF EXHIBITOR ON CRIME FILM CHARGE

MANAGER HIMEBAUGH, of the Royal theatre, will be tried a second time on the charge of violating the recently enacted motion picture ordinance. The first case tried resulted in a disagreement of the jury. The picture censored was "The Tragedy of Whipping Creek." The charge against Manager Himebaugh was that by showing such picture he violated a clause in the new ordinance referring to the showing of pictures of crime and bloodshed.
NEW TAX MENACES MONTREAL EXHIBITORS.

Although Managers Are Already Compelled to Pay $500 a Year to the City, Twenty Cents a Seat to the Provincial Government, and Other Heavy Local Rates, an Alderman Proposes One-Cent Levy Every Time a Seat Is in Use

MOTION PICTURE NEWS

There is more trouble looming up for the motion picture exhibitors of Montreal. Having in a great measure pulled themselves together after the disturbing times of war times, they are now to be further harassed by another indirect tax if the proposal of a city alderman goes through.

As things are present, there is not much profit in a motion picture house. The present taxes are exceedingly heavy. In the first place, the exhibitors have to pay a city tax of $500 yearly, and then they have to pay a provincial tax of 20 cents a seat per annum. Added to this there are the heavy local taxes, such as water, etcetera. When it is also considered that competition among the exhibitors themselves is extremely heavy—any person whether he be competent or not can hire a small hall and run a motion picture house in competition with the legitimately constructed one—it is apparent that the situation is very bad.

There seems to be an idea among the general run of the public in Montreal that all the exhibitors are absolutely rolling in wealth; and it creates quite a startling surprise when anybody is told authoritatively that the opposite is quite the case, and that after taking everything into consideration, the percentage of profit is very low, considering the amount of risk that is undertaken.

Anyhow, exhibitors are supposed to be a regular gold mine. When it was found that the various charitable organizations in Montreal were in need of increased revenue, the brilliant idea struck certain members of the council that the motion picture exhibitors and their patrons should supply the want.

WANT TO TAX PATRONS INDIVIDUALLY

Therefore we have a prominent alderman laying before the Legislative Committee of the City Council the proposition that the tax of one cent should be placed on all those who visit motion picture houses. Of course, the alderman was emphatic in stating that the idea was not to tax the proprietors, but the motion picture patrons. But as it is evident that it would be almost impossible to add a cent to every ticket sold, the result would be that the exhibitor would be compelled, in the end, to stand the tax himself.

People are not in the habit of carrying cents around with them, and having put down five, ten or fifteen cents, as the case may be, one can imagine how annoyed the patron would be if he had to dig down into his pocket to find an extra cent or two.

As one Welshman said, "How could the sale of such tickets be regulated at the busy rush time in front of the ticket office? It would be very hard to work in the extra tickets even if the patron had an extra cent. Then again the greater burden of the ticket would rest on the very people it was intended to support. It is the poor man, therefore, that would suffer."

It is evident from the general opinion of the exhibitors that the imposition of an extra cent tax on tickets would be not only injurious to the trade, but would cause so much irritation that business would be lost. Therefore it is the exhibitors who would have, in the long run, to pay without increasing the price of admission.

MUST BE Fought

It is evident that the proposition will have to be fought tooth and nail, or else at the Legislature the proposal will be suddenly rushed through. Unfortunately, there is one great difficulty in the way of fighting this proposal, and that is that there is no organization among the exhibitors themselves.

Some time back an organization was attempted, but there was so much jealousy and so much friction among the various managers that the project came to nothing. It was found that the better-class exhibitors—those who could legitimately be called motion picture managers, the men who have the high class houses—did all the work, while their smaller competitors, who really should not be permitted by the civic authorities to run a house at all, reaped the advantage. Anyhow, the matter is receiving considerable attention, and there is no doubt that some effort will be made to fight this proposal, but up to the present there seems no definite idea how it is to be done.

"Heart of Maryland" Under Way—Arbuckle-Bosworth Film to Be Called "It's No Laughing Matter"—Majestic-Reliance News

SPECIAL TO MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Los Angeles, Dec. 21.

NANCE O'NEILL, who is to be starred in the next production of the Tiffany Film Company, now finishing "The Heart of Maryland," has arrived in Los Angeles and is getting acquainted with the work before the camera preparatory for her engagement.

Fred Burns, Olga Gray, Bob Burns and Eagle Eye are appearing as the principals in the filming of "The Better Man," from the George Patullo western story of the same name, for a two-reel Majestic release.

"What Might Have Been" is the name of a two-reel Majestic release filmed by John B. O'Brien, in which a youth, Jack Conway, after being forced to commit numerous crimes by his aunt, an elderly woman, played by Mary Alden, is arrested and charged with murder, when the crime was really committed by the woman.

At the last minute the aunt repents and saves the youth from the scaffold. Intertwoven is a pretty romance in which a school teacher, Billie West, aids a youth to a better life. Spotswood Aitken appears as the uncle of the youth and the scenario is from the pen of Ella Wood.

In the fifteenth of the Bill series by the Komick company, produced at the Majestic-Reliance studio, Bill the office boy sees a fortune in selling hydrant water at prices of the pure bottled spring water, and to make it more desirable empties the contents of a bottle of perfume found in the desk of Ethel, the stenographer, into his supply. Later a henchpped husband spills a quantity of the perfumed water on his coat, trouble starts, and finally, after many complications, Bill's swindle is exposed. The usual cast of the Komick brand appears.

"Probation" is the title of a one-reel Majestic produced, with Fred Chanler, Cora Drew, Phillip McDermott and Loretta Blake in the Principal parts. The scenario is by J. A. Saxon, a Los Angeles probation officer, and is a plea for leniency for first offenders.

Arrangements were made last week for unusual sets required in the production of the Favorite Players' "High Hand," from the story of Jacques Futrelle. The scenario was prepared by Richard Willis.

The Macklyn Arbuckle-Bosworth picture has been renamed and will be released under the title "It's No Laughing Matter," in which the celebrated character actor appears as Hi Judd, poet, postmaster and philosopher. The release for this picture has been fixed for early in January and it will be given final screen examination within the next few days and shipped to the Paramount New York office soon.

SCREEN CLUB OF SAN FRANCISCO GIVES LUNCHEON

The Screen Club of San Francisco, under whose auspices an unusually successful ball was given late in November, gave a luncheon and dance on the evening of December 17 to members of the club and a few invited guests.

Sid Grauman, president of the club, and manager of Loew's Empress theatre, donated the stage of this popular playhouse for the event and the second show room of the theatre was known as the Screen Club Show.

The recent ball netted the organization a profit of more than $2,000 and with this handsome sum as a nucleus preparations are being made to open clubrooms.
Popularity of the Serial Is on the Increase

Elizabeth, N. J., Managers Planned to Discontinue Them But the Public Made Protests—Prove Big Drawing Cards with Indianapolis Audiences

Special to Motion Picture News

Managers of motion picture houses in Elizabeth have come to the decision that their regular programs are not complete without a special feature serial. Two months ago some of the managers were outspoken in their belief that the future of special feature serials, especially in this city, was not bright.

They even went so far as to announce that when contracts for the serials then being played expired there would be no similar ones to take their places. Most of the big houses, however, have finished with "The Perils of Pauline" and "The Million Dollar Mystery" and other serials of later release have been contracted for to take their places.

The apparent change of purpose was the result of careful experiment. The majority of the local managers ran the serial features for three days. Without announcing the change of plan several of the local managers omitted the serial feature for a single day each week.

The unexpected happened. A large number of patrons personally visited the management when such omissions occurred, others wrote letters of protest and indignation. The objections were so many and general that local managers decided they could not overlook them.

But with the continuation of the serial feature as a part of the regular weekly program there has been shown a change of policy on the part of the exhibitors. Instead of a three-day run, the managers are putting on the serial feature for a single day each week.

"The Million Dollar Mystery," which held forth at the Garden Theatre for three days each week, has been succeeded by "Zudora," which is given to the patrons but one day, and "The Master Key" holds forth at Proctor's Broad Street Theatre one day each week.

The smaller houses have already begun to follow the lead of the more prominent motion picture playhouses in Elizabeth, and special features that were generally exhibited for several days are now rarely shown longer than the time taken by the performances of a day each week.

Serials Supreme in Middle West

Special to Motion Picture News

Indianapolis, Dec. 23.

The serial pictures seem to be the big drawing cards in all the houses. Already the "Master Key" is bringing crowded houses to those who have been fortunate enough to get bookings.

J. G. Conner, local representative for "Zudora" and "The Million Dollar Mystery," is still making bookings on the "Mystery." He expects to exceed these with "Zudora," practically all the exhibitors following the "Mystery" with "Zudora."

Thirty Detroit Women to Become Censors

Members of Child Welfare Committee Assume Duty of Scrutinizing All Films in City at Cost of $1,000 a Year to Club

Special to Motion Picture News

Detroit, Dec. 22.

Plans have been completed for the censoring of films in Detroit by a committee, consisting of 30 ladies, with Mrs. E. F. Leonard as chairman, who comprise the Child Welfare and Civic committees of the Detroit Federation of Women's Clubs.

This committee is divided into various sections, and all parts of the city will be thoroughly covered. It is the purpose of the association to make public any films which they believe are undesirable, but the name of the playhouse is not to be mentioned, as the committee claim they do not want to do anything to injure any man's business, but rather to simply protect young boys and girls from bad influences, possible through pictures bordering on the immoral.

Owing to the fact that these lady censors are not officially authorized to carry on such work, no free admissions will be granted them. They will have to "come across" with the regular price in every instance, which means that if they visit houses once a day, the cost will be an average of $3 per day to the club, or practically $1,000 per year. The question is how long will the club endure this unnecessary expense.

A representative of Motion Picture News asked several leading managers of theaters what their opinion was of this new form of censorship. Invariably the answer came back:

"We really are not in a position to comment on any one way or the other until the plan is working. If these ladies want to come into our theaters, we will be glad to have them, as long as they pay the regular admission price and show that they are not endeavoring to interfere with our business. They will have very little to find fault with at any of the legitimate houses; there may be six or seven theaters that try to slip things over by showing films below the usual standard, and it is to this sort of houses that their efforts should be concentrated, and not at the better class of playhouses, because the proprietors of the latter type of theaters are just as anxious as anybody to keep their brand of entertainment above reproach."

Another Newspaper Man Joins Universal

Arthur M. Brilant, formerly with the New York City News Association, and before that with Middle West and Pacific Coast newspapers, has joined the publicity staff of the Universal. He will be in charge of the Universal's syndicate service.

Paul Panzer on Vaudeville Tour

Paul Panzer, who as Raymond Owen meets death by drowning, in the last episode of "The Perils of Pauline," has decided to take a few weeks' vacation by doing work of another sort. Bill Casey, nephew of Pat Casey, saw him in a vaudeville act over in Brooklyn several months ago and decided that on the conclusion of "The Perils of Pauline" he wanted to book the popular villain for an extended vaudeville tour.

So "Oom Paul" started in at the Auditorium in Malden, Mass., on December 14, for a week's engagement, and after New Years will play engagements in various cities for fifteen weeks straight. On the expiration of his vaudeville contract he will return to Pathé.

"Flora Fourflush" Comedies Are Ready

After making this statement the question arose as to whether the people would take the announcement seriously or come to the conclusion that it was a hodge-podge of nothing. These three releases are not to be taken seriously and cannot in any way be discounted as comedies of the funniest and most convulsing nature. "The Fates and Flora Fourflush" in its separate releases, make one of the most laughable burlesques on the thrilling, perilous and daredevil concoctions.
Government Department Sees Lubin Naval Films

Pictures of Torpedo Boat Destroyer Flotilla Racing at Rate of Thirty-three Knots an Hour, Will Be Seen Later at Panama Exposition

A R N unusually interesting series of motion pictures of the United States Navy, taken at Newport, R. I., has just been completed by the Lubin Manufacturing Company, of Philadelphia, and presented to Secretary of the Navy Daniels by Siegmund Lubin.

These special reels will be shown in the navy department and later will be sent to the naval section at the Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco, where the public will have an opportunity of seeing the excellent work being done by the officers and men of the United States Navy.

Perhaps the most striking of the pictures are the manoeuvres of the torpedo boat destroyer flotilla, the type of warcraft that Major Goethals, of Panama, has asked for to prevent English and other warships from violating neutrality laws off the canal. These boats are the fastest in the navy and the Lubin pictures show them racing to sea, making thirty-three knots an hour, and how they would attack an enemy with guns and torpedoes.

Incidentally the commander of the fleet demonstrated to the camera men how the fleet can race at high speed in close formation without a bit of smoke coming from any smokestack and then at a signal dense, impenetrable smoke is fired from every smokestack on every boat forming, an immense curtain which would completely screen the home fleet from an attacking fleet.

At the government's training station the camera men secured pictures that illustrate in detail how Uncle Sam supplies his ships with sailors. These pictures contain the famous exhibition drills and sham battles that the government stages every summer at Newport as a regular event.

The Lubin company will keep a set of these pictures to place in a big vault in which is kept records of important personalities and events of national importance.

THOMAS HOLDS “AD” DESK FOR KRITERION PROGRAM

A new face is seen in the advertising field in the person of W. D. Thomas, who comes from the commercial field.

For the past four years Mr. Thomas has been advertising and sales manager of the U. S. Linen Company, Chicago. He is now advertising manager of the Mica Film Corporation, which is putting on the Kriterion Program.

Mr. Thomas considers film as much a commercial commodity as any merchandise and states that advertising copy should follow along this line.

One of his novel advertisements appeared last week in the form of a football selection, using his brands as players on the All-American team. Very favorable comments on this ad have been passed through the trade.

SHELDON LEWIS SIGNS WITH PATHE FOR NEW SERIAL

Sheldon Lewis, whose interpretation of Dutch Joe in W. A. Brady's big production of “Life” at the Manhattan Opera House, is attracting such favorable notice, has been signed by Pathé to take a prominent part in the new serial, “The Exploits of Elaine.”

Mr. Lewis was born in Philadelphia of German-American parentage.

He has had leading roles with such stars as Dorothy Donnelly, Frances Starr and Blanche Walah, as well as with Ada Rehan in Shakespearean plays.

"GERTIE, THE DINOSAURUS"
(Box Office—One Reel)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

WINSOR McCAY'S conception of the far-famed dinosaur, as pictured in this reel, is proof conclusive that he is one of the best of the present-day comic artists. It will be everyone's sincere wish after witnessing this comical animated cartoon of his creation that he do more work for motion pictures.

Take it from the titles in the picture, Mr. McCay did the job on a bet that he could draw a likeness of the prehistoric animal (we get the name twisted when attempting to pound it out on the typewriter), and make it perform in the manner he ordered.

His orders to the beast, which stands gaping on the screen, are funny, but Gertie's actions are funnier still. She walks out of her cave and bites off and swallows the top of a tree, resembling somewhat the manner in which a giant would consume a stalk of celery. Other of her actions are picking up an elephant and swinging him far into a lake and later drinking the lake dry.

McCay wins his bet in the finale, and George McManus is obliged to foot the dinner bill. We don't envy Mr. McCay his job, as the film tells us he had to draw ten thousand pictures, each one differing slightly from the other, and we appreciate his finished work, and everyone else will after seeing "Gertie."

"MRS. WIGGS" IS NEXT CALIFORNIA PRODUCTION

"MRS. WIGGS of the Cabbage Patch," the California Motion Picture Corporation's second big feature production, will be released on the World program on January 4. The screen story combines Alice Hegan Rice's two famous novels, "Mrs. Wiggs" and "Lowey Mary," which were successfully dramatized by Anne Crawford Flexner under the former title, and produced by Liebler & Co. in 1903 at the Savoy Theatre, New York City. The play has had great vogue, passing around the world, has been played in all English-speaking countries and translated into German.

Beatrix Michieleva, whose work in "Salomy Jane" has brought her to the front rank in filmdom with one stride, appears as "Lowey Mary," the good angel of the drama, while Blanche Chapman plays "Mrs. Wiggs."

THE IDLER with CHARLES RICHMAN

Supported by Cathrine Countiss, Claire Whitney, Stuart Holmes and Walter Hitchcock

The Idler is the wonderful Frohman success with the heart-throbbing elements of love, the stage, a millionaire and his money, intrigue, folly and romance of gay life. A powerful five-reel picture.

SAMSON with WILLIAM FARNUM

By Henri Bernstein, author of "The Thief."

Samson recites the rise of a dock laborer to a man of millions. He marries into a financially decayed aristocratic family for social prestige, but his wife despises him. His love struggle ends in his ruin—yet he succeeds in his ambition.

What Makes A Feature A Feature?

1. Every feature must stand the acid test of box office value. The power to draw the money. To do this it must be a picture easy to understand. It must combine human interest with comedy and pathos.

2. Not alone is good acting a prime necessity, but care should be taken in the making of the print. A bad print offends and displeases the theatre patron, thus affecting the exhibitor. Take care of the exhibitor and he will take care of the manufacturer.

3. Personal exploitation of business directors exerts no influence on the box office. The same amount of energy spent on publicity for the feature gives it a distinction that makes it worth featuring.

What the Alliance Programme Stands For

1. As near perfection as the human element can make it. An earnest and honest endeavor to make each succeeding release better than those that have gone before. Progress is the foundation of our policy. Ask our patrons if this is true.

2. We will not handle off colored shoddy. Our features appeal to all classes. They combine entertainment, divertissement and instruction.

3. We offer you regularity, reliability and respectability. Regularity of release, reliability of character of output and respectability of subjects.

Be sure to mention "MOTION PICTURE NEWS" when writing to advertisers.

THE TRUTH WAGON

IN FIVE PARTS

A Brilliant Comedy Drama of Newspaper life, love and politics, from the play by Hayden Talbot—showing a Metropolitan daily in the making. Marvelous typesetting machines and giant presses are backgrounds for some of the big scenes in this production. Abounding in tense moments, strong climaxes and mirth provoking situations.

Mr. Figman is seen at his best as the easy going, devil may care John Ross, who buys a newspaper, and proceeds to follow a campaign of truth telling. He defeats his own father who runs for the governorship, makes enemies of his friends, overturns the most powerful political machine in the country, ruins himself financially and brings his meteoric exploits to a close by falling in love and making the father of his sweetheart Governor of New York State.

"FALSE COLOURS"
(Bosworth-Paramount—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY H. S. FULD

In this film of Bosworth's, made by the Smallesys, some of the finest interior settings, showing the interior of a large theatre, are presented. Not to mention this deviating from the beaten path of "Prop Scenes" would be slighting the honest efforts of a producer who has gone to greater lengths than the average to make a theatre scene realistic.

One of the scenes, taken from the rear of the orchestra seats, shows the entire stage and boxes on each side, over the heads of the seated audience. From viewing the scene one gets the impression that with the audience he is seeing the making of a star, and the repeated curtain calls and applause of the audience depicted by wonderfully clear photography only helps in the illusion.

Too much credit cannot be given the producers, for this is only one of the good points.

Phillips Smalley in the role of Lloyd Phillips plays the part in his own inimitable manner and, supported by Lois Weber, Dixie Carr and a well-chosen cast, he manages to put a fervor and realism into the part that makes a scarcity of necessary sub-titles fade into insignificance.

Phills, a famous actor, whose wife dies just before he arrives at her bedside, cannot bear the sight of his baby girl, whom he blames for her death. Giving her in charge to his housekeeper and providing for her education and sustenance, he goes away to field.

Eighteen years later, the daughter, now a young lady (Dixie Carr), learning that the funds intended for her were being appropriated by her guardians to support their dissolute son, Bert, in luxury, runs away and goes on the stage under the direction of an old friend of her father, Marc Herbert (Herbert Standing).
Courtnay Poole here gives a remarkable impersonation in the character of the son.

Mrs. Moore, who all these years has been secretly in love with Phillips, is employed in the same theatre, and succeeds in getting a kick in the face, and so on, the acting of Beban makes a rather pleasing and interesting production out of a story whose plot is nothing out of the ordinary.

The story of the immigrant toiling in a foreign land to earn enough to bring his prospective bride to his side from their native land, and their subsequent struggles to subsist on the harest living wage, has been used over and over again.

But with the help of about 1,500 feet of film devoted to scenes in the native Italy, and the introduction of the political boss in the city of the land of the free, a rather novel twist is given to the story, and it is made a better one than the average.

On his release from prison, where he has been sent for trying to get milk for his dying child, Beppo learns of the girl's death and holds the political boss indirectly responsible. Remembering past favors rendered by him to the boss, he had expected help from that quarter only to be literally thrown in the gutter.

Learning of the illness of the boss' baby, a few days later Beppo, by impersonating a peddler, secures entrance to the house. He hears the doctor tell the father that the slightest sound or shock will prove fatal to the child, and when the child is left alone for a moment, Beppo attains the side of the crib. Raising aloft the glass shade of a lamp, he is about to dash it to the floor, when a slight movement of the child's arm brings to mind that his own child was wont to make the same gesture. Gently lowering the shade, Beppo steals away.

Altogether the scenes in the last thousand feet are heart-rending, and the pathos as expressed on the face of Beppo and his wife, Anna (Clara Williams) is enough to move the average audience to tears. The story interests, is well told, and it should be well received by any appreciative audience.

BEPPO'S VICTIM FOILS HIS REVENGE

"THE ITALIAN"
(Inco-Paramount—5,900 feet)
REVIEWED BY H. S. FULD

In the character of Beppo Donetti, George Beban gives a masterly example of what an actor who is alive to his role and can feel his part, can do in the way of holding an audience in sustained tension.

By facial expression and the natural gestures with the hands he is capable of depicting so many different phases, so many different emotions, that though the action is only on the screen, we wonder why it is said that the screen has its limitations. It is nothing less than wonderful.

Coupled with good clear photography, well-chosen interior settings, and a few startling innovations, such as hanging on the running-board of a rapidly-moving automobile, being thrown off by

Farnum Plays Strenuous Part in "Samson"

Fox Actor, Powerful in Build and Muscular Development, Hurls Fellow Player Through Door of Set at Rehearsal

Special to Motion Picture News

WILLIAM FARNUM, the star in "Samson," by Henri Bernstein, a William Fox Production Extraordinary, released through the Box Office Attractions Company, is called upon to exercise prodigious feats of strength in the leading role.

In the big scene of the play, Brachard (Samson) invites Govain, a duelist and libertin, who, in his intrigues, to lunch at the Hotel Ritz. Brachard knows that Govain has taken his (Brachard’s) wife to an orgy the night before, and that Mme. Brachard has escaped from the scene with a torn dress and hand cut by a broken champagne glass. Brachard, who from a dock-hand has risen to a power of finance, controls the copper market absolutely.

Govain accepts Brachard’s invitation, never dreaming that the copper-king knows of the visit of his wife to the Café de Paris. Brachard, in a rage, tracked him, locked the door and raises his sledge hammer fists, hardened by his early years of toil. Govain screams and threatens. But it is no use.

Like a terrier shaking a rat Brachard pounces Govain from his feet and smashes him with a blow of his fist across a table. Then, after administering a terrible physical punishment to the man who has robbed him of his wife, Brachard leaves Govain out of the room and kicks his hat after him.

When this scene was played at the William Fox studios in Jersey City, everybody who knew of Mr. Farnum’s physical prowess, and who saw in him the way in which he throws himself into a part, gathered round the "set" in which the punishment of Govain was to take place, for they guessed it would be a pretty strenuous scene. The scene opened quietly enough, but as it progressed Mr. Farnum grew white about the nostrils. His hands clenched and unclenched. These were danger signals to the initiated. Suddenly Mr. Farnum made a dash at Govain, played by Charles Guthrie, who is tall and slender. Picking him up by the throat he swung him round his head like a human dumb-bell and then smashed him down on the table with a force that burst it in two and snapped its legs.

Guthrie, black in the face from the actor’s choking grip, gasped and gesticulated. With a final swing of his arms Mr. Farnum hurled Govain clear across the studio and out of the door of the set. Mr. Guthrie was so exhausted that restoratives had to be given him and nobody was more solicitous for his welfare than Mr. Farnum, who expressed his regret that he had been so carried away by the action of the scene.

FIRE AUTHORITIES AFTER FILM EXCHANGES IN SYRACUSE

Special to Motion Picture News

Syracuse, N. Y., Dec. 23.

THE Picture Playhouse Film Company, The Edcetic, The Box Office Attractions, The Greater New York Film Rental Company, Warner’s Features, The General Film Company and the Western Film Exchange may all be without homes in Syracuse very shortly if the threatened action of ejecting these exchanges is carried out by the city authorities.

The first five named exchanges are located in the Eckel Theatre building and the owners have had their insurance boosted 60 per cent, and all insurance has been cancelled on the remaining tenants until the films are removed. The city authorities claim that the exchanges are a menace to the building, and that they must move outside of the first fire zone. The Eckel Theatre is located in the same building, making matters doubly worse. Exchanges have been notified to be prepared to move on short notice, and things look bad.

All the feature people are getting together in an effort to secure a central location near the express offices and depots, and are meeting with some success, assisted by the chamber of commerce.

PARAMOUNT’S NEW PICTORIAL

The first number of Paramount Magazine makes its initial appearance with the Christmas number and gives promise of being of great interest to the Paramount exhibitors from a box office standpoint.

The forerunner of the publication has furnished the exhibits under the name of "Paramount Progress," and was intended for distribution among the patrons of the theaters. The new releases are mentioned at length in the magazine, and in addition other interesting items dealing with screen folks. The latest innovation is a page headed "My Lady’s Boudoir." Beautiful illustrations of film players and scenes from Paramount pictures are scattered through the magazine.

BOY ACTOR IN EIGHTH "ZUDORA" EPISODE

Donald Gallagher is a newcomer to the Mutual program. He is one of the most famous boy actors, and is to make his initial appearance for Thanhouser in the eighth episode of "Zudora." In the past he has distinguished himself in plays with such celebrities of the stage as Sol Smith, Russell Maxine Elliott, Eleanor Robson, Arnold Daly, Dustin Farnum and H. B. Warner.

Did You Sign One?

(No. 63. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talks by Carl Laemmle, President.)

I've been hearing some interesting stories about the operations of some of the many get-rich-quick men who have been wedging their way into the moving picture business.

One of them deals with a smooth-tongued individual who conceived the plan of getting exhibitors to sign a contract whereby they agree to book one of his so-called "features" every week for 52 weeks.

He got the exhibitors to sign the contracts on the strength of a very good picture which he showed them as a sample of the 52 he intended to make every year. So the poor duffers (are you one of them?) signed the contract!

The first picture, as I said before, was fine. But the second, third and fourth were rotten. The fifth was good, but the succeeding ones were junk. The exhibitor began to suspect that he had been stung, but he felt that he was hooked up for a year because of his contract, not realizing that the smooth-tongued fellow who hooked them had already smashed the contract to pieces by misrepresenting his proposition and failing to deliver acceptable pictures.

But the really interesting feature is this: On the strength of the contracts which he had inveigled the exhibitors into signing, Mr. Smooth raised a fat and healthy bank roll. Did he put any of it into new pictures? Not at all. He salted it. He got it by using the exhibitors as a tool. He sold stock on the strength of their signatures to contracts, and now he rolls around in automobiles and gives the exhibitors the merry laugh.

If you've been one of his victims it's your own fault. I've warned you so many, many times that I've worn out my warning apparatus.

If you'd only take the extra money that you now spend for "features" and spend it for newspaper advertising, you'd be building on a solid foundation and you'd get somewhere.

You're not wise to sign any contract for films unless you sign with a strong, reliable concern; one which has demonstrated its ability to make a good program all the time instead of just for a week or two; one which proves by its enormous investments in permanent equipment that it is here to stay. When you find a concern like that, sign as fast as you like so that no competitor can take your service away from you.

Personally I know of only one such concern in all the wide, wide world.

I refer to the concern which proved its faith in the future of this business by building a whole city out West just to make pictures; the same concern which is now building, across the river from New York City, the largest glass studio in America. It's the Universal, of course!

Carl Laemmle.
"IMITATION IS THE SINCEREST FORM OF FLATTERY"

As manufacturers of Mirroroide, the flexible, metalized glass screen, we feel flattered that there are on the market at the present time the "Just as Good" or "Better than Mirroroide" imitators.

The counterfeiter cannot last, and to those whom they may succeed in selling (?), we eventually replace with a Mirroroide. But You Cannot Afford To Take Chances.

Competition has made it necessary for you to have the best at all times. In the screen line, that best is Mirroroide. You can prove this statement by sending for large, free samples. Test, use your eyes, and common sense.

Would the new Elsmere Theatre, New York City; the new Englewood Theatre, Englewood, N. J., and the 8,000 other satisfied users of Mirroroide install and keep Mirroroide, if Mirroroide did not "Have the Goods"? Most Emphatically NO! The Starland Theatre Circuit, Winnipeg, Canada, to whom we sold Mirroroide when we started in business, 6 years ago, still continue sending in orders. WHY? Write Them! The above facts should convince you that Mirroroide Is The Screen for You. Now—Use the Brains God Gave You.

Continuous Performances Possible With Ingenious Auto Rewind Machine

F. E. FREDERICKS, of Port Clinton, Ohio, has recently given a demonstration of his auto-rewind machine in New York. This enables an exhibitor to give a continuous performance. It does away entirely with re-threading of the machine at the end of each reel and the necessity of rewinding after each show. It also makes it possible for one man to handle the projection booth, as but one machine is used with the outfit.

The first reel of the show is placed in the box as reel S in the drawing. This film is sent through the machine till the entire show is wound on reel B, A being empty.

Clamp U on reel A is then snapped down in place on the film, and the reel starts to revolve, one part of the film winding directly from reel B, and the other passing through the projection machine, around post Y, also winding on reel A.

As shown in the drawing, the film runs from B directly to reel A, and also at the same time around post X up to post L, across to post M, up through the inverted "L," and down through the projection part of the machine around post Y, winding on reel A. This makes a continuous chain of film without a break.

Action of the Reels

As soon as reel A is full, another reel put in place of S, 'till all the reels are found off the machine.

The photograph shows reel A filled and falling into the place of B, which is moving into position, C ready to snap into the place just left vacant by A.

This should give the reader an idea of the mechanical end of the machine.

The box holding the reels is made of sheet iron with an exhaust pipe, the view of which is shown in the photograph. The only part of the film, therefore, not in an absolutely fireproof iron box is that passing directly through the machine—an important thing to remember.

There are at the present time several of these machines in use which are proving very successful.

A Remedy for Overheated Motors

C. R. M., Montgomery, Ala.—We are using motor-driven projectors, and one of the motors is not working just right. Direct current is used and the motor soon becomes quite hot all over. Can you suggest any cause for this? This difficulty has caused me considerable anxiety.

Answer.—When a motor becomes hot all over, several conditions can be attributed to this heating. It is not safe to predict any part found hot as being the seat of trouble. By feeling all over, the part found to be the hottest may be taken to be the seat of trouble, or very near to it. A safer way to locate the seat of trouble is to allow the motor to become thoroughly cool. Then start up and run for a short time. Then feel around and find whether the shaft, bearings, brushes, commutator, armature or field windings heats first. There are so many causes for this general heating in small-sized motors, space will not permit discussion of them all as an aid to helping you out now. If you will follow the suggestion of locating the part that heats first, after the motor has been cooled off, then assistance can be given with more definite assurance of aiding you.
Announcement

This announcement to the exhibitor, theatre man and theatrical world, tells the story of an exhaustive, scientific and PRACTICAL INVESTIGATION made by the best and most complete corps of seating designers, construction engineers and manufacturing experts, ever associated since the theatre chair industry began.

After years of study on theatre chair usage these men, backed by the vast facilities and MANUFACTURING ECONOMIES of (REALLY) the largest and most complete theatre chair factory in existence, have now with their combined expert knowledge designed and constructed a complete line of chairs embodying a principle that no other theatre chair on the market has. This principle, which eliminates all theatre chair trouble, is the LAST WORD in chair construction.

As a result—THOUSANDS OF DOLLARS’ worth of machinery will be discarded. More new machinery, dies and patterns together with a new building addition to our large plants are necessary for the manufacture of these chairs.

Before purchasing, investigate what has caused us to spend a fortune to get these results. Your purchase is sure to be:

$100,000 Terre Haute House In Operation

The new American theatre at Terre Haute, Ind., which was built by the American Theatre Company, of Terre Haute, of which Maurice Less is the manager, at an approximate cost of $100,000, and which opened at Christmas eve, is one of the finest motion picture theatres in the State of Indiana. The policy of the house will be five, ten and fifteen cents. Parquet boxes will be reserved one hour for each performance in advance.

Special feature productions will be run.

The theatre was designed by Mr. Less, who made every effort to build it as near fireproof as possible, and it contains a large number of exits.

The theatre is in Wabash avenue and has a frontage of fifty feet in Wabash avenue and is 162 feet deep. It is two stories high and seats 1,050.

The balconies have a drop of twenty-five boxes on each side from the stage to the rear of the auditorium, which are convenient to the parquet floor. The seats in the boxes will be individual cane chairs, while the rest of the seats will be upholstered in leather. The boxes will seat eight and ten persons.

The two stairways leading from the foyer to the balcony are marble and all partitions in lobby and foyer are marble from the ceiling to the floor. A very novel idea is carried out in the lobby. Between the pilasters are flower boxes bedded in front of mirrors which are encased in panel frame with festoon hangings. A ten thousand-dollar pipe organ with an echo has been installed and a ten-piece orchestra will be used in connection. The screen is 14 1/2 feet by 18 1/2.

A woman's retiring room and a children's room are on the second floor while the men's smoking room is in the basement.

The lobby is twenty-two feet deep and leads into a foyer ten feet deep by forty-five feet long.

Suspended over the main entrance and studded with five hundred incandescent globes is a beautiful marquee. The theatre will be lighted by its own electric light plant and the interior will be profusely lighted and fitted with chandeliers, some of which are profusely studded with fancy and decorated chandeliers containing clusters of globes. The sidewalk, which is marble, extends the full length of the front of the theatre.

West Coast Theatre Concern Plans Expansion

The recent success of the plans of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit for securing additional working capital for contemplated extensions to its circuit of moving picture houses has resulted in the incorporation of the Turner & Dahnken Controlling Co., with a capital stock of $2,500,000. The incorporators are J. T. Turner, F. Dahnken, C. L. Langley, E. B. Johnson and J. A. Buck. This concern now conducts seven large houses located at San Francisco, Oakland, Berkeley, Alameda, Richmond, San Jose and Sacramento, and an early date will open another at Watsonville.

It is planned to have a new house at Oakland within a year and preliminary arrangements are being made for entering new fields, with Los Angeles and Portland the first to receive attention. It is possible that this concern may also enter the producing business, but this step has not been decided upon.

Large Photo Play House Planned for Lexington

Tentative plans for opening in Lexington another big motion picture theatre here have been practically completed. Louisvile and Indianapolis motion picture theatre men and John D. Maguire, of that city, are promoting the enterprise which will be located in the Maguire Building at the northwest corner of Main street and Broadway. A long lease has been taken on the building which is just now being remodeled with the intention of making it the most attractive movie house in the State, outside of Louisville. Plans for the complete remodeling of the building will be prepared by B. X. Murphy & Bro., Louisville architects.

One of the novel ideas to be incorporated in the new motion picture theatre is the doing away with stationary seats and installing round tables on the main floor around which four chairs will be arranged so that patrons of the house may enjoy a lunch or fountain drinks while witnessing the performance. It is stated that houses with this feature are popular in New York and Paris and it is the intention to copy the idea as carried out in these cities.

Theatres Here and There

Edward J. Buttermore, of Scottsdale, Penn., has assumed the management of both the Olympic and the New Empire motion picture theatres in Connellsville, Pa. Mr. Buttermore was particularly successful with the theatrical and moving picture ventures in Scottsdale and brings to his new position the fruits of 10 years' experience.

The fronts of both the Pittsburgh street houses are being remodeled and when this work is completed they will compare with any in town.

Mr. Buttermore is negotiating for exclusive rights to some of the best films produced.

A new motion picture theatre, embodying in architectural design, features entirely original in the South, is to be opened at 1501 Elm street, Dallas, Tex., about the latter part of January. P. G. Cameron has secured a long lease on the property which is owned by the Drake estate, and will expend between $20,000 and $25,000 in improvements. The location is just east of Akard street, on the south side of Elm, and Architect I. A. Walker has already completed the plans.

The entire dimensions of the theatre will be about 25 x 100 feet, and it will have a seating capacity of 400 or more.

Nicholas Carries has leased a moving picture theatre in Ossining, N. Y. Mr. Carries has taken possession of the picture house. The theatre is one of the largest in Ossining and seats near 1,000 people. The lease is to run for five years. Mr. Carries owns a chain of shoe shining parlors in Beacon, Newburgh and Poughkeepsie.

Hagel Bros. are making progress on the new McClintick Theatre they are erecting in the 3100 block South Adams street, Peoria, Ill. It will be strictly modern and up-to-date in every way.

Films Arrive Before Theatre Is Finished

In order to have the building completed by the opening of the Exposition, a night shift of eighteen men is working on the construction of the new Cabrillo Theatre, San Diego, Cal. Manager R. E. Hicks, of the Plaza Company, which will control the Cabrillo, had intended having the theatre in operation November 1, but the delay in construction prevented him doing so. The equipment for the Cabrillo and even the films to be shown have been arriving daily, Hicks having made complete arrangements for the opening. The films have been returned, but the electrical apparatus, photoplayer, seats, and ventilation system are now stored ready for use as soon as the building is completed.

Day and night shifts will be employed and work pushed until the theatre is ready for occupancy.

The name of the Star theatre, Bangor, Me., is to be changed to the Park Theatre, under its new management, The Bangor Amusement Co., Stephen Bogrett, local director. Alterations and improvements are now in progress and the house will be opened about January 1 with high class photo-productions. Milford, Mass., is to have another moving picture place in the upper story of the new $10,000 block which G. Iadale is erecting on East Main street, and for which Architect Frank Hughes drew the plans.
There is to be a large ball in the building, and it will be fitted for another home for the films according to present plans.

The new Franklin Park Theatre, Blue Hill avenue, at the junction of Columbia road, Boston, Mass., was opened last week. The house has a seating capacity of nearly 2,000, including four boxes.

The interior decorations are of a soft colonial gray and gold, with panelings of tapestry rose, with a decorated ceiling in ivory white and gold, with classic moldings.

The opening attraction was Mary Pickford in "Behind the Scenes." There were other Paramount films with the "Famous Players" appearing and a bill of vaudeville. Recitals on a large organ was another pleasing feature of the entertainment.

There will be performances afternoon and evening, with a change of bill twice a week. Sunday evenings there will be a special program.

Theatres in the South and West

Arrangements are being made for improvements to the Elm Theatre, Greensboro, N. C., which is under the direction of Mr. Wilkerson, manager of the Piedmont Theatre. Direct current will be furnished and an expensive curtain installed for the showing of the films which will enable the management to show the finest pictures made.

The new Metropolitan motion picture house in Eau Claire, Wis., was opened recently. The theatre is in the Metropolitan building and is fully equipped as an up-to-date film house.

The entrance is attractive in maroon stucco with white ornamental designs. The interior walls are in delicate tints of old rose. The seats and other furnishings are all new and complete.

A new motion picture play-house in Charlotte, N. C., has just been opened by J. J. Richards, a former resident of Charlotte, who has been making his home in San Francisco for the past two years. Mr. Richards returned to Charlotte some weeks ago and began at once plans for engaging suitable quarters for the picture house.

He has secured the space in the Central Hotel building formerly occupied by Graham's and being used for a display of Oriental rugs. It ranks with any in the city for convenience and size and the manager proposes to make of it a first-class amusement place.

Sales and Openings

The Ideal Theatre, located on Eighth avenue, between Twelfth and Thirteenth streets, Altoona, Pa., and one of the city's leading moving picture houses, has been sold by Edward Young, the real estate dealer, who first started it, to C. L. Koeler of Altoona, owner of a moving picture theatre at Hollidaysburg and one in Pittsburgh.

The new owner will take immediate charge.

A new moving picture theatre, the Duchess, has been opened in Warren, Ohio. It compares favorably in size with the largest in Youngstown, and is notable for its decorations and furnishings.

These were in charge of Samuel W. Rice and associates of Youngstown.

T. W. Smith has bought out the moving picture show business of A. Z. Danes in Danville, Ill., and has installed a new electric machine. The show is now in operation.

William Bosse, who has announced his intention of converting his store building at 20 Mechanic street, Spencer, Mass., into a moving picture theatre, received a visit from the state inspector of buildings Tuesday. The plans for the theatre, drawn by R. B. Stone & Co., were approved. Mr. Bosse says the seating capacity will reach about 275.

An ornamental front with lobby will be constructed and the floor dropped down at angle. He expects to commence work immediately.

Big House in Jacksonville

A building permit has been secured by the Southern Investment and Amusement Company for the construction of a $60,000 theatre in Jacksonville, Fla. The new playhouse will be located on the south side of Adams street between Main and Laura streets.

The company hopes to make this the finest motion picture house in this section of the country but the plans are drawn so that the theatre can be converted into a vaudeville house within twelve hours.

The north side of the building, fronting Adams street, will be two stories high. The lower floor will be divided into stores and the upper floor will contain offices. The entire building will be 102 feet by 101 feet. The theatre proper will be 70 feet wide by 101 feet long and the house will seat 1,200 people, 800 on the lower floor and 400 in the balcony.

The stage will be at the east end of the building. It is to be constructed on a large scale with asbestos curtain and dressing rooms. The modern plans for heating and ventilation will be installed. The Jacksonville Construction Company has the contract for the erection of the new theatre. Work has already begun and will be rushed to completion as fast as possible.

Latest changes in Detroit theatres are the appointment of Sam Johnson as assistant manager of the New Empire, and W. G. Kaliska, as manager of the Royal and Casino theatres. Mr. Johnson has been operator at the Empire for over a year, while Mr. Kaliska comes to Detroit from Buffalo, N. Y., where he has been manager of the Allendale Theatre for nearly a year.

New Arbor, Detroit, In Operation

The new Arbor Theatre, at Woodward and Harper avenues, Detroit, Mich., opened Saturday afternoon, December 12. The theatre will accommodate 400 people, and is 40 by 75 feet in size. Alvan D. Hirsch is the proprietor, who is acting as manager. He plans to give his patrons a change of program every day, with features at least twice a week. The theatre has been attractively decorated in arbor style. On the stage is a Masterlite screen, and in the operating room a Powers 6A machine. Matinees will be given on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays, and every evening.

This is Mr. Hirsch's first venture in the moving picture industry. He is an attorney by profession, and an enthusiast about the "movie" business.

Thomas Peterson will open a new moving picture theatre in Scottsville, Mich., about December 25.

The Vinewood Theatre, formerly owned by Barry & Dietz, real estate dealers, Detroit, Mich., has been transferred to Mrs. Fanny Rodger. The theatre is located on Michigan avenue, near Winewood avenue.

A new theatre is being built at 235 Michigan avenue, Detroit, Mich., which will be ready for holiday time. It is owned by Lathan Bros.

The theatres owned by John H. Kunsky in Detroit, Mich., and formerly operated under the style of the Casino Amusement Company are now operating under the name of John H. Kunsky, Inc. The list comprises the Casino, Royal, Liberty, Empress, Washington, Garden, Columbia and Alhambra.

The Academy of Music, Saginaw, Mich., starting December 20, is playing pictures. Only big features will be shown. New apparatus has been installed in the operating room, which is separated from the remainder of the theatre by a brick wall. Under the co-operation plan admissions to the Academy is ten cents, and with each ticket a coupon is given which is good for 10 cents at the Jeffers (also owned by Mr. Ruscoe) or for an admission to the Bijou. With each ticket purchased at the Jeffers and Bijou will be given a coupon worth five cents at the Academy for the picture shows.

New theatres to open in Detroit, Mich., the current month are the Virginia Park, the Maxine, the Rosedale, the William Penn, the Asian and 235 Michigan avenue.

The Imperial Theatre in Beaver avenue, North Side, Pittsburgh, has changed hands. It was bought by Carle Carlton, owner of several other theatres in this section. The new owner of the theatre will in the future use nothing but feature films. At present he is using Paramount service.

Shelbyville, Ind., soon will have a new motion picture theatre. A two-story brick structure to cost $10,000 will be erected by the Dorsey heirs and will be leased for ten years by William C. Meloy.

The new motion picture theatre being constructed on Maryland avenue, near Bird street, Wilmington, Del., has been named the "Polonia." The new building is being erected by a number of influential Polish residents of that section and it is expected to open the place by Christmas.

F. E. Millkin has received a building permit to erect a $10,000 picture house at the corner of Center street and Wilson avenue, Youngstown, Ohio. The building now on this site will be remodeled. The new theatre will be modern in every way and the front vestibule will be finished in an elaborate way with a marquee over the sidewalk. It will be built strictly in accord with the state code and the building code of Youngstown. The show house will be constructed of brick.

Bids have been submitted on plans for the proposed business block and moving picture theatre to be built on Dixwell avenue, near Webster street, New Haven, Conn., for Daniel P. Brown, 17 Hillhouse avenue. It is expected that the contract will be let at once. The structure will be 32 x 141 feet, one-story high, of brick with a gravel roof. It will be arranged for two stores and a theatre in the rear, having a seating capacity of 550.

Using Judgment in Playing to Pictures

By E. A. Ahern

A FEW weeks ago I visited one of our large cities of the west, attending nearly all of the picture theatres.

My intentions were to learn what kind of music they used in the large cities, and especially in the up-to-date picture theatres.

Right now I want to say I was greatly disappointed, not with the music itself, but the way it was rendered as an accompaniment for the pictures.

The first house I visited is one of the largest in the west and employs an orchestra of eighteen pieces and a pipe organ.

They were showing a two reel Selig comedy, "A Moving Picture Cowboy." It was lively all the way through.

The organist was playing some gavotte and later on a classic selection.

I was so taken up with the organ that I forgot what the comedy was about.

The music was great, but one either had to listen to the music or forget it, and look at the pictures. For neither was connected.

Used "Heavy Overture"

The next picture was a Biograph. The orchestra played for this picture, using a heavy overture.

Now I have read a great deal about orchestras that end a selection by having the drummer use a crash cymbal, but this was the first one I have ever heard, and this orchestra did this very thing.

The picture was very pathetic, showing the death of a sweetheart and then the body in the coffin.

Just when the mourners gathered around the corpse the music stopped with the loud, brassy tone. When this happened I lost my admiration for that orchestra. The picture lasted about five minutes before the end of the reel. I sat and waited for some music that would help bring out the solemnity of the picture, but the musicians had come to the end of the music, therefore I had to wait for another picture to be thrown on the screen.

Lack of Judgment

I did not go to that theatre to hear anything like this. A person can hear "music" of that kind in any theatre where there is an electric piano.

What I expected to hear was music that was in keeping with the picture, but, as I said, I was greatly disappointed.

If they had played the overture for the comedy and the organ for the pathetic picture, the music would have been more in keeping with the pictures.

I dropped into the same theatre the next day to see "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

In all of the five reels there was not one southern melody played.

The pipe organ was the only instrument used, as the orchestra only played from 2 o'clock on.

To tell the truth I do not know why the organist did not use some southern music for this picture; nearly anyone that had an idea of music would have done so. This party played "Humoresque" and music of that nature; so you can readily see how it fitted the picture.

The next house I went to was a five cent theatre that employed a small sized band. They actually played so loud that I saw one reel through and then left.

There is another theatre like the first that has a pipe organ only. The picture being shown was supposed to have been taken on a South Sea Island among the cannibals. The "engineer" at the organ had put on the "Paw and Peasant" roll. It was another case of poor judgment; also poor advertising for the house.

Music No Help to Picture

Now, mind you, all these were first class houses and the people employed in the orchestras were musicians in every sense of the word. I am not criticizing in any way these people in regards to their playing. I am just giving you an idea of the fitness of the music to the picture.

I also attended the smaller theatres, hoping to find some one that actually played for the pictures. Out of the eight or nine shows I visited there was not one where the music was in any way a help to the picture.

There is one thing I wish to mention. I did not hear a good "rag" or a popular air in any of the houses. The only place I did enjoy the music was at a vaudeville house.

Do not infer that I do not appreciate the other class of music, for I do. But let us have it where it belongs. I was told by a party in that city that none of the orchestra leaders ever attempted to play a popular song hit. I do not believe it would hurt any musician's reputation to just play one during a show. Give the patrons a little variety. I think it would be just as much appreciated as heavy "music."

If the manager of a house sees fit to put on a slap stick comedy, I think a little snappy music would not hurt the house's standing. This is where a number of musicians are mistaken about the "rag" music. If a picture has lots of "go" in it, what is the use of holding back the action with slow music.

Classics Not Wanted

They would probably say: "Let's have some selection from Wagner or Chopin played for the picture." All right; the orchestra I was just speaking about played on this order, yet these very same people would be dissatisfied without knowing why.

There is only one way I can see how musicians can get around this proposition, and that is to play music that has the atmosphere. Why should one play the "Overture Raymond" for a western picture, or "William Tell" for a southern story.

Take, for instance, "Uncle Tom's Cabin." If the organist had played "My Old Kentucky Home" it would have been more pleasing to the ear than the "Humoresque" even though it is not considered as great a piece of music. Difficult music does not always leave as good an impression on the patrons as simple melodies.

To illustrate: The other evening I showed "Strongheart." For the last part of the last reel I played the "Sun Dance" on the organ (an old parlor organ) while the Indian comes in to take Strongheart back to the reservation.

This may seem queer Indian music on an organ. I did try to get the tom-tom effect with the left hand, but just held down the chord. The melody was weird and at the same time pathetic. I had the tremolo stop out, which also made it more solemn and played very adagio.

This picture was the talk of the town for a couple of days afterward. Everyone person that saw it was enthusiastic over it. Why? Because I played it masterly! No. It was because the music was in keeping with the picture, nothing but a simple Indian dance. But it did the work.

Make your audience feel as though they were actually on the ground where the picture was taken, but you cannot do it unless you play this kind of music. If you have a simple story to help unfold the plot use simple music.
New Theatres in the Gulf States

E. M. Tucker has opened a new theatre on South Collins street, Plant City, Fla., in one of the new buildings lately completed, and has installed a $3,000 Seeburg player piano. The name of the new picture show will be selected by the public, in a voting contest.

The Pelkin theatre at 813 East Washington street, Springfield, III., was opened to the public a few days ago. The theatre is just completed and is one of the most beautiful in central Illinois. L. C. Silver, an experienced showman, will manage the house.

The building permit for the erection of Montgomery's new theatre, the Arcade, on Adams street, Jacksonville, Fla., was issued, placing the value of the structure at $60,000. When completed it is said that the theatre will be one of the handsomest in the South.

The Jacksonville Contracting Company is erecting the building for the Southern Amusement and Investment Company, and already the ground has been cleared.

A new motion picture theatre is under way in Geneva, N. Y., on which it is proposed to spend $50,000. Leon Lempert, of Rochester, is preparing the plans. It is said the theatre will be managed by E. D. DeGraff, of Scranton, who owns a chain of picture theatres. The house will have a seating capacity of 1,500.

New Theatre Planned in Austin, Texas

The property at 713 Congress avenue, Austin, Texas, is to be the site of a modern theatre. The plans will be ready and the contract let in time to start work on the theatre the latter part of December or the first of January.

The H. & M. Amusement Company, of Brockton, Mass., is a new corporation formed for the purpose of public amusements in the state. A new moving picture house was opened Saturday in Worcester under the auspices of the company. President John W. Huff and the directors, M. R. Bassett and Russell G. Ryder, say they may open a moving picture house in this city during the winter.

At the expiration of the contract December 1, with Prof. A. W. Allen, the motion picture show which has been conducted by him in the Perley Hall, Enosburg Falls, Vt., for some time, was taken over by J. A. Brownlie and T. A. Vincent.

S. N. Robertson has sold his moving picture theatre at Lancaster, N. H., to his uncle, William Robertson, and has gone to Lodi, Wis.

Fire Delays Marketing of Edison Projection Machine

It is fortunate that the disastrous fire at the Edison plant did not destroy the negatives and prints of the coming releases. However, there is another loss which will be felt by the trade in general in the form of complete destruction of the manufacturing plant where the new projection machine was being built.

It was intended that this should be put on the market within a short time, but L. C. McChesney, of the Edison Company, makes the statement that it will not be three months anyway before this machine is available for distribution, as it will be necessary to make new dies and reconstruct the other manufacturing equipment.

Howell-Ryder Company of Chicago Moves

The Howell-Ryder Company, formerly known as the Howell Sales Company, have moved to larger offices, Suite 711, in the First National Bank Building, Chicago. This year they intend to carry cameras and full studio equipment, in addition to projection machines and accessories for the operating booth, and will make a specialty of giving expert advice upon all subjects of projection.

Both F. W. Howell and C. W. Ryder are well known in motion picture circles, having been identified with the industry in this section of the country for a great many years.

Fire Destroys Peninsula Theatre, Frisco

A DISASTROUS fire occurred in the building occupied by the Peninsula Theatre on Mission street, San Francisco, last week, resulting in almost a total loss to both structure and contents. The building was owned by T. Strum and the theatre was conducted by the manager of Chas. Harding. It has not been decided as yet whether the theatre will be rebuilt or not.

Have you seen a copy of this week’s Universal Weekly?—

We want every live Exhibitor in America to see this week’s edition of the Universal Weekly which contains the most remarkable poster ever conceived and executed by The Morgan Lithograph Co. of Cleveland, Ohio. This poster in question is a 24 sheet stand made especially for The Universal Film Manufacturing Co., of 1600 Broadway, New York. This great poster has already been plastered all over the boards in the City of New York and thousands of people are staring at in wonder and amazement. To quote one Exhibitor who saw this poster the other day—he says—“Never saw a poster like it in all my life.”

Talk about a crazy quilt design—talk about colors—Well, Gentlemen, the one and only way in the world to appreciate what a smash this marvellous poster is—is to send to The Morgan Lithograph Co., Cleveland, Ohio, for a sample. If it doesn’t make you stare in wonder, then we are mighty poor dopesters. When we saw this poster completed we believed that the Universal Film Mfg. Co. would ask us if we were “plum crazy,”—but when it was put on the billboards and riveted the attention of hundreds of thousands of people—and caused no end of comment—we knew we had put out a tremendous winner.

This is the kind of a poster that has the genuine “punch” in it. It will actually kill any other poster within a half a block of it. It is so absolutely unique in coloring—in design—and idea and general character as to make any other 24 sheet stand look silly alongside of it. It is NOT the usual type of poster. You may call it allegorical, ancient—modern—advanced, or anything you fancy—yet it stands as the biggest smash we have ever known. The Morgan Lithograph Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, conceived and executed this poster. It is the talk of the country. Write us and we will send you a sample; also we will tell you more about this poster question. It means much to you. Write The Morgan Lithograph Co., Cleveland, Ohio.
